Gracious?" exclaimed an old lady in front of the elephant yard in Central Park. "Can it be possible that this is the creature my son George spends so much money to see every Saturday night?"—Philadelphia Times.

"I tell you, Susie, that I will commit suicide if you won't have me!" "Well, Thomas, as soon as you have given me that proof of your affection I will believe that you love me."—Buffalo Commercial Advertiser.

She—"Who is oo?" He—"Oors." She—"Forever, and ever and ever?" He—"Ess, I is." She—"Has oo dot five dollars for oor baby, dear?" He—"Thunder! no, Melinda, Think I'm make of money, don't you?" —Stray.

"Who was the wisest man?" asked the Sundy-school teacher. "Solomon," promptly replied a little girl. "And who was the holiest?" "Moses." "Moses! What makes you think so?" "Because, I often hear papa speaking of 'Holy Moses.'"

Would-be Customer—"Will you trust me for a few things for a few days?" Grocer—"Come around in a couple of days and I will." Would-be Customer—"But I will have the money then." Grocer—"Then is when I would trust you."—The Idea.

Three of the admirers of a pretty Burlington girl called on her the same evening, and as she answered the bell in person for the fourth call she took the opportunity of hanging a placard on the door bell: "This is my busy night."—Burlington Free Press.

"I understand that Col. Blair is very wealthy!" Well, he's worth about one hundred thousand dollars." "How did he make it?" "He made it out of coal oil." "Indeed!" Yes, his wife lit the fire with kerosene, and he got all the money."—Lincoln Journal.

Chumley—"Yes, Clara is certainly a lovely girl. I used to be very soft on her, Dumley. In fact, I think I would have married her but for the determined opposition of the family." Dumley—"Her father, I suppose?" Chumley—"No; herself."—San Francisco Examiner.

The Unlucky Child of Culture. Mrs. Fanuel Hall (of Boston)—"Dear me, John, I don't know what to do to cure our Erasmus from running away and going fishing on Sunday." Mr. F. H.—"Take away his spectacles every Saturday night; then he can't see to dig bait."—Life.

It was his first visit to the city. As he stood on the curbstone shaking his sides with laughter he was accosted by one of New Haven's finest. "What's the fun, stranger?" "Fun? Can you see it? M.—"She's bald, too, except when she goes out." P.—"Child at home, probably?" B. M.—"Only a month old. Bald, too." P.—"You keep a pet dog, maybe." B. M.—"We do, but it's a hairless dog." P. (desperately) "Can't I sell you a fly trap, sir." —Chicago Tribune.

DO NOT FRET.

"Every one of these doors creaks so horribly that it almost sets me wild," exclaimed a tired housekeeper who was trying to rest a little after the labors of a wearisome day. Now this was not the first, perhaps it was the twentieth time she had made the same or a similar remark, about the creaking of the doors, when with the aid of a bottle of oil and a feather, she might have made them swing noiselessly, and saved herself all the annoyance she had suffered.

It is a great deal easier to make suggestions than to follow them; but it seems to me that the "golden rule" for housekeepers might be this: "If anything goes wrong for which there is a remedy, apply it as soon as possible; if there is absolutely no remedy do not fret but make the best of it."

I believe that often, it is not the work that makes us feel so thoroughly weary at the end of the week, as worrying over it. I remember fretting a good deal over some Thanksgiving pies, complaining that I always spoiled them by putting in too much of one thing or another, when my sister quietly remarked that perhaps I put too much anxiety into them. I saw the point, and resolved henceforth to do the best I could with my cooking and to worry less over results. Of course I had afterwards better success and far more peace of mind.

There are days in the experience of every housekeeper when everything seems determined to go wrong, and a perfect avalanche of little troubles and perplexities seem to overwhelm one. Then indeed is she that ruled her spirit "better than he that taketh a city."

But how often at the close of the day have we looked back and seen all that came right at last in spite of our forebodings, and we have wished so much that we could have been self-controlled and sweet-tempered through it all.

It is so natural to magnify little troubles instead of remembering that they are not worth fretting about. If at breakfast the biscuit are a little too yellow, and the steak a trifle overdone, in almost every case no one will be troubled about it if you are not.

If the coffee is not just exactly right, no one will notice it unless you call attention to it by some disparaging remark. Especially should we guard against a habit of fretting because of the discomfort it causes those about us, and the bad influence it has upon them. If the housekeeper frets, the children do the same, and the servants also, for nothing is more contagious, and we have anything but a happy household. However badly things may go, nothing is gained by worrying over them, and if we can't be always bright and cheerful, we can at least endure patiently till the storm passes over and the sunshine returns, as it surely will in due time.—Marion Reyburne in Good Housekeeping.

THE BEST RULE FOR CORN-BREAD.

Katherine Armstrong, the expert teacher of cookery, declares that the following rule for corn-bred is the best a-going: "We use the new kind of corn meal, fine as flour, yellow as gold, called the "new process corn-meal." It cooks most deliciously, and is very superior to the coarse material some people yet use for corn-bread. It is the best thing of the kind, and it is especially important to get the best of anything destined for the human stomach. First, measure into a stirring bowl one cup of corn-meal and two cups of sifted flour. Into these rub one tea-spoonful of salt, nearly one cup of granulated sugar, one spoonful of lard or butter, and two tea-spoonfuls of Royal baking powder. Now into a quart bowl put the white of two eggs, into another bowl the yolks of the same. Beat the yolks well and add to them a cup of milk; stir together and then add into the other mixed ingredients, adding as much milk as is required to make a thin batter. Now, with the egg beater, bring the whites to a stiff froth, and add to the rest, beat thoroughly and it is ready for a well-buttered square tin 8 by 12 inches. It takes nearly an hour to bake this corn-bread, so it is the first thing to be made, and will be the last thing to bring to the table. Corn meal swells greatly by cooking, and unless the batter is quite thin the result will not be satisfactory. It is as "handsome as pound cake." Do not forget to have a plate of bread on the table, as many do not eat warm breads, and remember a neat plate of butter is more appetizing than one in untidy shape.

Miss Perley (on an ocean steamer)—"I think papa is doing splendidly now, don't you, mamma?" Mrs. Perley—"He is, my dear. Since we got him away from the horrid city he is entirely temperate, and seems to to take an interest in everything about him. It was only just now that I heard him ask the captain if he wouldn't help him splice the main brace.—Time.

TRUE ECONOMY. — It is true economy to buy Hood's Sarsaparilla, for 100 Doses for One Dollar," is original with and true only of this popular medicine. If you wish to prove this, buy a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla and measure its contents. You will find it to hold 100 teaspoonfuls. Now read the directions, and you will find that the average dose for persons of different ages is less than one teaspoonful. This is certainly conclusive and unanswerable evidence of the peculiar strength and economy of Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"I took Hood's Sarsaparilla for loss of appetite, dyspepsia, and general languor. It did me a vast amount of good, and I have no hesitancy in recommending it."— J. W. Willeford, Quincy, Ill.

"I have been troubled by scrofulous affection all my life. It is one of the marked recollections of my boyhood days, and for several years has rendered me unable to labor much. I think Hood's Sarsaparilla, which I have been using at intervals for ten years, is the best thing I have ever taken. I am now 60, and my general health seems better than ever.—H. D. Abbott, Warren, N. H.

COOL WEATHER

Is here, and with it comes the necessity for warmer wearing apparel. The problem of economy generally occupies the mind of a large majority of humanity. How often we hear the question, "Where shall we find the best for the least money?" Many would reply where the lowest prices are quoted. Cheapening the quality cheapens the price. Don't be too anxious to buy where lowest prices are advertised. We trust to the merits of our Clothing and fair prices for patronage.

AT first we did not intend to quote prices, but thinking possibly some of Palmer's people were thinking of buying a new suit this fall, a brief price list might not be amiss. So we decided to call attention to the manner in which our clothing is made, and the popular prices attached to it in plain figures, so "He who runs, may read." We hardly know where to commence, as our tables are loaded with bargains. But here goes

200 SACK SUITS

From Putnam, Woodvale, Mechanicsville and Broad Brook Woolens. All wool, heavy-weight finished, with extra heavy linings. Chamois watch pockets, patent buttons that never come off. Double seams that never rip, because they are sewed with silk. Every detail of manufacture, simply perfect. Although these suits are worth $16, we shall offer them for $12.00, $12.00,

250 SUITS FROM BEST WOOLENS

Produced in America, finished with the same thoroughness, with a number of extra good qualities added, worth at least $20. Our price a popular one, $16.00. $16.00.

PALMER men are somewhat given to paying exorbitant prices for custom clothing. We wish they would inspect what we offer for extra fine suits, which are lined throughout with heavy satin and made from Hockanum, Eddy, Globe and Empire Worsted. Now these fine goods good enough for these elegant suits. We sometimes show these fine goods to our city tailors, and they are surprised at the quality and beauty of make, and most of all the low price. "How can you sell at such reasonable figures?" is their usual exclamation. We have just closed

1500 PAIRS OF PANTALOONS AT A PRICE

And propose to give our patrons a benefit by selling them at

50c. a pair Less than cost of manufacture. 50c. a pair

$2.50 and $3.00 are the prevailing prices for $4.00 and $5.00 Pantaloons, as long as this extensive purchase shall last.

REMEMBER

We are satisfied with only the best, and are not very far from the depot, on the east side, 325 Main street, corner of Bridge street.

The Housemaid's Art.

The fabric soiled by daily wear,
Grows clean within the housemaid's hand;
Each mark of time she takes with care,
From seam and gusset, hem and band.

But still the stubborn stains appear,
When all her handiwork is done;
But says, "For this I need not fear,
I've but to place it in the sun."

With faith she spreads it wide, and lo!
The chemistry of golden beam
Doth white this fabric as the snow,
And make it pure as angels' dream.

"But," says the housemaid in her pride,
"Unless my work had been well done,
The unclean fabric had but dried,
And never whitened in the sun."

So with our lives—'tis ours to keep Them clean of act and thought impure,
With finest brush of art to sweep
The very dust from off the floor.

And lo! the Sun of Righteousness
Into our cleansed souls will stream,
To brighten, beautify and bless,
And whiten into our purest dream.

THE AVENGER.

"They tell me, Molly," said Henry Russell to his beautiful cousin, as they strolled through the flower garden at Elm Grove one bright morning in June—"they tell me that young Andrew Collins is attentive to Nelly Ridley."

"Yes; and I certainly wish him success, for my sweet little Nelly deserves a good match, and Andrew is said, with more reason than is usual in such cases, to be the paragon of the neighborhood."

"You surely do not think such a thing as their engagement possible?"

"And why not, cousin mine? Have you any previous claims to urge upon her heart?"

"By no means. But Nelly is a girl, I imagine, who would marry only for love, and, alas! she has no heart to bestow."

"Oh, you allude to her affair with Reginald Graham?"

"To be sure I do."

"And do you hold that because a woman has been jilted by a heartless knave she may not love a true man?"

"I hold, fair cousin, that in a sincere bosom the affections once blighted and crushed are not so easily renewed. Nor would an honorable mind like Nelly's exchange a broken heart for a loyal and true one."

"I deny your premises, to-wit, that Nelly's affections are blighted or that her heart is broken."

"Why, surely, she loved Graham?"

"Yes, while she found him all that her fancy had painted."

"And would you have her love again ere one brief year has thrown oblivion over her ill-fated passion? Is such the constancy of woman's heart?"

"Come, no slander upon woman's constancy. I mean that because Nelly found her idol of clay it is no reason why the sentiment of affection, which is one of the holiest instincts of our nature, should be destroyed forever in her breast."

"Then you believe in second love?"

"Your question is not altogether a fair one. I am certainly an advocate of constancy, and there is something very sacred to me even in the memory of a pure and holy affection which has brightened our happier days and, long cherished, has entwined itself with our every sympathy until it grew and became a part of us."

"Then you would have success the criterion of constancy. Why, Molly, you would spoil the prettiest romances that were ever written or acted by such a cold, calculating sentiment."

"And those same romances have spoiled the happiness of many an honest heart capable of blessing others and enjoying itself the choicest blessings of life in its appointed sphere of conjugal and domestic affection. Out upon that false sentiment which condemns a pure and noble heart, with its untold treasures of rich affection and sympathies, to pine in sickly dalliance with despair because one error of judgment or a freak of fancy has sent its devotions to an unworthy object."

"But does not your doctrine, fair cousin, tend to impair that faith in the constancy of love which gives it ideal charms and elevates it into a worship?"

"On the contrary, it rather vindicates the sentiments as too pure and holy to suffer from treachery and deceit; of too divine and immaculate a nature to perish when baffled, like baser passions."

"You argue well, Molly, but yet there is a charm in changeless love that holds the imagination captive."

"And did I speak of true love as changeable, Henry? I only contended against the despotic rule of what I think a false sentiment. The constancy of mutual love is beautiful and holy in my eyes, and where our affections have met a full response in the sympathies of a congenial heart, and especially where we have been blessed with its long companionship, I hold a second love as great a sacrilege as yourself, though I will deny that it may exist."

"Well, well, my sweet cousin, you and I will not quarrel about love nor pretty Nelly Ridley either, for whom I wish a bright and happy fate. But see, John has brought the horses round. Shall we take our gallop, as usual? I promise not to cast one wistful glance at Nelly Ridley's cottage as we pass," said Henry, with a playful emphasis.

"Out upon you, Mr. Impudence!" replied his cousin, blushing slightly and tapping him with her whip, for she was equipped for the ride. "What wonderful magic, think you, there lies in your glances?"

Leaving the cousins to their morning ride and to renew their edifying discussion if they please we will look into as lovely a little cottage as ever was the abode of innocence, peace and happiness.

Mark Ridley was a scholar and somewhat of a dreamer, yet withal a very deep philosopher. The vanities of the world he despised, while he cherished with assiduous care those gentle sentiments, true feelings and noble sympathies which minister to the peace and happiness of the heart far more surely than the false excitement of pleasure and ambition. In early life he had married happily, prospered in the world and enjoyed those flattering promises of the future with which fortune so often tempts us to essay the perilous "heights where Fame's proud temple lies," but reverses and disappointments soon taught him their lesson.

The loss of fortune and the ill-health of his beloved companion induced him to retire, not a sour misanthrope, but a sobered philosopher, from the bustle and worry of the world. Husbanding his remaining resources he purchased the quiet cottage where he now resided and where he had enjoyed years of supreme bliss with his adored wife, who faded gently and quietly from his side, like a cherished flower, exhaling the fragrance of her long and devoted love to surround him in the gentle affections of an only and most beautiful daughter.

In Nelly he beheld—each lineament and feature complete—the counterpart of her whose memory he adored, and for whose daughter he was content to live on that he might guard and shield her youth from care, and pluck, as far as might be, the thorns of disappointment and sorrow from her future pathway.

And now, as he sat at the open casement through which the morning air came, apparently intent on his book, his eye wandered ever and anon from the bright flowers without to the brighter being within who glided noislessly about the room, occupied with her domestic affairs and unconscious of the thoughtful attention which was bestowed upon her.

It was not without uneasiness that Mark Ridley noticed an air of preoccupation and almost sadness in his sweet daughter, and a keen pang shot through his heart as he heard the half-smothered sigh which escaped her.

"Come here, Nelly," said he, "and see how your favorite rose-tree has revived from last night's frost."

Awakening from the rather unpleasant reverie which had been gradually stealing over her with scarce an effort, Nelly dispelled the shadows from her brow and, her face beaming with affection, placed herself on a low stool at her father's feet.

"Oh, how beautiful!" she exclaimed. "I did not think my poor rose-bush would bloom again this summer."

"Blight or bloom upon the flower or the human heart are His who ever gently deals with the tenderest," said the old man, reverently.

"I feel it, my father," answered his daughter, gazing fondly in his face with tearful eyes, blue as the violets whose perfume they enjoyed.

"And yet, Nelly, you are sad. Are you sure there is no drop of bitterness left in your young heart to rankle hereafter?"

"Quite sure, dear father, although some sadness is natural to the heart which finds its ideal destroyed, and yet I think no more of him."

"Say not its ideal destroyed, but its idol—a false one, my child. That mental standard of perfection which we set up as the model of all that is worthy and noble in human character, and which we call our ideal, is formed rather by our own sentiments and feelings than from any experience or example of human nature which is before us. It is the very foundation of all our respect or admiration for our fellow-beings—the key to love and friendship—and sad is the heart whose ideal is destroyed! But, my dear Nelly," continued the fond parent, more playfully, "if not of him—the base, the worthless—of whom was my daughter thinking so pensively, almost sadly?"

There was perfect confidence between the father and daughter, yet the eyes of Nelly drooped an instant and the rich color suffused her face—such is the sensibility of a pure young heart to the exposure of its feelings even to the eye of affection.

"Nay, I did not mean to startle or grieve you, but you cannot suppose, my own darling, that in aught which touches your happiness my eyes slumber. There! that blush has answered me, and I may give Andrew Collins a favorable answer!" said Mark Ridley, bending to caress the beautiful head that rested on his knee.

At this moment the sound of a horse's feet was heard in the avenue that led from the high road and the bark of Nelly's little spaniel, who was basking in the sunshine on the front veranda, announced early visitors.

"Come, my love, there is your friend Molly. I saw her pass in company with her cousin half an hour since and doubtless she is coming to pay you a morning call. Go to your chamber and smooth down those troubled thoughts while I receive them."

They were received with a dignified courtesy and kind welcome by Mark Ridley, which Henry afterwards declared to exhibit the most distinguished demeanor he ever met with, and in a few minutes Nelly appeared, blooming as one of her own beautiful roses, to greet her friend and to receive Henry without the slightest embarrassment.

The invitation was given and after a glance at her father, who signified his approval, accepted by Nelly, and after spending an hour very pleasantly the cousins took their departure.

In the evening Andrew Collins came, conferred a few moments with Mark Ridley in his library and then in company with him joined Nelly in the parlor, the happiest of men. The old man with his book soon drew off to his corner and left the young lovers to that elysium which they who have once felt it know beggars all description.

CHAPTER II.

Reginald Graham was a young man of good birth, ample fortune and considerable intellect. Though proud and ambitious he possed courteous and affable manners, which won him more regard than his character really deserved and made him, where no occasion forced the display of a real nature, a universal favorite.

His form was even more attractive than his demeanor, for he possessed the highest order of masculine beauty. A broad and prominent forehead, somewhat narrower, however, at the temples than was consistent with perfect symmetry, around which curled in short, natural ringlets his rich and glossy brown hair; dark blue eyes of sparkling brilliancy, in which only the practiced regard of a physiognomist could have detected the wavering, vacilating glance which denoted fickleness of purpose; a mouth indicative of firmness as well as great sensibility, but the character of which also expressed great voluptuousness, especially in connection with his rather fleshy and projecting chin and a nose slightly aquile, with finely curved nostrils, made up a face unusually prepossessing.

Graham had been educated with high sentiments of honor, and would have reprobated deceit and treachery as soon as any one; but with many a great and noble quality he was beset with the weaknesses of pride and vanity and their almost inseparable concomitant changeableness of purpose: for where they demand a sacrifice strong must be the mind and firm the heart which refuses it.

Such was he who won the first regards of Nelly Ridley.

It was not vanity alone which made Reginald her admirer, or induced him to seek her heart. No one with a touch of gentle feeling at his heart could have witnessed unmoved her expanding beauties of mind and person. Nor was it the mere fascination of the eye, nor the graceful flatteries of his constant homage, which charmed Nelly; her esteem was won through her father's incautious praise; and although no formal engagement existed between them, yet their future union was talked of as a matter of course, not only by Nelly's father but by friends and acquaintances, and even the relations of Reginald, who, though not altogether satisfied with the match, offered no opposition.

The awakening of Nelly Ridley from her first dream of love was sad and bitter indeed; but less painful and enduring was the blight that fell upon her heart under the strengthening influence of her father's wise Christian philosophy, and gentle, soothing counsels.

The desertion of Reginald, like his wooing, was not so pointed as to leave him without a plausible defence of his conduct, and would not have afforded even the watchful father an excuse to tax him with his treachery, but for the occasion of some slight raillery on the part of his gay companions, to which, in a fit of pique and vanity, he replied, scornfully, "What! the old bookworm's rustic daughther? She is no bride for Reginald Graham!"

It is true he was ashamed of such unbecoming language almost as soon as he had uttered it; but if he repented, he could not forego the treacherous purpose at his heart. Another passion had taken possession of his soul; his vanity and his ambition had both been excited, and he was ready to sacrifice faith, and truth, and love—such as he was capable of feeling—upon their altar, even though he crushed the life out of that gentle heart which had entrusted its happiness to his keeping.

And what was the cause of this change? The arrival of Molly Hartford, a beauty, an heiress and a distinguished belle, at the mansion of her uncle, Colonel Hartford of Elm Grove.

Molly was an orphan, and had resided since the death of her parents with a guardian in the city; but, on the occasion of that gentleman and his family taking a foreign tour, she accepted the invitation of her uncle, Colonel Hartford, to make his house her home, as she did not wish to accompany them.

She was just of age, and there were, of course, no objections on the part of the former guardian, and turning over the immense estate he had managed honorably and well, and of which she appointed her uncle her agent, he resigned his charge.

Fame heralded the advent of the heiress, and among the most eager to lay his homage at her feet was Reginald Graham. His vanity had always led him to wish to be first among his companions, and he could not bear the thought that so brilliant a prize should fall to another.

Perhaps even his admiration for Nelly was not free from this governing sentiment, for she was certainly the belle of the the neighborhood before Molly Hartford came, and many still thought her title to that distinction unimpaired.

The two young ladies, however, instead of experiencing feelings of rivalship, became fast and affectionate friends.

From the time when Reginald made the ungenerous and ungentlemanly speech about Nelly, as if conscious that his own baseness was known to her, he ceased his usual visits, and the remark coming to the ears of Mark Ridley, the old man sought an interview, from which Graham would fain have shrunk if he dared.

The conduct of the father on that painful occasion was calm, dignified and open, while that of the recreant lover was full of prevarication and shuffling, though his language was plausible and respectful.

"Young man, you say there was no positive engagement between yourself and my daughter. This, perhaps, is true, but when you tell me you never sought her affection under the guise of love, that you never taught her to look upon you in any other light than that of a very dear friend, you utter a falsehood which your own conscience condemns."

"Most happy would I be, sir, to make any sacrifice which would convince you of my truth, or to contribute to your daughter's peace of mind, which I regret that one so worthless as I should have injured, however unintentionally," said Reginald, in a slight tone of mockery. "And as for the idle words I uttered——"

"Peace, sir, there's no sacrifice that would be accepted. My daughter would scorn your hand now as I do your character; and for myself I would sooner lay her young head in the grave than consign her to the arms of a villian, whose smooth brow and oily tongue conceals so base and lying a heart!"

"Sir!" exclaimed Graham, in a fierce passion, for the taunt stung him to the quick, "but for your age——"

"Peace, again I say, fool! It is not my age, but conscious guilt that paralyzes your heart. Yet go; I would not forget that I am a Christian as well as a father. Mark Ridley despises and forgives you, and his daughter will do the same."

Reginald Graham did not linger, and for a long time the bitterness of the interview, to which were truly added the pangs of conscience, wrung his heart.

It was at this period that she met Andrew Collins, and the mysterious growth of true love sprung at once in her heart, whose best affections seemed of late blighted and withered. It was long before Nelly would acknowledge to herself the interest he inspired, and she trembled at her own emotions as she asked herself the nature of that interest. Notwithstanding the precepts of her father, she shrank from what almost appeared the sacrilege of second love, and that so soon after the disappointment of her first choice.

But all her doubts were soon resolved, and when Andrew spoke in the genuine eloquence of true feeling the story of his devotion, how different seemed his language, how much more sincere and manly, than the strained compliments and sugared flatteries with which Reginald Graham had amused her young fancy!

And with the thought of him came a sinking of the heart she had never before felt.

Would Andrew Collins, so good and noble himself, be content to take her affections second-hand?

"No, no, Andrew!" she said, and tears almost choked her utterance. "You could not value a heart that had already loved and been scorned."

"Never, Nelly, did you truly love that base, unmanly wretch. Fear not; I know all. It was only your fancy which his facile address captivated; your heart was untouched, save with devotion for its own ideal, which, for a moment, he seemed to represent. Fear not, dear Nelly; be but mine, and you shall soon learn of me that you never truly loved him."

The lesson was a pleasant one, both to master and pupil, fulfilling the former's promise indeed.

And how sped the wooing of Reginald Graham? How prospered his suit to the fair Molly?

Unfortunately for him, the citadel of her heart had long since yielded to her cousin, Henry Russell, to whom, with the full approbation of their uncle, whose favorite and heir he was, she was already betrothed.

Still more unfortunately for Graham, even had she been "fancy free," with that knowledge which experience alone can give, and that nice sagacity which characterizes the female perception, she had measured the depths of his character, and appreciated him accordingly.

Moreover, his treachery to Nelly was not unknown to her.

Molly Hartford was a girl of bold and daring spirit, although her heart was full of tender sensibilities; and while she was true and steadfast in her affections, her conduct suffered in the estimation of those who look not beneath the surface for one's intentions.

Thus she not unfrequently subjected herself to the imputation of coquetting, when she had only resolved to punish some vain and presumptuos coxcomb who had victimized one of her sex.

This same determination she had taken in regard to Graham, and though Henry Russell did not altogether approve of her intention, he was by no means jealous, but only sought to dissuade her from motives of prudence in regard to her own reputation.

"Go along, Cousin Henry, and flirt with every pretty face in the country, if you please, but let me alone to punish this knave, which I am determined to do."

"Is there not some vanity in that, fair cousin mine?"

"By no means, my gentle mentor. It is not my poor beauty, but my rich estate which captivates him. And as for the damage to my reputation by coquetry, which you are so kind as to hint at, why you must e'en marry me the sooner and take it under your own charge if you are apprehensive about it."

"That is certainly an irresistible bribe to let you play the madcap once more," said Henry, gallantly. "So it must be as you choose."

Thus stood matters on the evening of the fete at Colonel Hartford's, save that Molly had received several calls from Graham very graciously, and without exactly encouraging him certainly allowed him to go off with a very self-satisfied notion of his probable success.

CHAPTER III.

The fete at Colonel Hartford's was a splendid and brilliant one indeed. The spacious halls of his large, elegant mansion were beautifully decorated and lighted to perfection. The exquisite gardens were hung with colored lamps, and, with the graveled walks and commodious summer houses, afforded a pleasant retreat from the heat of the rooms to those who were fatigued with dancing or desirous of a quiet tete-a-tete.

A gay and happy assemblage of bright and cheerful faces did honor to the birthday of the fair Molly Hartford, and with music and dance and innecent revelry the joyous hours sped rapidly on. Many a charming face was there, and many a graceful form glided through the mazes of waltz or cotillion, but peerless above all others were the two friends, Molly Hartford and Nelly Ridley.

Each was the type of a different style of beauty, and almost faultless were the models. Dark as the raven's wing was the glossy hair braided over the full, intellectual brow of Molly, while the auburn tresses of Nelly fell in luxuriant ringlets from her small, beautiful head. Black eyes, that flashed with fire or melted in languor, and a rich, white complexion, through which the mantling blood showed like the blush on the sunny side of a ripe peach, characterized the splendid beauty of the one, while the blended lily and rose tints, with orbs of calm and heavenly blue, distinguished the soft and winning loveliness of the other.

The former was tall and stately as Juno; the latter light and graceful as Hebe. Many a tribute of admiration did they elicit, and much difference of opinion did their appearance excite as to the respective merit of their different styles. No one, perhaps, viewed them with more indescribable emotion than Reginald Graham; not even Henry Russell or Andrew Collins, who had become friends and confidants.

A strange and mixed feeling of hope and regret stole over him.

"After all," mused he, "if I am disappointed of the heiress, what a prize have I lost! The more lovely—far the more lovely of the two. True, the other is a splendid creature, but there is something too haughty in her beauty, while my own Nelly is an angel, if there ever was one on earth. I wonder if there is anything in that young Collins' attentions?

"Phaw! no! She cannot have forgotten me so soon, though I do not half like her manner to-night; it is too calm and self-possessed. There is neither love nor the sense of injury in her eye when it encounters mine, yet on Collins she bestows the same look of quiet confidence that once was mine.

"By Heaven, I could not brook that fellow's rivalry! Yet what claim have I? To me she is lost forever! Nay, not so; if the heiress jilts me, which I half wish she would and half think she may from certain indications to-night, I will recant my errors and throw myself at Nelly's feet and be happy in her dear love, which I never knew till now had so deep a hold on my heart."

And in this uncertain mood Graham sought the side of Molly Hartford, from whom a gracious reception awaited him. To his proposal that they should seek the cool air of the gardens she yielded a flattering assent; and when they had reached an arbor she seated herself and without speaking to her companion turned her large eyes, full of languor, upwards to gaze at that peerless orb which poets delight to apostrophize and lovers to look on.

"A lovely night," said Graham, breaking the silence in a low musical voice.

"And a night for love!" responded Molly, half soliloquizing.

"Then, brightest and most beautiful, accept its sincere homage from your most devoted admirer!" breathed Reginald, passionately as he sank gracefully to his knee.

"Sir—Mr. Graham!" cried Molly, starting back.

"Nay, dearest Molly, hear me! I love—I adore you! From the first moment your glorious beauty burst upon my sight I have been your captive! Yet not the captive of your beauty alone, but equally enamored of the bright intellect which beams from those eloquent eyes."

"You make love well, Mr. Graham," said Molly, drily.

"Nay, now you mock me. Are you, indeed, the heartless coquette fame speaks of, who can sport in the agony of a true heart."

"Of a true heart, never. Its lightest sorrow caused through conduct of mine would greve deeply."

"Then why this derision of my love? Why thus scorn the proffer of an honorable passion from me?"

"Because yours is not a true heart. Think of Nelly Ridley!"

"Ah! is it that idle story which stands between me and my hopes? Believe me, I never wronged her. A mere child with whom I had been in daily intercourse for years, who conceived a foolish attachment for me which I was the first to undecieve her of. My dearest Molly," continued he, seeing she had relaxed somewhat of her sternness, "it was I, not she, who suffered from the contretemps. Credit no word of it, but believe me that never—no never was my heart touched by love till by the magic of your loveliness! Be mine and the ardent devotion of a life shall repay the rich boon you grant. If there be anything worthy or noble in my soul, as I have dreamed there is, be it yours to call it forth and direct it to great objects; and to you, my inspiration and my hope, shall be dedicated all the triumphs of my future career!"

He paused, and perceiving his fair listener drooped as if with suppressed emotion, believed he had conquered. With rapture he caught her hand and was about to pour forth his thanks, when it was promptly snatched away and with a wild, gay laugh Molly sprung up from her seat.

"Ha, ha! Mr. Graham, now I understand you. It is only a private rehearsal you are treating me to. Pray, sir, when do you make your first appearance? I shall certainly attend, for you give great promise of success. What is to be your character, Claude Melnotte or the Apostate?"

"Enough, lady!" said Reginald, rising in ill-concealed rage and disappointment. "Crush me no more with your scorn! Believe it was a mere play of gallantry if you will."

There was a depth of anguish in his voice which made Molly half repent her conduct and she turned to speak with some purpose of softening the blow, but he was gone.

When she again met him in the hall the almost kindly glance of her eye, in answer to his deprecating look—for Molly felt some remorse at the part she had played—reassured him, and Reginald Graham became once more the bright and fascinating cavalier, who, it would scarcely be thought, would plead in vain to beauty.

There are some hearts upon which no salutary lesson can be impressed when vanity and selfishness urge them on and moral principle is wanting to control their desires. Such was Reginald's.

The failure of the designs upon the hand of Molly Hartford and the mortifying exposure he had endured did not deter him, the moment he believed her silence secure, from pursuing purposes in regard to Nelly in the event of his ill-success with the heiress.

It was the first time they had met since the unhandsome conduct of Reginald, and if he expected any weakness on the part of Nelly he was greatly mistaken. Her reception of him—for she did not pretend to avoid him—was calm, quiet and lady-like. No emotion betrayed itself in cheek or glance, and, as he expressed it to himself, there was neither love nor the sense of injury in her eye when it encountered his. Yet the vanity of Reginald Graham would not be convinced that he could be so soon forgotten.

When he again approached Nelly she was talking to Henry Russell.

"Will Miss Ridley favor me with her hand for a cotillon?" he asked, in his blandest tones.

"If you wish it," she replied quietly.

"Can you doubt it?"

And he bent a meaning glance upon her as he offered his arm.

"Not the present set," said Nelly, carelessly, without replying either to look or word. "I am engaged to Mr. Russell. The one after, if you choose."

With eager and animated regards Reginald watched her through the dance and when he claimed her hand at the close of the set he thought she never looked half so beautiful.

But few moments were allowed for conversation ere the music again struck up and the requisitions of the dance, with the unwillingness of his partner to listen to anything of the past, gave Graham but little chance to urge his suit.

When the cotillon had finished, however, he proposed to get an ice for her, and Nelly, having really no other engagement and seeing no familar face near her, could not well refuse.

Fate favored Graham, for the door near which they stood opened on a small, vine-covered portico with convenient seats, and they had scarcely placed themselves before a movement in the crowd left that part of the room vacant, and they were once more alone.

To say that Nelly felt perfectly at her ease would be too much, for she had already preceived on the part of her companion a purpose to enter into such explanation which she would gladly have avoided. It is true she thoroughly despised him now, but there are memories of love which, even when the passion has faded and the object is scorned, cannot be altogether destroyed. Poor Nelly, however, had no choice, and could only nerve her heart for the trial she would fain have been spared.

"Nelly!" said Reginald, in his dulcet voice, when he perceived they would be uninterrupted.

"Sir," with calm dignity, "to other then my near friends I am Miss Ridley!"

"And are we enemies, Nelly?"

"It needs not a distinction, sir, which would argue more importance in the feeling between us than I am disposed to admit. We are strangers, sir, or if you please, mere acquaintances."

"Strangers, Nelly? Can it be that such a wide gulf is between hearts once so fondly knit together?"

"And who made it, sir?" demanded she with rising scorn.

"The rash, intemperate passion of your father, and, perhaps, my own foolish pride," replied he with bold hypocrisy.

"'Tis false; your own loose, fickle nature alone was to blame," said she, rising with dignified mien and flashing eye, her slight form swelling into heroic proportions. "Let me pass!"

"Nay, Nelly, you must hear me, though for the last time," said he, with subdued and touching pathos, respectfully and gently detaining her. "Think you that a rash word or hasty action should destroy forever the brightest hopes of the human heart — the dream of fond, unchanging love? Is that exalted and divine passion so weak that it cannot withstand a moment's anger—just anger at a grievous fault, perhaps—against the object of its devotion? Has forgiveness no part in its principles? Must a single error doom the heart that has loved truly and fondly for years to misery and despair? Nay, hear me," continued he passionately, for she had made an impatient movement to be gone. "I love you! I have always loved you! In wretchedness must I pass the brief period of my life, if you will not listen to and forgive me!"

And as she strove to pass him he sank on his knees and caught her hand to detain her.

"Do hear the gentleman out, my love," said a clear, silvery voice near them at this moment, "but do not trouble yourself to answer him; for it is only some private theatricals he has gotten up to assist my poor entertainment to-night. He has already gone through the self-same scene with me in the garden to-night!" And Molly Hartford stepped forward.

Who can picture the debasement of feeling that overwhelmed Reginald Graham at this interruption?

Releasing the hand he had taken, he bowed his head in shame and humiliation, while Nelly, glad of escape, took refuge at the side of her friend.

"Come, dear," said the gay girl, leading her away. "Let us leave him to study some more interesting character; his present one is somewhat stale and unprofitable."

And when they had gone, Reginald Graham rushed madly from the house, his brain on fire and his heart like ice.

Whether the lessons he received have corrected the faults of his character we do not know, for shortly afterwards he left the neighborhood and has not returned.

The same day saw Molly Hartford and Nelly Ridley united to those they had chosen both from love and esteem. Molly passed much of her time in London, where she is still acknowledged as an ornament to society; but ever the bright summer days find her at Elm Grove, or the favorite guest at the "dear little cottage" where her "sweet Nelly" lives in the unbroken and unregretting happiness of second love.

A Cannibal Idyl.

A cannibal maiden loved too well
  A missionary good,
And he loved her, but dare not tell
  His love—for thus it stood:
A cannibal she and a clergyman he,
  And their creed was wide apart;
And he could not take, for a sentiment's sake,
A cannibal to his heart?
    Oh, 'twas a problem vexing, very,
    For the cannibal maid and the missionary—
      Indeed it was.

But the cannibal maid's love grew bold,
  For she was a simple thing;
And thus her love to her love she told:
  "Oh, marry me! Be my king!
For I love you, my sweet, well enough—oh, to eat!
  'Tis a terrible thing, I know;
But I must be your bride or encumpass you fried—
  Oh, I must, for I love you so!"
    Oh, it was a problem vexing, very,
    To the maid, but more to the missionary—
      Indeed it was.

He looked in the depths of her dark brown eyes,
  With their wealth of love and trust,
And he cried, in the flush of a glad surprise:
  "Well, if I must, I must!"
They were wed on that day; for 'tis ever the way
  That passion must conquer greed,
And a happier pair it's remarkably rare
  To discover—it is indeed!
    And so 'twas settled nicely, very,
    For the cannibal maid and the missionary—
      Indeed it was.

A LIGHTNING PLUG.

Down on the docks the other day, says the New York Graphic, talking about a schooner which had been struck by lightning on Lake Erie, when the reporter singled an old bald-head and said:—

"Captain H., it seems to me I've read or heard of your brig being struck."

"Yes, she was," answered the old fabricator, after taking time to outline the lie he was to tell.

"Where was it?"

"Off Point Aux Barques, about fifteen years ago. Very strange case that. Probably the only one of the kind ever heard of."

"Give us the particulars."

"Well, we were jogging along down when a thunder-storm overtook us, and the very first flash of lightning struck the deck amidships and bored a hole as big as my right leg down through the bottom of the vessel."

"And she foundered, of course?"

"No, sir; the water began rushing in, and she would have foundered, but there came a second flash, and a bolt struck my fore-to'-gallant mast. It was cut off near the cap, turned bottom end up, and as it came down entered the hole and blugged it up as tight as a drum. When we got down to dry dock we simply sawed of either end and left the plug in the planks."

"Did you ever swear to that, captain?"

"I did, but it was before a notary who afterward went crazy, and I have never quite satisfied. Is there a notary here among us?"

There was none, and while the reporter was looking after an official of that sort, the old liars took a drink and scattered for the day.

An Introduction.—Said Col. John A. Joyce: "When I was 19 years of age I used to write poetry for George D. Prentice when he was editor of the Louisville Journal. One day I went to the city, and as the editor had been good enough to print my poetry, called to see him. I climbed the starway and found a negro man at the door of the sanctnm, who demanded my card. I had none but tore off a strip of paper from a bundle in the hall, wrote my name and sent it in. I was admitted. Prentice was at work. He never looked up. His chin was almost on his desk. A pile of exchanges stood on a stool near by. Seeing that Prentice did not recognize me, I knocked the exchanges from the stool. He looked up. "Who are you?" "I'm a fool," I said; "who are are you?" "I'm another; shake," he replied.—Chicago Times.

Rivers Frozen in July.—"Talk about sudden cold snaps," sald Pete Smith, last evening, "what we are now having is nothing to what I have seen up in the mountains. Why, one July, about eight years ago, I was up at Independence Lake on a fishing trip. One day when it was so hot that all the matches I had in my pocket took fire spontaneously and the gravel stones hissed when water splashed on them, the wind suddenly whirled about and came from the north. A trout had just made a spring out of the water after a fly, and before it got down the lake was frozen solid. I walked out on the ice and picked it up. It was as stiff as a railroad spike. Of course there are tolerably sudden days here, but they are nothing to what we sometimes see up in the mountains.—Territorial Enterprise.

Don't Quarrel.—If anything in the world will make a man feel badly, except pinching his finger in the crack of the door, it is a quarrel. No one fails to think less of himself than he did before; it degrades him in the eyes of others, and, what is worse, tends to blunt his sensibilities and increase his irritability. The truth is that the more peaceably and quietly we get on, the better for our neighbors. In nine cases out of ten the better course is, if the man cheats you, to quit dealing with him; if he slanders you, take care to live down his slanders. Let such persons alone, for there is nothing better than this way of dealing with those who injure us.

A Ridiculous Teaching.—A somewhat unpolished mother of a very charming daughter was recently heard to say: "I don't intend lettin' Emily go back to Madam Waring's school. They don't teach 'em right. Now I don't know so very much myself, but I never would tell my child that IX spells nine. It's absolutely ridiculous.—Harper's Magazine for September.

Quite a Difference.—When the train bearing the Blaine party stopped at one of the Maine cities, the band struck up, "I've fiften dollars in my inside pocket." Mr. Blaine must have appreciated it. One never hears such a song as that in a free trade county.—Worcester Telegram. That's so. "I owe ten dollars to O'Grady" is the popular song there.—Springfield Union.

A burn becomes less painful the moment air is excluded from it. For simple burns, oil, or the white of an egg, can be used. One part of carbolic acid to six parts of olive oil is found to be invaluable in most cases, slight or severe, and the first layer of lint should not be removed until the cure is complete, but saturated by the application of fresh outer layers from time to time.

THE
D. H. BRIGHAM CO.
TO ALL CLOSE BUYERS

We begin this week a sale of Fall and Winter Garments which were purchased of the old firm last March. You will remember we bought the stock too late in the season to be of interest to buyers of Heavy Goods, and we at once opened a new Spring and Summer stock. Now want of space really compels us to make prices on these goods in order that we may close them out at once. We have made some very large reductions from the D. H. B. & Co. prices. The assortment contains an immense variety of

FINE GOODS.

There is not a poor-style garment in the entire stock. Neither are there any "shop-worn" goods. Many of them were bought late last fall and winter and as desirable as any could wish. This sale will not in any way interfere with the sale of our of which we have an elegant stock.

The Sale Which Commences At Once

Of these seasonable garments will be appreciated because there are a great many lots which are full lines, regular sizes; just as fine as the new goods of which we have an immense stock. Particularly desirable are the suits for young men which to-day show such a from our last winter's prices. Buying them as we did late last spring we are able to offer fine, choice and seasonable garments, overcoats included, at such marvelously low prices You can have alterations made if needed.

GREAT MARK DOWN

We Can Furnish Horse Clothing

BY THE BALE OR AT RETAIL.

Our stock is coming in daily, and the assortment is very large and fine. Among the Blankets are the celebrated "North Star" goods, of which we are sole agents. Among the cheaper goods are to be found a great variety of the celebrated 5-A Blankets, which are the best and most favorably known in the country. These come direct from the manufacturers themselves, and you can buy them of us with one "profit off" at least.

LAP ROBES

Made of wool or plush are needed now; these cold nights and mornings make them necessary for everybody who drives. We have really an elegant variety both of foreign and domestic manufacture. Will you, if interested, look through this department.

The Bright Days in Fall.

'Tis Fall,
And dreaming in the skies,
With amber light and far woods blaze,
The shadeless corn-lands wear a listless haze,
The river level as the dun mead lies.
Her spell Enchantment lays
On glimmering hills—bright bays—
Wide ocean ways—
On all.

'Tis calm
Before the end
In nature, as in life.
'Tis bright as even-tide. I went
My way through the woods where gold and crimson blend,
Through corridors where endless groups extend;
I sigh to think how soon the strife
Of piping winds shall rend
Each leaf and end
The charm.

So years
Grow calm and bright
With a resplendent light,
And discipline ends, and want and care.
'Tis autumn in the heart. The blight
Hangs o'er the leaf. The storms prepare,
And soon beyond the plight,
Lone winter's night
Appears.

'Tis sweet
To mark long rifts of light
In hedges old, where ardent sunsets blaze
Thwart crimson seas. 'Tis a delight
On disappearing suns to gaze,
When Spring her robe displays,
To follow through warm days
Where'er she strays
Her feet.

The frost
May drain the streams,
But spring is in the heart;
We see; she lingers in our dreams.
Thick snows may fall, and loud may pipe the storms.
The winds return after frequent calm;
We heed them little after Spring's first beams
Have lent the earth their charm;
Then winter seems
As past.

'Tis thus
With life; 'tis not
What we are now that joy imparts,
But the near prospect of our future lot.
In Fall, approaching winter chills our hearts,
And near Spring days the blank storm is forgot,
Like rare fruit by voyagers sought
Ever from foreign marts
Sweet joys are brought
To us.

At last
When life is old
And vanished are its dreams,
Will prospects bright or dark unfold?
Will happy summers lift their fronded palms
In low horizons of fair seas of gold,
Or mystery's voiceless night enfold
Us in its dubious arms,
And leave a cold,
Dead past?

The heart
Only when heaven seems near,
And faith sees an horizon dawn and glow
Beyond the scenes that fade and disappear;
When heavenly hills beyond earth's ranges below
Lift their gold summits fair and clear,
And joy through earth turn seer,
And falls the snow—
Impart.

RAYMOND'S MISSION.

The wind is sweeping in gusts around the barracks and officers' houses at Fort Duncan, on the Western frontier.

It is a wild night, and within the dwellings the inmates are striving with music and games to pass the evening.

In a room in Colonel Washburn's house a young man is walking backward and forward.

The room, although tastefully furnished, bears marks of frontier life; for over the fire-place, fastened high on the wall, is a stag's head and antlers. The rug in front of the fire is a bear's skin, and thrown over a low couch in one corner of the room is another of the same soft, furry mantles.

The room is lighted by the blazing logs in the fire-place. They cast a ruddy glow upon the figure of the young man who is the sole occupant of the room. A tall, well-built figure, a dark, handsome face, partially covered with a black beard, dark, restless eyes, now flashing, now soft and tender in their expression.

It is a striking face, and Lieutenant Rexford Davenport is considered both a handsome man and a brave soldier by all who know him.

We hear from an adjoining room music and gay laughter, and are inclined to question why this young officer is absent from the social circle. A door opens and a slight, girlish figure glides into the room.

"Oh, Rexford, do come into the sitting room; every one is asking for you, and they will think it so strange if you do not come."

"Do you imagine I care what they think? You know very well Madge, that I am in no mood for society to-night."

"Now, Rex, don't be foolish; you promised me last night you would be reasonable."

"Wherein have I failed to keep my promise? But don't ask me to meet all those people to-night. Madge, have you no heart, that you can be so gay and thoughtless, when to-morrow we part, it may be for years and it may be forever."

The brightness faded from the sweet face, and tears filled the tender eyes, as the girl said impulsively, "Why are you so cruel, Rex? You know right well that I do care, but I cannot help the parting; and why make the others sad, because of our pain?"

"Forgive me if I seemed unkind. I did not mean to be that. You do care, then, Madge, and you are not going away without giving me a word of hope."

The tears were dried in the violet eyes and the little figure was erect as Madge answered, "Rex, I told you last night that it was impossible; papa will never consent, and I dare not go contrary to his wishes; dear papa who has been so kind. Be reasonable, dear Rex, and do not make our last evening together so unpleasant."

"Madge, you will go away and in the gay society life you will lead you will forget me, and the happy days we have spent together here."

"No, Rex, I shall not forget you and your kindness to me. I like you very much as a dear friend, but I can never be yours; believe this and forget me, if to remember me gives you pain."

"A woman's reasoning, truly," murmured Rex.

"Shall I read you what papa writes?"

And without waiting for an answer the girl drew from her pocket a letter, and by the light of the blazing logs read slowly, as if the words gave her pain:—

"Now, Madge, I hope most devoutly that you have not become entangled in any foolish, romantic love affair; for I will never consent to your marrying any one who is due to the hardship and privation that attend the life of an officer in the army. You will come to me at once in Chicago, and will, I trust, bring your reason and good sense to the front and forget this foolish attachment."

"You realize I must obey papa. I am all he has in the world, and do not make it so very hard for me."

"I will not, Madge; but remember, I shall never give you up until you are the wife of another. Am I to have no word from you?"

"There will sometimes be a message for you in Anna's letters; more than that I dare not promise you."

"Thank you, that will be something; enough to keep me from despair—perhaps. I want to bid you good-bye to-night, for I cannot do it to-morrow before all these people. And by the time you are well started upon your journey I shall be far out on the plains with the expedition of which I told you. I want a picture to carry with me on that lonely ride of you as you look now, with the glow of the firelight on your sweet face."

As he spoke two strong hands were laid on the girl's shoulders and two dark eyes flashed into hers.

"Now, may God help my darling." The tall form bent until the bearded lips touched Madge's forehead.

"Oh, Rex, I am so sorry to give you pain. Good-bye." And then she unclasped the hands from her shoulders and ran lightly from the room.

Something fluttered down to the floor like a white dove, and Rex picked up the dainty perfumed handkerchief and pressed it to his lips.

* * * * * * * * *

The eventful morning came, and by a long, tiresome stage route Madge at length reached the train that was to bear her to her father. When next we see her she is in one of the princely hotels of Chicago. Her father is standing before the grate fire in their sitting room, and is regarding Madge intently. "And Madge, what was that nonsense you wrote me about the young Lieutenant? I hope you settled that satisfactorily before you left."

"I told him he must forget me; that I could never marry him."

"My good girl, I thought you would be sensible. I could not think of allowing you to marry a soldier on the frontier, and be exposed to those dangers and privations. You must forget this nonsense, Madge, and be ready to enter society at the East when we return."

"Yes, papa," answered the girl, but there was a pain in her heart, and she wondered how people went to work to forget. A few years before, when Madge was at boarding-school, she had formed a strong attachment for a girl by the name of Anna Davenport. This friend had married Col. Washburn, and left her lovely home for life on the frontier. She had written to Madge from her new home at Fort Duncan, begging her to come and spend some time with her, and as Madge was staying for an indefinite time with her father in Chicago, whither he had come on business, Madge had decided to go.

Rexford Davenport was Anna's brother, who was also stationed at Fort Duncan. During Madge's stay there he had been her constant companion, always ready, when his duties would permit, to amuse her. This merry comradeship had led to a deeper, stronger feeling on both sides. Madge had not realized this until one day Rex told her that he loved her, and asked her to be his wife.

Then Madge had written to her father, and in answer had come the summons to join him in Chicago.

She was thinking of these friends and of the many miles that lay between her and the lonely fort. Some words of Mrs. Browning's came to her mind—

"Earth separates as well as Heaven," and she thought how lonely Rex would be when he returned from his expedition against the Indians. When he returned! Ah, suppose he never returned! But she would not think of that possibility. Just at this point in her meditations a servant came to the door with their letters. Her father opened his, and, after reading a few lines, turned to Madge with a white face, exclaiming: "Madge, I have had bad news here. I am afraid I am going to lose some money. Can you be ready to leave for New York on the midnight express?"

"Yes, papa. Can I help you in any way?"

"No, my dear, only have your preparations all made to leave then."

The interval before that time was a busy one to Madge, but she concluded her preparations and they left for New York on the midnight train. Madge never forgot that journey, for her father, who was usually a delightful traveling companion, was silent and abstracted, and Madge was filled with apprehensions for the future. They at length reached New York and went to a hotel. The days that followed were filled with anxiety. Mr. Leighton passed much of his time in looking after his investments, some of which proved to be worthless.

The crisis came when he was taken with brain fever, and after a brief illness died.

Madge had in her life known few sorrows, and was ill prepared for the great change in her life. For she found herself left alone in the world, with only a small sum of money at her disposal. An old friend of her father, however, came to her assistance and offered her the position of governess in his family. When misfortune had overtaken Madge she had ceased to write to her friends at Fort Duncan.

A strange pride kept her silent and allowed her to send no word to Rexford Davenport which would seem to call him to her aid.

And so these faithful friends were left in suspense, and wondered why Madge did not wish to see them.

And Rex grew restless, and went as often as possible on long expeditions against the Indians.

He thought bitterly "she has forgotten, and is faithless like them all."

* * * * * * * * *

It is a bright, clear day, and the sky is blue, and the air soft and delightful. The avenues of Washington are gay with beautiful equipages and handsomely dressed people.

All the beautiful cosmopolitan city is alive, and the hum of business and pleasure is in the very air.

At one of the finest hotels the Hon. Cyrus Kingsley and family are registered.

In this family is included Madge Leighton, who acts as governess to the children. They are Blanche and Raymond, who are aged respectively six and eight years.

Miss Leighton's duties are many and varied. She teaches the children in the morning, and in the afternoon the large, handsome apartment which is used as a school-room is the scene of many a merry time. For when lessons are over for the day Madge plays games with them, tells them stories, draws pictures for them, as their varied moods may suggest. They are her constant companions, for Mrs. Kingsley is a delicate, nervous lady, whose time is divided between the care of her health and her society duties.

The children are really loveable and consider "our governess" as perfect in every respect, so Madge finds the task a pleasant one.

Raymond is especially happy when Miss Leighton will consent to tell him stories of her stay at Fort Duncan; and Madge is never tired of the theme, but tells the same tales over and over again to her small but appreciative audience.

Ray often declared that he would be a soldier when he was a man; but his ardor was somewhat dampened by the assurance that there were many hard and disagreeable things to be performed daily if one led a military life.

One day Ray was passing through one of the halls and he saw a young man dressed in soldier's uniform approaching; he was reading a letter and held several others in his hand. As he neared the boy one of them dropped, and Ray, springing forward, picked it up and restored it to the young man, who thanked him heartily. He was passing on when he was arrested by an eager little voice, which said: "If you please, sir, I would like to ask you some questions."

"All right, my boy. What is it you wish to know?"

"Did you ever live out on the plains at a fort and fight the Indians?"

The young man laughed.

"Yes; but where did you get your idea of frontier camp life?"

"Oh, Miss Leighton, our governess, often tells us such interesting stories about Fort Duncan, and the dogs and horses and Indians, that I thought I should like to be a soldier, but she says it is very hard sometimes to be one, but I thought you could tell better about it than a girl."

Ray did not notice that his listener gave a start when he mentioned Miss Leighton's name.

"My boy, if you will come to No. 40 in about an hour I will explain to you some of the hard and unpleasant duties required of an officer in the army."

"Thank you, sir; you are no end kind." And the boy ran away to tell his governess of his great good luck in finding a soldier who was to tell him all he wanted to know about the life of a soldier on the frontier.

Madge said she was very glad, for her stock of information on the subject was exhausted.

It was difficult to keep the little lad at his studies during the following hour, and with a promise to make them all up the next day he departed for No. 40 in great spirits.

It was a happy hour to the boy, for the young officer related stories of camp life in such an interesting manner that Ray stayed far beyond the hour allotted for his call by his governess. As he was reluctantly taking his leave, the young man handed him a card, and asked him to give that to Miss Leighton, and ask her if she knew a gentleman by that name.

Ray promised, and finding his governess in the schoolroom he delivered the card and message, saying in the same breath, "I hope you do know him, for he is so kind." Madge took up the card and as she read the inscription thereon the color fled from her face, for she saw the name of Rexford Davenport.

Ray was delighted at the turn affairs had taken, and begged so hard to be allowed to return and inform his new friend of the fact that Miss Leighton did know him that Madge consented. And when Ray presently returned bearing in his hand a note which ran as follows:—

Dear Madge: Will you take a drive with me this afternoon? Yours,
REXFORD DAVENPORT.

Ray, who was installed letter carrier, bore Madge's answer, which we may be certain was in the affirmative.

What happened on that ride we cannot say, but we may be sure it was a very happy one to the friends so long separated.

But have you guessed how the story ended? How life on the Western frontier seemed like the sweetest existence possible to little Madge, because shared by this brave friend who had held her in his heart so long?

And Ray was not forgotton, for they realized how much they owed to this little friend, and he was often made happy by the receipt of long letters and curious gifts from a certain far-away fort on the Western plains.

ABUSE OF THE TOOTHPICK.

The toothpick, when used with discretion and at proper times and in proper places, is an unobjectionable little instrument. Its occasional employment is, as a rule, necessary to cleanliness and preservation of the teeth. So, also, is the use of the toothbrush. This adjunct to the toilet is, however, never used in public. The person who, after partaking of a meal, should proceed to publicly use his toothbrush would speedily find himself banished from decent society. Yet such action would be less objectionable to witness than the service to which some people who pretend to refinement and culture put the toothpick. There is but one place in which it may be rightly used—the dressing room—and no person who has the slightest consideration for the feelings of others will handle it anywhere else.

It would seem to be almost unnecessary to make such statements as those in the foregoing paragraph. No one possessing any delicacy of feeling or squeamishness of digestion will dream of controverting them. And yet the public use of the toothpick is daily increasing, and has almost already reached proportions that strike the foreign visitor with astonishment and disgust, and make the lives of many of our citizens anything but agreeable.

The practice has doubtless grown owing to the large number of people who live or have lived in hotels and boarding-houses, where toothpicks were furnished with the idea that guests would take them to their rooms, and in some of the good hotels guests can even now procure toothpicks at the door by which they leave the dining rooms. In other hotels, and also, it is sad to have to write, in some private houses, the toothpick-holder is a regular ornament (?) of the table, and its contents are assiduously worked.

In no other country that the writer has ever visited have toothpicks been publicly used in private houses or in the presence of women. An English woman or a French woman of the better class not only never dreams of using a toothpick before people, but she considers it something that is more pleasant not even to mention. Here, however, it is no uncommon occurence to hear a lady ask for the toothpicks, and select one that she thinks will fit her needs.—The Epoch.

AVOIDED BY WELL-BRED AND GENTEEL PERSONS.

Avoid beginning a conversation by an allusion to the weather.

Avoid all intemperate expressions.

Avoid talking to any one person in the presence of others in a language not understood save by the two using it, unless addressing a foreigner in his own tongue, and then others should be made aware of the topic of conversation.

Avoid speaking to any one as "that party."

Avoid using the words "she" or "he," accompanied by a nod of the head or a jerk of the thumb in the direction of the person spoken of, but speak the name of the lady or gentleman.

Avoid all remarks intended to have a double meaning.

Do not betray egotism.

Be careful not to indulge in furious gesticulations. Conversation is not oratory.

Do not be satirical save in defense of of yourself against impertinence.

Do not flatter. Flattery is offensive to any person of refinement or delicacy of feeling.

Never show that you notice any error in language, either in pronunciation or grammar, on the part of those with whom you are conversing.

Do not whistle, loll about, scratch your head, or fidget with any portion of your apparel while in conversation.

Be alert to avoid absence of mind.

Do not ask to have a sentence repeated unless you actually failed to hear it. Many persons have contracted the careless habit of saying "what?" "eh?" and the like.

Never interrupt the person who is speaking.

Do not supply your companion with a word over which he momentarily hesitates.

Avoid loud laughing or giggling.

Do not indulge in scandal.

Do not laugh at your own wit.

HIS LIFE WAS SAVED.

"I am truly sorry to give you pain, Mr. Hankinson," said the young lady, "but please do not allude to this subject again. I cannot be your wife."

"That is your final answer, Miss Irene?"

"It is."

"Nothing can induce you to change your decision?"

"My mind is firmly and unalterably made up."

"Miss Irene," said the young man, rising and looking for his hat, "before coming here this evening I made a bet of fifty dollars with Van Perkin that you would say no to my proposal. I have won. It was taking a great risk, but I was dead broke. Miss Irene," he continued, his voice quivering with emotion, "you have saved a despairing man from the fate of a suicide and won the life-long respect and esteem of a despairing and grateful heart. Good evening.—Chicago Tribune.

"How did you enjoy your trip abroad?" was asked of a New Yorker. "Beastly stupid time. I didn't see a single base ball game while I was gone."—Judge.

There is consternation among Belva Lockwood's followers over the report that the old parties are going to put mice in the ballot boxes this election.—Boston Transcript.

A Farmer's View of Religion.

This argufyin' useless pints
As where Cain got his wife,
Was Jonah swallowed by the whale?
Is death the end of life?
Is jest the devil's Eden plan
That caught us long ago,
God has His "shall not" on some things,
The devil, "you shall know."

Now, where Cain got his wife's no odds;
But will the de'il get me?
Not what I swallow, nor the whale,
Will change eternitee.
An' if I live so I can die
In peace when death shall call,
I'll die so that I'll live with joy,
If dyin' don't end all.

Now, I don't argue how the moon
Makes 'taters run to tops;
I plant them when the sign is right,
And allus raise good crops.
I take the farmin' rules that's plain
And reap jest what I sow;
I do the same with Gospel truth,
An' puzzlin' pints can go.

THE BAND THAT WOULD'T PLAY.

An Indian chief who had been to Washington on a visit to the Great Father gave the people of his tribe a glowing account of his experience on his return. What seemed to interest him more than anything else was a musical performance at which he had been present. The playing by the orchestra was something so far away from anything that he had ever before conceived that it filled him with wonder. "Come, my brothers," he said to his people, "and I will tell you of the brave music chief who made his men play when they did not want to, and to rebel.

"You see, we had come, the other chiefs and I, with some of the warriors of the Great Father, to hear the music braves play upon their instruments. The music men were in their places. The music chief was in his place, which was higher than the places of his men, so that he might see that none of them ran away, or put down their instruments.

"O my brothers, there were great men among them! One brave of the number was larger about the body than any two men of our tribe, and he played upon a great shining instrument, like smoke-stack upon the white man's locomotive; and at the side of it there was a rod which he moved back and forth, like the mighty moving rod which turns the wheels of the iron horse and pulls the train. He was surely the greatest brave of them all, next to the music chief; but he sat in a humble place, with the rest. Yet, if he had chosen, he might have crushed all the rest with his instrument.

"Well, my brothers, the music chief had taken his place; the brave had their instuments in their hands; the big brave of whose instrument I have told you had filled his cheeks with much air; the chief waited, but they wouldn't play. Then the music chief lifted his hands high in the air, as if to threaten them; but they wouldn't play.

"Then the music chief got very mad; he shook his stick at them with his right hand so hard that he trembled upon his box, and his face grew with anger as red as the sunrise over the mountain.

"The rebellious music braves were all afraid, seeing the chief shaking his stick at them, and they played. At first they did not make very much noise; it was like the south wind, when it whistles through the tops of the poles of the tepee. The music chief let them play a little time like this, but he was not satisfied. He shook his stick at them again. Then they were all afraid again, and played louder. It was like the north wind blowing through the pine-trees, when some of the dead limbs fall to the ground. Our hearts were very full.

"But still the music chief was not satisfied. He raised himself upon his toes, and shook his stick more and more. He shook it first at one music brave, and then at another. Then he shook it at them all at once. One could see that he was very, very angry. And then their music became like the cyclone, when it floats the tepee upon the clouds, and tears the pine-trees up by the roots. Our hearts felt as yours have felt when the war-whoop has been sounded, and the tribe has gone forth to fight and to conquer.

"We were glad that the music chief shook his stick at his braves, for they were rebellious, and would not have played if he had not made them afraid."

WHERE HE GOT HIS SLANG.

"Matilda, that boy of ours is chuck full of slang," remarked Mr. Dusenberry, in a sharp, complaining tone; "he talks about me as the guv-nor, and this morning I heard him tell Bridget to 'Let her go, Gallagher!' Where does he pick up such abominable stuff?" "Goodness only knows," Mrs. Dusenberry said, with a well stimulated look of ignorance. "At school, I suppose," continued Mr. Dusenberry, "of those Darringer boys. He is altogether too fly, that boy, and if I catch him with those boys again he'll make a home-run of the liveliest kind." "He may hear some of it at home," suggested Mrs. Dusenberry, with motherly blandness. "At home!" cried Mr. Duesenberry. "You are entirely off your base, my dear. Who uses slang here?" "Probably I am addicted to it," was Mrs. Dusenberry's meek reply. "Well, it's a vice you'd better get rid of the then. Refined conversation is a mark of culture. Let me hear that kid use slang again and I'll give it to him right off the bat. I'll wipe up the floor with him. I'll—" Just then he saw a commiserating look on his wife's face. He picked up his hat suddenly and, mumbling something about having an appointment at the office, fled.—Time.

It is a Weary World.—"Whew!" sighed the umbrella, "how I suffer! I am worn to a skeleton and have had four of my ribs broken for a week." "Go to!" restorted the hat. "You suffer! Why every night of my life is spent upon the rack."—Stray.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 12, 1888.

The present county officers were renominated by the Republicans at Springfield, Wednesday, by acclamation.

The Bay State Fair at Springfield this week has been a great success in everything but attendance, which was not up to a paying point.

Chief Justice Fuller of the United States supreme court was installed in office Monday, with the usual simple but impressive ceremonies.

Maryland colored people are holding an industrial fair at Baltimore, the first of its kind, and the 2000 articles on exhibition make an interesting and instructive illustration of the progress which is being made by the race in the industrial arts.

The supreme court of Utah has dealt the Mormon church a severe blow by dissolving the church corporation, and places about a million dollars' worth of property in the hands of a receiver preliminary to its transfer to the United States government.

Councilor C. A. Morse of Canton was nominated by the Republicans of the 2d district, Wednesday, to succeed Representative Long in Congress, but if half the stories of fraud and bribery in the canvass are true he ought to be defeated by an overwhelming vote.

Carl Schurz and ex-Secretary Hugh McCulloch have come out for Cleveland, because of his revenue reform policy. Four years ago it was civil service reform, but that has been pretty thoroughly abandoned. Who knows that revenue reform would fare any better?

It has remained for a prohibitory paper, in its political zeal, to speak with this blasphemous familiarity of the Supreme Being:

> It may be a question whether the Lord of heaven is a protectionist or a free trader, but we have it on undisputed authority that he is a prohibitionist. Christians, you better be on the safe side by being on the Lord's side.

A Canal Boat campaign through central New York is being conducted by the state league of Democratic clubs, meetings being held at the larger towns along the Erie canal, with addresses by speakers who travel by boat. If their speeches are no more progressive than their method of transportation they will be voted decidedly slow.

Two members of the executive board of the Knights of Labor, Messrs. Carleton and Barry, have just resigned, the latter because he "can no longer endure to be a witness to the many farces and deceptions practiced upon the innocent masses." It is estimated that 80,000 knights have left the order this year. At this rate Mr. Powderly will soon stand alone, a spared monument of former greatness.

New York City is in for the liveliest kind of a municipal fight this fall. Tammany Hall has nominated Sheriff Hugh J. Grant, one of its most popular men, for mayor. The County Democracy has nominated Mayor Hewitt, who also has the support of the citizens' movement, and as he is the best mayor the city has had in many a year, notwithstanding his eccentricities, the contest is sure to be a hot one.

The Republican national committee has deposited $25,000 in a New York bank to be used as rewards for the arrest and conviction of persons guilty of false or illegal registration in New York or Brooklyn, in the approaching national election. The Democrats scoff at it as a campaign trick, forgetting that it will apply as well to Republican violators of the law, if there be such, as to Democratic. It is the hit bird that flutters.

American laborers will not be highly pleased with the picture drawn by Mr. Mills in a speech the other day at East St. Louis, Ill. The superiority of American labor over foreign in everything which makes life pleasant and worth the living, is the magnet which has been drawing laborers to this country for these many years from foreign shores. Said Mr. Mills:—

> If Grover Cleveland is reelected president of the United States—as he will be—if another Democratic House of Representatives is chosen, and if we can get our Republican friends out of the other end of the capitol and get Democrats in place of them, then we will pass a tariff bill that puts raw materials all on the free list, and then we will put our own intelligent and skillful and productive labor in this country upon a plane of equality with the laborers of all other countries.

An unpleasantness which has existed for some time between the state board of lunacy and charity and F. B. Sanborn, the inspector of charities, culminated last Saturday in an order by the board summarily dismissing Mr. Sanborn and abolishing his office. The inspector had been placing insane paupers from Tewksbury in private families, with very beneficial results, but the chairman of the board objected, and the attorney general gave an opinion that Mr. Sanborn had transcended his legal authority in so doing. The inspector refused to accept this interpretation of the law, and his removal followed. Mr. Sanborn is a plucky fighter, however, and refuses to regard himself as discharged, as the governor had not assented to the action of the board, and has appealed to him. Mr. Sanborn has done excellent service for the state and for its wards, and it would seem as though the board had acted with undue haste in dismissing him without even a hearing.

A horrible accident occurred Wednesday night on the Lehigh Valley Railroad at Mud Run, Pa., when 57 persons were killed and more than 100 injured, many of them seriously. A large party of excursionists were returning to Wilkesbarre and Scranton from Hazleton, the train being run in sections. One section stopped at Mud Run, and was run into by the following section, drawn at full speed by two heavy locomotives, the forward one going clear through the rear car and part way through the next one. Several cars were telescoped, and the groans of the wounded added greatly to the horror of the scene. It has not yet been fully determined who is responsible.

LOCAL NOTICES.

Fine pineapple and Edam cheeses at Sears & Cook's.

PALMER AND VICINITY.

Gatherers of leaves and other autumnal foliage are numerous.

All voters should bear in mind the next meeting for registration.

The farmers report a large quantity of apples and very low prices.

Elder D. C. Dudley of Wallingford, Ct., will preach at the Advent chapel next Sunday.

Another flurry of snow Tuesday afternoon, which gave quite a white look to the hills.

J. S. Holden has been elected president, and Chas. B. Fisk treasurer, of the Palmer Electric Co.

H. C. Strong addressed another Democratic mass meeting at Chicopee Wednesday evening.

The Cleveland and Thurman campaign flag has been repaired, and once more sways in the breeze.

The office of the Postal Telegraph Co. has been moved to the up-stairs portion of Eager's block.

M. J. Dillon has been engaged in raising the dust-stack at the Thorndike Company's works this week.

L. L. Merrick Post, G. A. R., contemplates having a camp-fire some time during the coming winter.

Sunday evening services at St. Paul's Universalist church will be resumed the latter part of the month.

T. G. Phelps of Adams has bought John M. Converse's farm and the stock thereon, through D. F. Holden's agency.

A meeting of the fire district will probably be held soon, to take definite action in regard to the street lights.

There will be reason for a large expenditure of money on the roads, when the rain ceases falling for any length of time.

The large store-house at the works of the Palmer Wire Manufacturing Company has been enlarged and repaired this week.

"Quaboag Villa" is the name bestowed upon the remodeled residence of Mrs. Ella J. Wheeler, near the agricultural park.

The Ladies' Society of St. Paul's Universalist church held a social and entertainment at the parlors Wednesday evening.

The Crescent Club met with the Misses Annie and Carrie Fish Tuesday evening, where the members were well entertained.

The New London Northern Railroad has made a slight change in its time-table this week, on the northern division of the line.

Quite a delegation from Good Cheer Lodge, Daughters of Rebekah, attended the state convention at Boston, Wednesday.

The Democrats of the town are organizing for another rally and flag-raising, to take place at Three Rivers some time this month.

The work of constructing the new road near the residence of S. Blodgett on Dewey's hill, is being pushed rapidly by the surveyors.

W. W. Leach was chosen a member of the Hampden county Republican committee at the convention held at Springfield Wednesday.

The price of the best flour has gone up to $8.50 per barrel, a rise from $6.25 four weeks ago, and the prospect is that it will be higher yet.

Preparations are in progress for the annual harvest concert at St. Paul's Universalist church, which will probably be in about two weeks.

Frank Willis, the driver of the Converse House coach, has been suffering from an injured ankle this week, the result of a kick from a horse.

The Christian Endeavor society will hold a temperance meeting at the Congregational church Sunday evening at 6 o'clock, and all are cordially invited.

The Grand Army post and the Relief Corps will hold a social in G. A. R. hall next Wednesday evening. A spelling school will be the attraction.

The Worcester Cadet Band passed through this place Monday morning en route to Springfield, and proved quite an attraction during the brief stop of the train at the station.

These is a rumor afloat that a new business block will be erected next spring on the vacant lot of the Boston & Albany Railroad Company, between the blocks of F. C. Hatch and H. G. Loomis.

Many Palmer people are planning to attend the Stafford fair next week Tuesday and Wednesday. The New London Northern railroad will run special trains each day, leaving the union station at 9.55 a. m.

John Kinnevan, who fell from an apple-tree the first of the week, sustained quite a severe injury to his hip joint, although he will probably recover the use of his limb. He is at present under the charge of Dr. William Holbrook.

The assignee's sale of books, standing accounts and other indebtedness of the insolvent hardware firm of Brooks Brothers, took place at the Weeks House Saturday morning at 10 o'clock, the purchaser being John Brooks of Westfield.

The recent alterations at the Weeks House make quite a marked change for the better in its interior arrangement. There are many more sleeping apartments than formerly, and the dance hall is fitted up as nicely as could be desired, with an entrance and stairs leading to the south front doors.

Three civil entries were made upon the docket at the district court Saturday. H. A. Northrop vs. J. R. Wellman, action of contract; Gardner for plaintiff, no appearance for defendant. E. F. Magerum et al. vs. Henry Tracey, action of contract; Gardner for plaintiff, defendant defaulted.

The dancing school, which is in charge of Miss Gould at the Weeks House, opened last Friday afternoon with a large attendance. There are nearly thirty pupils in the children's class, and seeing that there is a great demand for an evening class for older enthusiasts, an effort will be made to have one formed which will accommodate the clerks in the stores and others who cannot conveniently devote the afternoon to the pastime.

The union passenger station was wired Saturday morning for the arc system of electric lights, and that same evening the lights were burning brilliantly, and the gas with its disagreeable odor became a thing of the past. In the waiting-room there are two lights, one in the restaurant and another over the platform near the union baggage room. The incandescent lamps have been placed within the glass globes used for gas.

Deputy Sheriff Healey captured Elmer G. Moulton at Springfield Monday evening, who has been wanted since December 21, 1887, for the larceny of a horse at Wales. The prisoner was walking the street very indifferently, accompanied by two other persons, when arrested. He was brought to Palmer where he was given a preliminary hearing in the district court, and in default of $200 bonds was placed in custody to await another hearing in about two weeks.

Tuesday was practically "Palmer's day" at the Bay State fair in Springfield, as the high school closed, while the clerks in the stores and others took a vacation and went to see the innumerable fine exhibits in the buildings and about the grounds. Many from here spent the entire day on the grounds and voiced the sentiments of prominent agriculturists, to the effect that there was a good display of neat cattle, horses, etc., but an exceedingly poor arrangement.

The Prohibition campaign tent was spread on the vacant lot on the corner of Thorndike and Park streets Wednesday, and the meetings have been fairly well attended by men of all kinds of political belief. The speaking is practical in every sense, and intended to win voters for Fisk and Brooks at the coming election. The chilly evenings are rather adverse to a large attendance, although the prime movers in the object need be satisfied. On account of the rain, the meeting to-night will be held in the court room.

E. Goodes came very near being the victim of a shooting accident last Friday afternoon. A man who had been indulging in frequent libations came up to him with a gun which was cocked but "was not loaded," and began handling it in a very careless manner. Mr. Goodes remonstrated when the gun was pointed directly at him, and attempted to gain possession of the weapon. He was again assured that there was nothing in it, but on pointing it toward the ground and pulling the trigger, an explosion proved that if a man had been in front of it he would have fared badly.

The Democratic ratification meeting at Ware Tuesday evening was attended by over 300 persons from this town, including the Democratic battalions from Thorndike and this village, and the Bondsville Brass Band, which accompanied the boys and furnished good music for the occasion. The members of the Cleveland and Thurman Club were all uniformed, the costume consisting of red, white and blue caps with red capes, which arrived from the manufacturers just in time for use, but the uniforms ordered by the Thorndike battalion did not arrive. However, the boys with the little drilling they have had marched quite well, and made a good appearance on the streets of Ware.

Aaron King, a brief mention of whose death at Nashua, N. H., October 31, was made in last week's Journal, was the eldest son of the late Col. King of Palmer, and was born at the old King homestead in this place in 1818. The Nashua Daily Gazette contained the following relating to Mr. King:

> He commenced life as a book-keeper for a concern in Connecticut, and afterwards took to railroading. He was the first passenger conductor on the New London Northern Railroad, and run its first passenger train. After six years service on the road mentioned, he became conductor on the Worcester and Nashua Railroad, a position which he held until 1871, when he resigned and accepted a position as purchasing agent for the Nashua & Rochester Railroad, then being constructed. The road was completed in 1875, and since that time Mr. King has been in retirement from active pursuits; the only position of importance held by him being president of the Londonderry Lithia Spring Company. Mr. King married Elizabeth Ramsdell, of Warren, Mass., in 1852, and shortly after became a resident of Nashua. His marriage was blessed with a son and a daughter, the former of whom died in infancy and the latter, Miss Anna King, survives him, as does his amiable wife. The deceased united with the Pilgrim Church in 1875, and was a faithful and active member of that body. He received all the degrees in masonry, including the 33d and last of the Scottish Rite, and was a member of Worcester County Commandery, Knights Templar, of Worcester, Mass. During his last sickness the Grand body, 33d degree, met in Boston, and, hearing his condition, sent him—beautifully enrolled—a unanimous expression of esteem and invocation for his recovery. In the death of Mr. King his family and friends mourn the loss of a kind and courteous man who never spoke ill of his fellow men, and many of whose generous contributions to the poor and needy were made in places that the world knew not of. At home and abroad, in the inner circles of the order that he loved and honored, in fact in all places and under all circumstances the acquaintances of Aaron King found in him a man whose smile was reassuring, whose conversation was chaste and whose good fellowship added charm and dignity to all surroundings. He will be missed in the home, in the church, in the Masonic councils and upon the streets; those who have known him in life will revere his memory, and many, sincere and truthful will be the eulogies spoken of the Christian gentleman, the loving husband, the tender father and the good citizen.

High School Notes.

The school was given a holiday Tuesday, to visit the Bay-state cattle show.

A foot-ball eleven is being organized, and will be ready in a week or ten days to receive challenges from neighboring elevens, representatives of Monson Academy in particular.

The new building is rapidly approaching completion, and its manifest superiority to any school structure in this vicinity shows the advancement made in school architecture even within a recent period.

Preparations for the high school fair are under full headway. The public will be taken into the confidence of the management in the near future; and into their pockets, it is hoped, in a future only a little more remote.

The base ball nine does not "care to play" the Monson Academy nine again this fall. If the latter combination will practice steadily during the coming winter and spring, possibly they may be able to give a good game next season.

At the present time twenty pupils are taking Greek, with a view to a college course. Is it not better to support a home school capable of doing such work, rather than send these boys and girls to expensive academies and away from home? As a matter of fact not half of them could afford such an expense.

Personal.

Miss S. A. Graves has gone to Middleport, Ohio.

M. E. Haradon has returned from a short visit at Boston.

Charles W. Seargeant and wife, accompanied by W. C. Denney and wife of Boston, who are enjoying an autumnal drive in a dog-cart to Lenox, were guests at the Weeks House Tuesday night. Warren G. Fay, wife and daughter of East Brookfield, who are taking a carriage drive, also registered there the same night.

The Senatorial Convention.

The first Hampden senatorial convention was held at the district court room this morning and not even a ripple of excitement developed to mar the quietude of the occasion. William H. Halle of Springfield called the meeting to order, and after the call had been read Elijah Belding of Springfield was made chairman and W. J. Ricketts of Monson secretary. E. P. Kendrick of Springfield then arose and said substantially that the Springfield delegation came to the convention united upon the man whom they desired to have represent them in the Senate, and who had always been thoroughly successful in every business undertaking, while he had had legislative experience and had been mayor of Springfield. He then proposed the name of Edward D. Metcalf, who was nominated by acclamation, without a dissenting voice. Silas Ruggles of Three Rivers moved that William H. Haile be re-chosen as a member of the state central committee, and the motion was carried. Mr. Haile said he thought it the proper thing to hear from some of those present, regarding the political outlook, and called upon Judge Robinson, who spoke briefly, saying that he believed there would be a sweeping victory for the standard bearers of the Republican party this fall, and hoped that the man just nominated for the Senate would be elected. W. W. Leach followed in the same vein. Mr Haile said that every town in Eastern Hampden is all right, and the prospects are very encouraging, and he believed that the Republicans can carry this senatorial district by 1000 majority if they try, and during the contest about to be waged he hoped the best of feeling would prevail throughout the district. Col. S. C. Warriner of Springfield followed, saying that "there is one thing certain, and that is that the American people are bound to keep American industry and prosperity right side up," and he hoped "the time would come when they could splice the liberty pole and raise protection forty feet higher."

THORNDIKE.

At the Congregational church next Sunday morning the subject will be "Who are these that fly as a cloud, and as the doves to their windows?" Evening service at 7. All are invited.

George Coney and Fred H. Thorn took the vane from the East Congregational church spire on Friday of last week. It is 5 feet 5 inches long and weighs 28 pounds. It is to be regilded and replaced as soon as possible. C. W. Eddy made several photographic views from the spire this week.

The new hose house on East street is occupied. The officers and men from hose company No. 1 who are to report at the new station are James Harrison, foreman; J. Shea and Jerry Spaight, assistants; Patrick Sullivan, clerk; men are Michael Shea, Thomas McNancy, Michael Reilley and J. Dadey.

Charles Cunningham, Jr., who has been clerk in W. A. DeMerritt's drug store since it was started, has accepted a more lucrative position as head clerk in the drug store of H. B. Childs, at Attleboro, Mass. While here he has made many friends among the boys, and no doubt will be remembered by them.

Special meetings were held this week at the chapel Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, at 4.15 and 7.30 p. m. Rev. D. T. Perry is expected to preach a sermon next Sunday morning to the children, and administer the ordinance of baptism to children at a special service in the chapel at 2.30 in the afternoon.

Miss Alice L. Albin, the past four years with S. Bryson as clerk, has tendered her resignation to accept the position of head clerk in the suit department of D. H. Brigham & Co. of Springfield. During her stay in Ware she has made a host of friends who will be sorry to part with her, but will be glad of her promotion to so responsible a position.

The Democratic grand torch-light procession and rally came off Tuesday evening. There were about one hundred and fifty men in line besides the two bands. The Ware men met and escorted from the depot about fifty visitors, through the principal streets to the town hall, where an immense crowd listened to the addresses given by William N. Osgood and William P. Sherrington of Boston. The meeting was presided over by Dr. D. M. Ryan. The speakers and audience seemed quite enthusiastic.

The first Republican rally was held Wednesday evening, preceeded by the throwing to the breeze of a Harrison and Morton flag in front of Sandford's Block. The Cadet Band furnished music, and the flag was run out in the light of colored fires, accompanied by the rousing cheers of the multitude. The flag is a handsome one, bearing the portraits and names of Harrison and Morton, and the motto at the top, "Protection to American Labor." At the town hall the speaker was Frank P. Goulding of Worcester. Campaign songs were distributed and "The Battle has begun," "We'll all feel gay," and "Good-by, Old Grover, Good-by," were sung by the glee club.

JOTTINGS FROM THE HUB.

From our Special Correspondent.

Boston, Oct. 10, 1888.

The Protestant agitators have been beaten in the Boston school committee, and last night the committee voted by fifteen to three against the request of the committee of one hundred for a reversal of their action in ordering the removal of Swinton's history from the schools of Boston. Thus far the Catholics have the best of the contest. A meeting is bulletined for to-night in the Park street church to be addressed by Father Leyden, the "reformed Catholic," so called. It will be remembered that this same man was one of the most prominent agitators before the legislative committee on education last winter, when they were discussing the issue of parochial schools. He is a little man, but so was Luther, though Luther was probably not as excitable as the modern agitator is. These meetings have been well attended and they are always enthusiastic. Rev. Dr. Duryea, pastor of the Central church (Congregational), who is one of the school committee who is in favor of the exclusion of Swinton's history from the schools, used very vigorous language last evening in regard to his fellow Protestant agitators. He said that Swinton's history was removed in the interest of truth, and that he was utterly surprised at the position taken by some in the community. "It was dictated by prejudice, passion, religious prejudice, race prejudice, political prejudice. There is something behind the merits of the book in the matter. It is a rank, partisian, bigoted passion—not to be heeded for a moment." The vote in favor of Swinton's book was given by one Democrat of the old Yankee type and by the two women on the school board, Mrs. Fifield and Miss Dr. Hastings. But the matter will undoubtedly be brought to the attention of the Legislature in its application to the whole state, for the Boston school committee can, of course, decide what book they will have in their public schools.

Another act of the school board last night was significant. An order was adopted requesting the clerk of the school board to report to the board a list of the teachers in the Boston public schools who are living out of town, the places where they live and the amount of their salaries. This is a renewal of a movement which has been made before. Quite a large number of the teachers of the Boston schools live in the suburbs and come and go to their daily work, just as the business men do who live out of the city. Some of those who wish to get more of their friends into the school as teachers would be glad to have vacancies made by cutting off all those who live out of town. Now the fact is that most of those who live out are of the higher grades and are mostly Protestants. If they could be shut out from employment by the passage of an order that only persons permanently residing in the city should be employed as teachers, it would throw open an opportunity for the engagement of a lot of new teachers of a different religious faith from the present incumbents, and it would give them a larger share of the higher salaried positions. It is evident that we are at only the beginning of this agitation.

Then there is the election of the school committee in Boston which will come up in November. The total registration is about 23,000 for the women alone, and they include probably more Catholics than Protestants, judging from the appearance of the crowds at the city hall. The advice of some of the leaders, such as John Boyle O'Reilly of the Pilot, not to engage in the contest, has been counteracted by the work of some of the priests to get their women parishioners to the assessors' office. There has been a prodigious stirring of the sectarian caldron, and we are anxious to see what the outcome will be.

Political matters are becoming more and more lively. Indeed, it is rare that in any year there are more contests in the congressional districts than we have seen this year. Take it among the Republican, they have been not altogether harmonious, to put it very mildly, in the first, second, third, fifth, ninth, tenth and eleventh districts. The Democrats have thus far escaped with only one genuine row, and that has been in the first district. There seems to be no bolt against Mr. Randall, the Republican nominee there, and the district is usually Republican by a large majority. The severe struggle in the second district, which was ended yesterday by the nomination of Councillor Morse, makes the Democrats hopeful that they can carry it. Dr. Burden, the defeated caudidate, said to-day that he was going to do all he could for the election of Morse, and that they would surely elect him. More than this, he predicts that the Republicans will elect the congressmen in every district in the state, except the fourth, and that was intentionally made Democratic with the idea that the Republicans would never make a fight for it. Dr. Burden also predicts that the Republicans will carry the state by a heavy majority. They have been obliged to send their money and men to the doubtful states, and have not much left for home use, but he has no doubt of the result. The state committee has suffered for lack of funds lately and they find it difficult to get as much from Gov. Ames as they think he ought to contribute. But the fact is that the governor has always contributed liberally to the campaign fund, too much, it seems to me, considering the great financial ability of the party as a whole, and especially when compared with the Democrats. Gov. Ames has been very liberal and has given far more than his proportion. If the other wealthy men of the party would only give with half the liberality which he has displayed, there would be no complaint of lack of funds. It cost him something to get the renomination over Draper, and that makes him a little closer now.

The people in the rural districts will want to keep well posted on the standing of their candidates for the state Senate. There is good reason to believe that the oleomargarine interest is awake to the necessities of the case, and will try to get a Senate which will be sure to defeat any such law as that proposed last winter, if it should be proposed again. For two years already have the farmers tried to get the law passed, and have been balked by the oleo interest, and they will be defeated always, if the oleo men can only carry the Senate. They do not need to waste any effort on the House.

When the new Legislature assembles it will find that the state house has been beautified greatly. Every sunshiny day, but those are few and far between, sad to relate, the dome of the state house shines like the morning sun. It can be seen in every direction with its luster whenever the sun is shining. How this can be so, one can easily prove by seeing how the light is reflected from any spherical surface. Then the inside of the state house will be more attractive in some respects. The legislators will sit in seats which have been newly furbished, and the character of their laws ought to be as fair as their material surroundings. The one thing which will bear on them with heavy responsibility is the prohibitory amendment, which the Republicans are pledged to pass. LANDON.

"There are millions in it," said a druggist when asked about Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup. Price 25 cts.

The desire to hear Miss Marie Howe of Brattleboro, and the great furore she has created everywhere by her youth, beauty, and her phenominal voice, has been unequalled by any recent singer. Our concert-going public will be glad to learn that she will appear in a grand benefit concert in City hall, Springfield, Oct. 26. The assisting artists will be of a high order, including Teresa Carreno, who is to-day the most facinating and satisfying pianist; M. W. Whitney, the famous basso, and one or two other artists yet to be announced. The arrangements are in charge of C. N. Stimpson & Co, the well known music dealers, and the sale of seats opens October 18.

For some time past I've been a rheumatic. I recently tried Salvation Oil which gave me almost instant relief. I sincerely recommend it as it has entirely cured me.—JAMES GORDON, Baltimore, Md.

Do not allow the accumulation of scurf or dandruff, when it can be entirely prevented by the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor.

To-Night and To-Morrow Night,

And each day and night during this week you can get at all druggists Kemp's Balsam for the throat and lungs, acknowledged to be the most successful remedy ever sold for the cure of coughs, croup, bronchitis, whooping cough, asthma and consumption. Get a bottle to-day and keep it always in the house, so you can check your cold at once. Price 50c and $1.00. Sample bottle free.

A Good Investment For Small Savings.

Just fifteen years ago a resident of Kansas City purchased from the Equitable Life Assurance Society of New York, policy No. 83,188. His annual payments were $345.45, and the total payments for 15 years amounted to $5181.75.

The policy was for $5000, and if he had died his estate would have received $5000 cash. But he did not die, and after 15 years of protection has drawn from the Society, $7357.15 in money.

This is a cash return of $142 for each $100 paid in premiums—i. e., a return of all premiums, with compound interest, at the rate of 4¼ per cent per annum. This policy was on the Tontine plan, and its result proves that a life policy when issued by the Equitable on its Tontine plan, combines a good investment with the benefits of assurance. The manager of the Equitable is Henry K. Simons, whose office is at 425 Main street, Springfield, Mass.

I have not used all of one bottle yet. I suffered from catarrh for 12 years, experiencing the nauseating droppings in the throat peculiar to that disease, and nose bled almost daily. I tried various remedies without benefit until last April, when I saw Ely's Cream Balm advertised in the Boston Budget. I procured a bottle, and since the first day's use have had no more bleeding—the soreness is entirely gone.—D. G. DAVIDSON, with the Boston Budget, formerly with the Boston Journal.

Tried and True

Friends are scarce, but if you are suffering with that horrible disease, scrofula, you will find Sulphur Bitters will cure you as it did me, after suffering eight years, and paying out hundreds of dollars to doctors and druggists.—JEANNETTE HANSCOM, Troy, N. Y.

A Skin Without Blemish.

Secure it by sending ten cents in stamps to W. E. & W. P. Thayer, 231 Savin Hill, Boston, for sample box of Cream of Mecca and valuable book. Send address of four lady friends.

No Other

As good. This is the statement of Prof. Smith, Analytical Chemist; I have analyzed all of the popular blood purifiers and medicines now sold. Many of them I have found to be worthless, some dangerous to use. Sulphur Bitters contains nothing poisonous, and I think it is the best blood purifier made.

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria,
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria,
When she was a Miss, she clung to Castoria.
When she had Children she gave them Castoria.

Interested People.

Advertising a patent medicine in the peculiar way in which the proprietor of Kemp's Balsam, for Coughs and Colds, does it is indeed wonderful. He authorizes all druggists to give to those who call for it a sample bottle free, that they may try it before purchasing. The large bottles are 50c. and $1.00. We certainly would advise a trial. It may save you from consumption.

When your blood is impoverished the remedy is at hand. Take Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Advice to Mothers.

Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of cutting teeth? If so, send at once and get a bottle of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures dysentery and diarrhœa, regulates the stomach and bowels, cures wind colic, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING is pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female nurses and physicians in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price 25 cents a bottle. 1y23

BUCKLEN'S ARNICA SALVE.

THE BEST SALVE in the world for Cuts, Bruises, Sores, Ulcers, Salt Rheum, Fever Sores, Tetter, Chapped Hands, Chilblains, Corns, and all Skin Eruptions, and positively cures Piles, or no pay required. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction, or money refunded. Price 25 cents per box. For Sale by Legro & Lynde. 1y29

Some Things Learned by Experience.

That a tablespoonful of salt thrown on a coal fire that is low, will cause it to burn up quickly. That you can clean oil cloth with milk and water; while soap and brush will ruin it. That the skin of a boiled egg is the best remedy you can apply to a boil. That you can't cure Rheumatism or Neuralgia without taking Menard's Rheumatic Bullets. That you can buy them of LeGro & Lynde for $1.00 per bottle. eow7

PERSONAL.

Mr. N. H. Frohlichstein, of Mobile, Ala., writes: I take great pleasure in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, having used it for a severe attack of Bronchitis and Catarrh. It gave me instant relief and entirely cured me and I have not been afflicted since. I also beg to state that I had tried other remedies with no good result. Have also used Electric Bitters and Dr. King's New Life Pills, both of which I can recommend.

Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds, is sold on a positive guarantee. Trial bottle free at LeGro & Lynde's Drug Store. 1y29

WONDERFUL CURES.

W. D. Hoyt & Co., wholesale and retail druggists of Rome, Ga., say: We have been selling Dr. King's New Discovery, Electric Bitters and Bucklen's Arnica Salve for four years. Have never handled remedies that sell as well, or give such universal satisfaction. There have been some wonderful cures effected by these medicines in this city. Several cases of pronounced Consumption have been entirely cured by use of a few bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery, taken in connection with Electric Bitters. We guarantee them always. Sold by LeGro & Lynde. 1y29

3-28 OLIVE H. BAKER.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS,— HAMPDEN, SS. September 28th, A. D. 1888. By virtue of an execution which issued on a judgment recovered in the District Court of Eastern Hampden in said county, on the fourth day of August, A. D. 1888, in favor of Lorenzo Hutchinson of Monson, in said county, and against John Barry and James Barry, both of said Monson, I have this day taken all the right, title and interest which the said defendants or either of them have, including the right to redeem any of the said tracts of land hereinafter mentioned which may be subject to mortgage, to wit: A tract of land containing four and one-half acres, situate in said Monson, and bounded and described as follows, beginning at a stake and stones at the northwest corner of the lot and running southerly about twenty-five rods to a stake and stones, thence easterly on land formerly owned by Alston Calkins about twenty-seven rods to a stake and stones, thence northerly on land now or formerly of George S. Harvey about twenty-four rods to a stake and stones, thence westerly to the first mentioned bound; also a tract of land containing about sixteen acres, situate in said Monson and bounded southerly by land of Hiram Stacey, westerly by land of James Fitzgerald, northerly by highway leading from Monson to Wilbraham, and easterly by land of Patrick Carroll and land of William N. Flynt; also three other tracts of land situate in Monson and joining each other, and being a part of the Rodolphus Homer farm so-called, the first tract containing twelve acres and 133 rods more or less, and is same known as the south pasture lot, the second tract contains nine and one-half acres more or less. and is same known as the south mowing lot, the third tract contains twenty-eight and three-fourths acres more or less, and is same known as the west pasture, said three tracts being full described in deed of James G. Allen to said James Barry, dated May fourth, A. D. 1874, and recorded in Hampden Registry of deeds, book 313, page 490, and on Thursday, the first day of November next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, in front of the Court House in Palmer in said county, I shall offer for sale by public auction to the highest bidder said right, title and interest, including the right to redeem any of said tracts which may be subject to mortgage, to satisfy said executon and all fees and charges of sale.

What Ayer's Cherry Pectoral has done and is doing for thousands in the cure of Coughs, Colds, Pneumonia, Bronchitis and even Consumption? For this class of complaints, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral stands far ahead of all other specifics.

George W. Dick, of Newton, Mass., says: "Two years ago I took a severe cold, which, being neglected, was followed by lost flesh rapidly, had night sweats, and was soon confined to my bed. A friend advised the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I began to take this medicine and before finishing the first bottle was able to sit up. Four bottles effected a perfect cure."

A TERRIBLE COUGH.

For the Blood.

NO MERCURY, NO POTASH,

OR ANY OTHER MINERAL POISON.

It is Nature's Remedy, made exclusively from Roots and Herbs.

It is perfectly Harmless.

It is the only remedy known to the world that has ever yet Cured contagious Blood Poison in all its stages.

It cures Mercurial Rheumatism, Cancer, Scrofula, and other blood diseases heretofore considered incurable. It cures any disease caused from impure blood. It is now prescribed by thousands of the best physicians in the United States, as a tonic. We append the statement of a few:

"I have used S. S. S. on patients convalescing from fever and from measles, with the best results.
J. N. CHENEY, M. D.,
Ellaville, Ga."

BREMEN, GA.—Willie White was afflicted with scrofula seven years. I prescribed S. S. S., and to-day he is a fat and robust boy.
C. W. PARKER, M. D.

RICHMOND, VA., Dec. 15, 1885.—I have taken three bottles of Swift's Specific for secondary blood poison. It acts much better than potash or any other remedy I have ever used.
B. F. WINFIELD, M. D.,
Formerly of Sussex Co., Va.

DR. E. J. HALE, the well-known druggist and physician, of Nashville, Howard County, Ark., writes: "Having some knowledge as to what S. S. S. is composed of, I can safely recommend it as the remedy for all skin diseases, it matters not what the name may be."

We have a book giving a history of this wonderful remedy, and its cures, from all over the world, which will convince you that all we say is true, and which we will mail free on application. No family should be without it. We have another on Contagious Blood Poison, sent on same terms.

Write us a history of your case, and our physician will advise with you by letter, in strictest confidence. We will not deceive you knowingly.

SULPHUR BITTERS.

THE BEST AND PUREST MEDICINE EVER MADE.

It will drive the Humor from your system, and make your skin clean and smooth. Those pimples and blotches which mar your beauty and caused by impure blood, can be removed in a short time, if you are wise and use the great blood purifier, SULPHUR BITTERS.

DON'T GIVE UP! What makes you tremble so? Your nerves are all unstrung, and need a gentle, soothing tonic to assist nature to repair the damage which your excesses have caused. SULPHUR BITTERS is NOT a cheap rum or poor whisky drink, to be taken by the glass, like other preparations, which stimulate only to destroy. Why suffer with Boils? Why rave with that terrible headache? Why lay and toss on the that bed of pain with Rheumatism?

If you have failed to receive any benefit from other medicines or doctors, do not despair Use SULPHUR BITTERS. They will cure you where all others fail. No person can remain long sick who uses SULPHUR BITTERS.

The dose is small—only a teaspoonful. It is the best and cheapest medicine. Try it, and you will be satisfied. Get it of your druggist. Don't wait, get it at once. If you are suffering from Kidney Disease, and wish to live to old age, use SULPHUR BITTERS. They never fail to cure. SULPHUR BITTERS.

Epigrams.

A pompous attorney, while trying a cause,
Was quizzing a witness and looking for flaws.
The witness who owed him a personal grudge,
Provoked him until he appealed to the judge.
"I demand, sir," he cried, with a fiery-red face,
"A little attention while trying this case."
"Your honor," responded the meek little man,
"I'm paying as little as any one can."
The judge, with a frown,
Looked solemnly down
On the squabble, and said, from the bench where he sat,
"We want nothing but silence, and little of that."

Said young Romeo Butts to Miss Claribel Cutts,
(As they stood in a parlor resplendent with light)
With a wearisome sigh, "Oh! I cannot tell why,
But somehow I feel like a fool here to-night."
Said Miss Claribel Cutts to Romeo Butts,
With a pitiless smile that she could not conceal:
"Yes, your face would betray, I am sure, what you say,
For you certain look all you say that you feel,

"Oh! husband," said Mrs. Ophelia McMunn,
As she gazed at her willful and passionate son,
"Where that boy got his temper I never could see;
I'm certain he never could take it from me."
"No doubt, my dear wife, your assertion is true—
I never have missed any temper from you."
—Chicago Tribune.

"You want a position in my store, do you, miss," said the kind-hearted merchant. "You don't look as if you had had much experience in selling goods. I have only one place vacant now. It's the soap department in the basement, and the salary is only $1.75 a week. But my wife informed me this morning she needed another girl in her kitchen. If you would like that place she will give you $4 a week and a good home. Which would you prefer?" "I'll take the soaplady position, sir," was the haughty reply.—Chicago Tribune.

MILK HOSPITALS OF NEW YORK.

Not all the world knows that there are such things as milk hospitals in the suburbs of this city. The idea is a German one. These hospitals are for the cure of every physical ill, on the principle of making the blood entirely over and keeping it pure by taking milk, milk, nothing but milk as food for weeks, months, years. In fact, the doctors of milk hospitals fix upon three years as the limit of time necessary to make a patient completely over. Then, if he wants to stay made over, he is advised to keep on with the milk diet and leave solid food alone for the remainder of his days. When a patient enters the hospital he is at once treated to six quarts of milk a day, which is increased gradually to eleven and twelve. This seems an incredible amount for any one, particularly an invalid, to consume, but the facts are as stated. The milk is administered in cupfuls every ten or fifteen minutes, and must be drank slowly, sipped as a Parisian takes his absinthe.

Sometimes the patient grows deathly sick at the very sight of milk, early in the action. Perseverance is the only medicine he takes to overcome this nausea. Whether he gets sick or well he is sure to get fat; and the fatter he gets the more does the doctor rejoice. He is weighed in the balance daily and never found wanting. Should he not climb up into the hundred weights fast enough, a quart or so more is added to his daily allowance of milk. Meanwhile, while he drinks the milk, he is expected to lie abed all the time, his only recreation being a daily bath in hot water. After he is satisfactorily made over and pronounced well, he drops down to a gallon of milk per day and gets on famously. Ladies take to the milk cure more readily than men do. Some of them have found it beneficial for the restoration of broken down nerves, but they deplore the excessive flesh it brings with it.—N. Y. Press, "Every Day Talk."

ORIGINAL MARRIAGE CEREMONY.

One of the waiters at the hotel in Grenada, Miss., told us a colored wedding was coming off that evening, and several white people went over to the house designated to witness the affair. The happy couple finally stood up before the minister, who said:—

"Samuel, you an' Lucinda am shortly to be jined together. Does you desire to back out?"

"No, sah."

"How am it wid you, Lucinda. Does you want to flunk afore dese yere white folks?"

"No, sah."

"Den you two hitch hands."

They hitched.

"Samuel, does you take her fur better or wuss? Am you gwine to do de f'ar thing by dis yere gurl, whos' fadder was killed on the railroad up nigh Jackson?"

"Yes, sah."

"Lucinda, does you realize the seriousness of this opportunity? Am you gwine to stick to Samuel clean frew to de judgment day, or am you gwine to trifle around arter other men?"

"Ize gwine to stick."

"Den, chil'en, in the presence of dese yere white men from the Norf, one of whom subscribed two bits yesterday to help build de meetin' house dat was blowed down by de sighclone, I denounce you as hitched, jined and mar'd cordin' to the law an' gospel. Now you go 'long an' behave yerselves!"—Ex.

HISTORY OF A LOCOMOTIVE.

There lately entered the Grand Central depot a locomotive with a tragic history. It was the locomotive which drew a train to the first frightful railroad accident that ever occurred. Up to 1848, while there had been some catastrophies on the railroads, there had been none accompanied by great slaughter, but that year this engine drew a part of a train on the New Haven road into an open draw at Norwalk and caused a great loss of life. The accident was the sensation of the year. The engine was fished out and repaired, and has been running on the road ever since.

A singular circumstance connected with this accident is that it indirectly proved the fortune of the man whose incorrect signals caused it. He fled and settled in western Pennsylvania, and was the victim for many years of remorseful reflections on his carelessness. But it was this man who first dug an oil well in what is now the oil region, and developed this colossal industry.—New York Evening Sun.

WHAT THE PROMISED LAND FLOWED WITH.

Little children sometimes give strange answers to questions propounded on the subject of the Promised Land. A Sunday-school teacher once asked:—

"Who led out the Isralites?"

"Moses," was the prompt reply.

"And from where did he lead them?"

"From bondage," answered several.

"And to where did he take them!"

"To the Promised Land, sir."

"That's right, my little dears. Now what did the land flow with?"

"With honey," said three or four.

"And what else?"

Here was a sticker—no reply.

"Come children, some of you surely remember. When you were babies, what did your mamma give you? What else did the Promised Land flow with besides honey?"

Again a blank pause.

"I know thir," said a four-year-older, springing to his feet, and elevating his hand. "I know what it wath, thir. I know thir."

"What was it, my dear?"

"It was titty, sir!"

The teacher, amid the laughter of the adult spectators, proceeded to change the subject by singing a hymn.

A Frenchman of this city having received the photograph of a lady, asked a friend what was customary under the circumstances.

"Compliment it," said the friend. "Tell her its beauty is very rare."

"I beg to make ze acknowledgmong, madam," he said to her at their next meeting. "Zee beauty of madame is vair scarce."

A little pamphlet called "Humor in ye Sixteenth Century," shows that ye joker of that period borrowed a great deal of his wit from ye humorist of ye 19th century, without giving a particle of credit.—Norristown Herald.

A FAIR TRIAL

for scrofula, salt rheum, or any affection caused by impure blood, is sufficient to convince any one of the superior and peculiar curative powers of this medicine. The following statement is right to the point.

"My daughter Mary was afflicted with scrofulous sore neck from the time she was 22 months old till she became 6 years of age. Lumps formed in her neck, causing great annoyance, and two of them, after growing to the size of a pigeon's egg, broke and discharged. One became a running sore for three years. We thought we would give Hood's Sarsaparilla a thorough trial. We began with it in January, and in a few months, after she had taken five bottles, all supperation had ceased. We then waited three months, when, as a new lump was beginning to form, we again gave her Hood's Sarsaparilla. After she had taken less than two bottles the lump and all indications of scrofula had entirely disappeared, and now she seems to be a healthy child."—J. S. Carlile, Nauright, N. J.

CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER.

THE PUREST AND BEST.

Is made only of strictly pure grape cream of tartar, strictly pure bicarbonate of soda, and a small portion of flour as a preservative, nothing else whatever, and is warranted entirely free from alum, ammonia, phosphates, lime, and all other adulterations frequently found in baking powders. The character of materials used, their purity, and the nicety of their combination, render Cleveland's superior baking powder the most healthful and most economical in use, and it always affords wholesome, nutritious, and delicious food.

It is recommended for purity, healthfulness and efficiency by government and state chemists, chemists of boards of health, and professors in institutions of learning throughout the country.

BREAKFAST.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavored beverage which may save us heavy doctor's bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nurished frame."—Civil Service Gazette. Made simply with boiling water or milk. ### Why This Dunning.

Should you ask us why this dunning,
Why these sad complaints and murmurs,
Murmurs loud about delinquents
Who have read the paper weekly,
Read what they have never paid for,
Read with pleasure and with profit,
Read of church fairs and prospects,
Read of news both home and foreign,
Read the essays and the poems,
Full of wisdom and instruction,
Should you ask us, Why this dunning?
We should answer, we should tell you:

"From the printer, from the mailer,
From the kind old paper-maker,
From the landlord, from the carrier,
From the man who taxes letters
With a stamp from Uncle Samuel—
'Uncle Sam' the rowdies call him;

"From them all there comes a message,
Message kind and firmly spoken,
'Please to pay us what you owe us.'
Sad it is to hear such message,
When our funds are all exhausted,
When the last bank note had left us,
When the gold coin all had vanished,
Gone to pay the paper-maker,
Gone to pay the toiling printer,
Gone to pay the landlord tribute,
Gone to pay the nimble carrier,
Gone to pay the faithful mailer,
Gone to pay our Uncle Samuel—
'Uncle Sam' the rowdies call him.

"Would you lift a burden from us?
Would you drive a spectre from you?
Would you taste a pleasant slumber?
Would you have a quiet conscience?
Would you read a paper PAID FOR?
Send us money—send us money—
Send us money—send us money—
Send us the money that you owe us!"

TOLD ON A PULLMAN.

"Don't take it, did you say? Well, I'm glad I can say that I can take it or leave it, as I please," and the young fellow who had invited his traveling acquaintance to drink, screwed the flask's cover down, fitted on its drinking cap and replaced it in his pocket.

"I always carry a little of the right sort A 1," he said, with an air of superior worldiness. "Are you a teetotaller, sir?"

"I don't like the word 'teetotaller,' but I never drink. I dare not," repeated the older man.

On flew the train, the car swaying, the rattle becoming a roar when the door opened, the stillness at stopping places emphasized by the sough of wind and the beating of rain. Still neither of the men left the smoking compartment of the Pullman car. The younger traveler became absorbed in a bundle of formal-looking letters, over which he smoked a cigar before speaking again.

"It must be late," he said, looking up.

"What! After eleven o'clock? Well, I'll have another taste and go to my berth. You're about the most silent companion I've fallen in with, sir. Every time I've looked up for two hours I've observed you looking at me seriously. See anything wrong?"

"I've been wondering what your alert face will be like in ten years."

"A regular sober-sides face, you may depend on that. Full of business—that's what I'm going in for."

"Well, I hope it may be. Somehow I find myself taking extraordinary interest in the question. If you will permit me, I'll tell you why."

"Teetotal story, sir?" said the young man, banteringly.

"You might call it that."

"I guess I must have heard it already. Teetotal stories are mighty stale."

"Degradation through drink is a tragedy ever stale, and ever freshly illustrated. I was going to tell you a personal experience."

"You don't look like a reformed drunkard, sir."

"No, I never drank. But I dearly loved one who did. Shall I tell you about him?

"If it will not be too painful, sir," said the young fellow, moved to sympathy by something in his companion's tone.

"Well, first read a part of a letter I received some time ago," said the older man, taking out a huge pocket-book, in which there were many papers, from which he extracted the letter, and folded this passage down.

The young fellow took it, and read, with a strong sensation of intruding upon private grief:—

"Ah, my dear fellow, I have three little children and a wife whose child-like and innocent life should have led me to better things. Many a care and many a sorrow she has had since she has married me, and many a time, God knows, I've been deeply penitent to have given her cause for grief.

But I have the restless blood of a drunkard in my veins, and it carries me away to dreadful and disgraceful sprees. I promise—I swear off—I protest by all that's good and holy that liquor shall never pass my lips again, but all to no purpose. A craving—a devil—takes possession, and after weeks, or even months, of abstention I break out and degrade myself and shame my children, and heap misery on them and my wife.

The old year is closing as I write, and the new comes up before me like an enemy—so much do I feel my weakness. That God may close my old life and open a new and better one to me is the cry of my heart to-night. For if I do not find strength, that the past gives me no hope of gaining, before the leaves of next summer wither I shall fill a drunkard's grave and leave my wife and little ones to the mercy of the world.

"Surely the man who wrote that never drank again," said the young traveler, handing back the page.

"I will tell you. That letter was written by my own brother. I had not seen him for several years. He was a lawyer, practicing in a place far from me or any of our family. We all had thought of him as a prosperous and happy man. His marriage had set at rest some fears excited by his earlier life. You can understand that that letter was a dreadful shock to me. His reference to the drunkard's blood in his veins had a significance for me that you cannot understand, for on one side of parentage, I come of a family that has suffered beyond telling through the drinking habit. Clever men in it; witty, great-hearted fellows, much loved, popular, eloquent. One was a supreme court judge; two were among the foremost orators of their native state. Their fame blazed up in their very youth. It declined just as men began to expect something really great of them. It ended before middle age in drunkenness and death. A miserable record, sir!" sighed the traveler.

"On the other side," he continued, "my relatives are steady going people, without any brilliant qualities. I take after them, and remembering the others, I have never dared to taste liquor."

"But my brother did dare. You remember your expression awhile ago:—'I am glad I can say that I can take it, or leave it alone, as I please!' How often I had heard the very words and tone from poor Randal. Just about your age he must have been when he used to meet my expostulations by that perennial boast of young men.

"'What's the use of telling me about my uncles, Fred?' he would say. 'They craved liquor. I never touch it, except for the sake of a little jollity. I can take it, or leave, it as I please.'

"But I'll not weary you by details of his youthful escapades. As I said, we believed him to have turned over a new leaf after his marriage in a distant state. He brought his wife home to us for a few weeks—a lovely, golden-haired young creature. Well! well! there's no use telling about that.

"He had finally sworn off then, he said, and they were very happy. After that I knew nothing more of him than that he reported, in occasional letters, the growth of his family and his prosperity.

"The sad letter which you have read came after a wide gap in our correspondence. I instantly determined to make time for a long visit to him, and wrote him to that effect. He responded joyfully, and in early summer I made the journey.

"On arriving at the village I was surprised that he did not meet me. Inquiring where Randal's office was, the stationmaster told me that he would not probably be at his office that day; 'he was a little out of sorts,' the man had heard. 'I would find him at home; it wasn't far,' and the railway man gave me directions.

"Following them I walked on through a pretty little town of comfortable brick houses and shady, sandy streets—a most peaceful place. Reaching its outskirts as instructed, I soon faced a handsome house, with an extensive lawn in front, well kept, with flower beds and many evidences of care.

"I had associated my brother's confession with the drunkenness seen in my own town, and conceived of him as being miserably poor; hence I was a good deal relieved by the appearance of prosperity about his residence.

"'Pooh!' I said to myself, going up the gravel path, 'he has exaggerated his vice. No doubt he had taken too much about Christmas time, and was suffering from a bad headache in consequence.'

"As I approached, it struck me as rather strange that no one was to be seen about the house. I observed that the garden ran far back to a cedar wood or swamp, and from this wood I thought I heard faint shouts.

"I ascended the veranda steps. Not a face appeared at the windows. As I rang the bell, I heard a child crying within. With the faint jangle that came to me, the cry ceased. I stood expectant. The child again began its wail, but no one came. I rang again and again. With each sound of the bell the child's voice ceased, to rise again as the tinkle died away. Much puzzled, I went around to the rear wing.

"The kitchen-door stood wide open, a bright fire was in the stove, there were dishes unwashed and food in course of preparation, but no servants. Entering, I looked into three comfortable rooms, finding no person. In the fourth, a large sitting-room, a very little girl sat in the middle of the floor, surrounded by toys. I knew at once that she must be little Flora, my brother's youngest—his pet, being the youngest girl—a baby of something more than two years.

"She looked up at me, round-eyed with wonder. 'Is this little Flora?' I asked.

"'I's papa's little girl,' she answered, very distinctly. 'Papa! papa!' and she began to cry again.

"Unwilling though she was, I took her in my arms and soon managed to soothe her by the ticking of my watch. Then I carried her through every room in the house without finding another soul.

"Trying in vain to account for the desertion, I returned down stairs and to the kitchen. As I reached it, two small boys came in—little Randal and Fred. I knew them from photographs.

"They stared at me with alarm. Both had been crying, I could see. When I told them I was Uncle Fred they came to me shyly.

"'And where are papa and mamma?' I asked.

"The little fellows hung their heads. 'Papa is sick,' said Randal, the elder, hesitatingly.

"'But where is he?'

"'He got up and ran out,' said the poor little man, raising a chubby hand to his eyes.

"And where are mamma and all the rest?

"'Mamma didn't know papa had gone till he was near into the woods,' he said, pointing to the rear of the garden, 'and then she ran after him, and she called Kitty and Jane and Thomas, and we ran after them, and they sent us home to take care of the baby. They can't find papa, and he's lost,' so my little nephew explained through his sobs.

"Scarcely had he done speaking when a man appeared at the edge of the wood, and soon afterwards a group following him. Then he stopped, turned, and shook his fist at them.

"'Go 'way! Lemme alone! Don' come near me!' and I recognized my brother's voice.

"Those who followed seemed either to fear or to humor him, for they kept their distance. On he came, tumbling over the fence into the garden. Then he picked himself up, reeled, steadied himself, lurched forward again, and sometimes running, but always keeping his feet, approached me.

"The boys, crying and shuddering, stood clutching me till he was two-thirds of the way up the garden.

"'Come, Freddy,' said little Randal with a sudden recollection, 'we mustn't see papa when he's sick,' and led the other in.

"It was the most piteous child's voice—the most pathetic thing—those two little lads, fond and ashamed of their own father!

"He came on, not noticing me till within a few paces. He was unshod and only half clad, just as he had run out in semi-delirium, and had been staggering through mud and water.

"At last he stopped, looked at me in evident recognition, trying to control his swaying; then, as if unconscious of any shame, came towards me.

"'It's you, Fred. When'd you come? Why din' you lemme know, Fred?'

"His hand closed like a vise on mine; his whole strength—and he was a very large, powerful man—seemed to fly to his fingers; but his fingers trembled as he grasped mine.

"I could not speak. He looked stupidly into my face, with half-open, bloodshot eyes, for a few moments; then, ignoring me as completely as if I had always been there, reached out his arm for Florry.

"'Come to papa—thass papa's dear lill girl.' At his husky, affectionate, distressing voice I strained the child closer, but she held out her arms to him, and staggering forward, he grasped her.

"Kissing and fondling little Florence, he entered the kitchen and cautiously ascended the steps leading to the hall. I kept my hand on his arm, and of this support he seemed wholly unconscious. It was plain that his debauch had been a long one, for his hair was neglected, his beard of a week's growth.

"My brother fell into a chair, still fondling his little daughter, and looked dumbly around. I seemed no more to him than any senseless object in the room. To me, this sodden, silent man was as one I had never known, so changed was his from the bright, alert face of which yours has reminded me."

The young traveler shifted uneasily, and the tale again went on.

"Soon I heard voices, and left the room to meet my brother's wife. Poor Lucy! I was ashamed to meet her, ashamed that she should know that I had seen him; I wished that I could have escaped unobserved. Little did I know how far past the pangs of vain efforts to conceal her husband's vice the poor girl had got!

"She came silently to me unsurprised—not to be surprised by anything in life. Her fair hair, that I remembered as seeming blown about her flower-like face, was smooth and lank on each side her forehead. She was very pale, and oh, how old she looked! Her eyes—they give tragedy to black-eyed women—I could not have believed that such settled misery could ever look forth from eyes of blue.

"She did not weep, she did not speak. Holding my hand, she only looked at me with those hopeless eyes.

"Seeing us, the servant who had entered went back and closed the door. Then the little boys stole softly down, hand in hand, averting their looks of shame from the room where their father sat, and, standing by their mother, covered their faces in her skirts.

"Not a word was uttered in the group, and the hall clock above us ticked and ticked its strokes of doom.

"We could hear the unconscious baby crowing, and my brother's affectionate mumbling to her.

"'Papa's lill girl—papa's dear lill baby girl.'

"Sir, I don't think I can tell you the rest," said the narrator, dashing his hand across his eyes. The young traveler sat silently with downcast looks.

"Well, we stood for some little time, listening. Then my brother said, coaxingly, 'Papa 'll leave lill girl down, 'n go'n see lill girl's Uncle Fred.' At the same time he rose, and we entered.

"Let me take the baby, Randal," said Lucy very gently.

"Go way, Lucy dear! Mustn't in'fere with baby," he expostulated with drunken, not unkindly gravity.

"But you want to go upstairs, don't you Randal dear?"

"Yes, I wan' to go 'pstairs. Go'n' set baby down firs' 'n' give her toys. You oughtn't take baby, Lucy; she's too heavy—must take care not to hurt yourself, Lucy."

The survival of his affection through his degradation was, somehow, more heartbreaking than violence from him.

I did not think he could set the child down, but refusing to be assisted in the least, he stooped very carefully, though swaying a little, and placed her again among her playthings on the floor. For a few moments he stood leaning, smiling down on her drunkenly, fumbling his fingers without sound in attempting to snap them for her amusement. The child looked up into his face, and held out her arms.

"'Baby want to kiss papa,' he said in a gratified tone, and stooped lower. And then, before either of us could reach him, he fell forward full length, his whole weight crushing little Florry down.

"She cried out and seemed to smother. The next instant he had rolled aside, and there the little, lovely child lay, bleeding at the mouth.

"The poor mother, with a shriek, took her baby to her heart. It sighed, sighed—and lay still. Randal, by my aid, had reached his feet. The struggling fear, hope and horror of his face I shall never forget!

"'Baby,' he said, stooping down, 'Baby, look at papa. Baby—just once—look at papa. O my God! Lucy, have I killed my little baby girl?'

Even so it was, for little Florry never held out her arms to him again, The mother—but I need not describe the anguish of that household. We hardly knew when my brother recovered from the insanity of liquor, for it was followed by the delirium of brain fever. There he lay for a fortnight, talking constantly of Florry, and when consciousness returned still lay there, exhausted, silent, a mere wreck, often dumbly. Two months elasped before he left his room.

"He could never look at liquor again?" questioned the traveler.

"Sir, he swore he never would," cried the older man, "swore it, as his letter says, by all that was good and holy. And even between his protests, he said to me, 'I can't keep from it, Fred, I could not believe that he judged truly of his weakness, but he knew it too well—it was no longer for him to take it or leave it alone.

One day, when we believed him safe at his office, he entered the house, looking, I thought, remarkably well. But when Lucy saw his face, she sprang up with a bitter trembling cry. He stood, as if listening, at the door of the room, looking in.

"Lucy, where's little Florry? I want to take her out with me," he said in a perfect natural voice.

Though quite steady on his legs, and with perfect control of his utterances he had drunk himself into absolute forgetfulness!

And from that day out he could not be restrained. He would have liquor. Again and again he escaped from the room in which we tried to confine him. His cunning and agility were preternatural. The demon that he had dared to trifle with never left him afterwards, and at last, searching for him after an escape in the night, we found him half-naked, face down, quite dead, in a ditch.

"Oh, horrible! sir, most horrible," said the young traveler.

"And now I ask you whether I can credit any man who says of liquor that he 'can take it, or leave it alone?' The most helpless sot you know began with that belief. You hold it firmly, and I wish I could have a clearer vision of what your face will be in ten years."

The young traveler took from his pocket the flask which had led to the story, and poured its A 1 contents into the wash-basin of that Pullman car. That was nearly eleven years ago, and when he told me this story, or its substance, yesterday, it came from the firm lips of a prosperous man, saved from temptation.

ARCTIC COLD.

"It is impossible to form any idea of a tempest in the polar seas. The icebergs are like floating rocks whirled along a rapid current. The huge crystal mountains dash against each other, backward and forward bursting with a roar like thunder, and returning to the charge until, loosing their equilibrium, they tumble over in a cloud of spray, upheaving the ice-fields, which fall afterward like the crack of a whip-lash on the boiling sea. The sea gulls fly away screaming, and often a black shining whale comes for an instant puffing to the surface. When the midnight sun grazes the horizon, the floating mountains and the rocks seem immersed in a wave of beautiful light. The cold is by no means so insupportable as might be supposed. We passed from a heated cabin at 30° above zero to 47° below zero in the open air without inconvenience. A much higher degree of cold becomes, however, insufferable if there is wind. At 15° below zero a steam, as if from a boiling kettle, rises from the water. At once, frozen by the wind, it falls into a fine powder. This phenomenon is called sea smoke. At 40° the snow and human bodies also smoke, which smoke at once changes into millions of tiny particles, like needles of ice, which fill the air and make a light continuous noise like the rustle of a stiff silk. At this temperature the trunks of trees burst with a loud report, the rocks break up, and the earth opens and vomits smoking water. Knives break in cutting butter. Cigars go out by contact with the ice on the beard. To talk is fatiguing. At night the eyelids are covered with a crust of ice, which must be carefully removed before one can open them."—St. Nicholas.

A PULPIT DIGRESSION.

The old-fashioned clergyman in old times used to be very good judges of horseflesh. They had to be, for they did most of their traveling on horseback. The story goes of a noted circuit preacher in southern New Hampshire, that he once gave most unexpected testimony to his keenness as a critic and judge. It was a still Sunday in midsummer. Every window in the church was wide open. The air seemed hardly to move. The buzzing of the locusts in the field came in from afar, and accompanying was the scent of the pines from the grove near the sacred edifice. Not far distant was a wooden bridge. The preacher had completed the treatment of the fifteenth "head of the discourse" and was pausing an instant on the verge of the sixteenthly. Just then was heard the clear, measured footfall of a trotting horse passing over the bridge. The pastor paused and looked at his congregation; the congregation looked at the pastor. Then said the pastor in a tone of confident judgment, and with a touch of certainty of general agreement in his tone:—

"Mighty even trotting beast that! Sixteenthly, my hearers," and the sermon was continued.

Bell telephone earned $2,000 000 last year. All because "people will talk," you know.

What's It Good For?

What's it good for, beer or whisky?
Good to make a fellow frisky,
Good for burns and chills and wheezes,
Good they say for diseases—
Rather funny if it's true!
Alcohol's a base deceiver;
It will "cool" you in a fever,
Warm you when you're blue and chilly—
Ever heard a thing so silly?
Why, it's nonsense through and through.

What's it good for? If a blessing,
What it does will need no guessing.
Old Aunt Chloe at her baking,
Says, her yellow turban shaking,
"Good for misery I'm shore"
Yes; it is very good to make it—
It will fill you (if you take it)
Full of poverty and sorrow,
Leave you far worse off to-morrow
Than you ever were before.

It has draped the world with curses
Worse than rags or empty purses;
Given thurst, but not for learning,
Kindled everlasting burning—
"Good for misery" we own.
But there's one thing more it's good for,
Though to many it has stood for
Pills and pottage! You will find it,
Spite of prejudice behind it,
Very good to let alone.

WHAT WILL AND WHAT WON'T.

I am often amazed at the things published by some so-called housekeepers, and warranted to do thus and so; when by actual test and experiment they do nothing of the sort! Now I contend that the same process will produce the same result the world over; therefore when Mrs. Such-a-One says that sweet milk will have precisely the same effect as soap in washing dishes, when I undertake to wash dishes "with a few spoonfuls of sweet milk poured in the water," I ought to find that the milk has been an efficient substitute for the soap.

But when on economy bent, I flew to the milk pitcher to safe the soap bill, the net result was a distinct necessity for another dish washing with soap, for the milk wasn't worth a picayune as a cleaner. So many things are written in this way and the result is just an exposure of a fraud.

If your griddle gets rough when you are frying batter cakes take a raw turnip and slice off the end and rub the griddle all over with it, and it will be as smooth as glass.

If white china or ironstone tableware has become stained or discolored from use, scour it well with wood ashes or boil it in good lye and it will become perfectly clean and white again.

There is nothing better for cleaning steel knives than a raw Irish potato, dipped in fine brick dust. Cut off a slice of the potato so as to leave a raw surface, dip it in finely beaten brick, and rub the knives untill they look bright and clean. It does not wear out and break the ends of the the blades, and requires no strength at all.

Freshly fallen snow makes batter cakes as light as fresh laid eggs would do. Make up your batter as usual, only omitting the eggs, and when ready to commence baking them, take up lightly as many heaping tablespoonfuls of snow as you would have taken eggs and stir quickly into the batter, and our experience is that the snow is as good as an egg.

If you want to send milk off in bottles—with a basket of dinner, or a traveler's lunch, or for the baby's tea—first put into the bottle, if one pint, two tablespoonfuls of lime water, or if a quart four tablespoonfuls. It will keep sweet even in hot summer weather, and if you will wrap the bottle, head and heels, in a wet cloth, and then in a dry one, it will keep cool into the bargain. As soon as the milk bottles come home wash them clean and put some lime water or soda and water in them and keep them uncorked, throw the corks into a bowl of lime or soda water and they will stay sweet and clean. This is my experience after several successive years of sending dinner a mile and more to a "railroad man."

When the kitchen dish cloth begins to "smell like a dish rag," throw it in a saucepan or tin bucket of hot water, put a good lump of soda in with it, and set it on the stove to take a good boil. It will be clean and sweet when it comes out.

Certain of the fraudulent say that leaving milk pans open until the milk gets cold will remove the taste of onion from milk. It does nothing of the sort. The only thing that removes the taste is to keep the onions or garlic away from the cows. Once in milk, it is there to stay.

Another fraud is the statement that washing rancid butter in buttermilk will make it sweet again. It doesn't help it one particle! Rancid butter has undergone certain chemical changes and cannot be restored to its normal state. There is a German method of preparing "strong" butter so that it can be used in cooking, but once rancid or even in the edge thereof, it is past table use.

Still another imposition is the story that when eggs are "flat" and won't beat up light, a pinch of soda will make them beat. It doesn't do it. A stale egg cannot be restored any more than sour milk can be made new or rancid butter fresh.

The age of miracles is over, and only miraculous power can arrest decay and restore disorganization to its original order. Stopping to reason out the rationale of things would save a vast deal of time that is wasted in trying experiments because somebody "said so."

I spoke of lime water in connection with milk bottles. Ordinarily people buy lime water of a druggist and pay a good price for it. For years I have made all I could use and give away, at a merely nominal cost and trouble. Get ten cents' worth of builders' lime, (simply unslacked lime it is,) put it in an open bowl, and pour in by degrees stirring the lime all the time, two quarts of water. When it stops smoking, stir it all well together and pour it into a glass jar, or a jug or what you please. I always use a glass fruit jar so I can see into it. When the lime settles at the bottom, put a funnel in a bottle, and put a thick cloth, a damask table napkin, or good sheet of soft paper in the funnel and pour all the water off of the lime into as many bottles as you choose to fill, then fill the jar with water, stir up the lime well from the bottom and set it by until you want more of it. As you use off the bottle fill the jar until all the alkaline property of the lime is exhausted. Ten cents' worth of lime lasted me for three years using it as freely as I pleased for all sorts of things. It saved an immese deal of money that would have gone to the druggist, and the lime water was just as good.—Good Housekeeping.

FASHION NOTES.

The white petticoat is a thing of the past.

The plain hem at the bottom is again in vogue.

Jacket fronts are a feature in the new tea gowns.

The most fashionable women wear no bustles.

Fur will be much used in trimming winter gowns.

New feathers are seen on the dressiest fall bonnets.

Smocked frocks are as popular as ever for little girls.

Strings of bonnets come from the very back, not the ears, this season.

The tendency of fashion in feminine attire is to the plastic, classic style.

Cloth-finished flannels are the preferred wear of women of taste but limited means.

New kid and Suede gloves have plush-like seams on the back of the hand that look like chenille.

The so-called Directoire and Empire gowns show only a few features of the dress of that period.

There are no plain, tight-fitting tailor gowns among the fall importations of Paris and London dresses.

Both large and small bonnets will be worn, toque of medium size will be the the favorite for early fall.

Round hats are very large, and elaborately trimmed, but the brims are not wide nor so eccentric as formerly.

Short gigot sleeves appear on many of the pretty dressy Empire gowns for evening wear that are brought over from Paris this fall.

The large round hats brought out with first importations of fall millinery are too picturesque for any but carriage or country wear.

Some of the new long cloaks are made in such a form and so elaborately trimmed as to be full dress for the street carriage or reception.

The richest jewel effects are thrown into the new gold, silver, sleel and tinted metal thread embroidered bands that come for dress and wrap trimmings.

Skirts made with plaises of fine kilts all around are favored by fashionable women for morning and house. Such skirts take the name of "Indeplissable."

Cloth bonnets are small and dressy, with metals and with embroideries in which glass beads give the jewel effect, with ribbon loops and curled feather bands.

Soft amure silks and peau de soies are shown in tints to match the rich peau de soie broches that sell for $9 the yard. The plain stuffs are from $7 to $8 the yard.

A new soft silk is called Arabian, but it is woven in France, and is much used for the long sashes slung twice around the waist, that are frequent a feature in fall importations of Paris gowns.

The new short wraps for fall wear have sleeves, and jacket points opening over a waistcoat buttoning to the throat. The collar is high, the back short, and the ornamentation excessive on such wraps.

Only one very short white petticoat is worn by fashionably-dressed women under their colored silk or mohair long skirt, and this short petticoat is trimmed or tucked, according to fancy. They call it a netticoat.

Full long cloaks in all shapes, from the Irish or French peasant to the improved Raglan, Newmarket and Russian redingote, will be worn morning, afternoon and evening with toilets that demand a complete covering.

The new tinted metal and solid silver and gold thread and cord embroidery bands that come for the ornamentation of cloth, silk, velvet, and novelty wool gowns, will convert them into the cheeriest toilet that we have had for many seasons.

A lovely conceit for a tea gown is of soft black surah, lined with the same, the full tablier, jabot, neck ruche, and puffs at the waist made of black silk tulle net, very fine and strong, and wrought in a pretty pattern with cream-colored floss.

Long, gracefully-looped tabliers of fine lace ornament the fronts of dressy dinner gowns. The lace of the full shirt blouse in such cases matches that of the tablier. Or, if the waistcoat is of embroidery, in metal on silk or satin, the neckwear, the jabot or incroyable cravat, matches the lace of the tablier.

Many of the new fall dresses brought from Paris and London have straight undraped skirts with no trimmings, save a broad band of metal and tinted embroidery at the bottom, the cuffs, collar, and revers showing the same style of ornamentation. The back breadths are then slightly looped to form a small turnure, and a small pad and two or three steels extend the back breadths a little, but not in the emphatic style of the past season.

The handsomest silk imported this fall is the brocaded peau de soie, or, poult de soie, an old favorite of our great-grandmothers, slightly improved, and given a new name. They called it "padusoy." It comes with a dull-finish, fine, soft, satin-woven ground, on which are rich figures and flowers in shaded effect, looking like cut and uncut velvet on a surface that simulates soft kid in lustre and finish. These peau de soie broches cost $9 a yard, and come in all colors for evening and afternoon wear.

Large buttons, that are works of art, and, of course, very high priced, are one of the features of the new fall gowns. They are put on more for ornament than use on the open fronts of the jacket bodices, that are sewed on to the back and side breadths of the skirts. The full shirt blouse, belted in at the waist, is the almost invariable form which such dresses take.

BADLY FOOLED.—There was a ring of the telephone yesterday, and a handsome young man, well known in society circles, stepped up to talk to his lady-love. She spoke very pleasantly, and he, smiling, said something sweet back over the wires. She laughed, and he said something else in a most winning way. Thus things went on for half an hour, and he was the happiest man in town until it leaked out that a great big bearded man had learned he was expecting a message, had slipped over to another 'phone, called him and beguiled him into saying many things he now wishes unsaid, and it may be added that in a downtown office there is a man who thinks telephones are a humbug.—Brunswick (Ga.) Journal.

WHAT HOUSEWIVES SHOULD KNOW.

Wash all marble daily with ammonia and water in place of soap-suds.

The flesh of fresh fish should be firm, the gills should be light red and the scales silvery.

Young veal may be told by the bone in the cutlet. If it is very small the veal is not good.

A wineglass of strong borax water in a pint of raw starch will make collars and cuffs stiff and glossy.

Wash mirrors in warm suds, then dust with whiting from a muslin bag and polish with chamois skin.

It is false economy to buy stale anything; the freshest is none too good, especially at this season of the year.

Buy perfectly fresh fruit and vegetables, free from sprouts and only in quantities that admit of immediate use.

Rub your lamp chimneys after washing with dry salt, and you will be surprised at the new brilliance of your lights.

To clean ornaments of alabaster dissolve borax in boiling water and apply with a cloth or soft brush, rinse carefully and dry in the sun.

Good eggs may be quickly designated by their dull shell and clear appearance. An old or stale egg, as a rule, has a dull porous-looking shell.

Good articles always command a fair price, excepting at the close of the market, when a dealer will sell at a reduction rather than risk the keeping.

Visit the market yourself rather than order by mail or messenger; be more interested in your own welfare, and you will supply your table with better food at one-half the expense.

To raise the piie of plush or velvet, dampen on the wrong side with clean cold water, then hold tight across the face of a hot iron and rub up the crushed spot with a clean stiff brush.

Pigeons are good when the breasts are plump and red looking. The flesh of an old one is dark, and the breast is not so plump. Squabs are plump, soft-skinned, with almost pink flesh.

To keep green vegetables for a day or two, sprinkle with water and place them on a cellar floor. Fruit should not be kept in the cellar, but put out singly and stood in a dark, dry, cool place.

Green corn and Lima beans deterioate more quickly than any other vegetables; they should be spread out singly on the cool cellar floor as quickly as possible after they come from the market.

Pongee silk must be washed in tepid lather; soap must never touch it, as it makes it harsh; hung to drain without wringing after being well rinsed, then folded while very damp, rolled in a cloth and ironed after twelve hours.

Twenty drops of carbolic acid evaporated from a hot shovel will go far to banish flies from a room, while a bit of camphor gum, the size of a walnut, held over a lamp till it is consumed, will do the same for the festive mosquito.

Clean oilcloth with a wet towel pinned over a stiff broom, and rub with long sweeping strokes. Matting should be washed with strong salt water and a clean cloth, and do it if possible at midday, to insure quick drying, which prevents discoloration.

To renovate velvet, free from dust by laying face down and whipping smartly; then brush with a camel's hair brush, damp on the wrong side with borax water and hang pile inward in the sunshine to dry, taking care that there is no fold or wrikle on the line.

Poultry should always have a smooth, clean-looking skin, both on the body and feet. If young the lower part of the breastbone will be cartilage. Try this carefully, as some of our dealers are so unfortunate as to break the ends of the breasts, which to an untrained marketer give them the feeling of cartilage.

Many of the so-called cheap cuts of meat are preferable; for instance, the shoulder of mutton is much more delicate than the leg, and, as few persons know, the price is low. The English, who of all people know what good mutton is, always give the leg to the household, and save the shoulder for guests or first table. However, meat is not the only thing you must learn to choose.

RULES TO INSURE CONNUBIAL FELICITY.

Theodore Parker married in April, 1836, Miss Lidia D. Cabot, only daughter of John Cabot of Newton, with whom he had plighted troth five years previously. The following resolutions are entered in his journal on his wedding day:—

1. Never, except for the best of causes, to oppose my wife's will.
2. To discharge all services for her sake, freely.
3. Never to scold.
4. Never to look cross at her.
5. Never to weary her with commands.
6. To promote her piety.
7. To bear her burdens.
8. To overlook her foibles.
9. To love, cherish and ever defend her.
10. To remember her always most affectionately in my prayers; thus, God willing, we shall be blessed.

Millard Filmore took the oath without delivering an inaugural address.

A worthy schoolmaster of a parish school economized time by flogging all the bad boys on Saturday. On one occasion an urchin insisted upon knowing what he was to be whipped for. Because his name was on the list was the only answer given, but upon investigation the master of the rod discovered that he had picked up the wrong list and flogged all the boys of the confirmation class.

Seasonable.

Put away the ice cream freezer,
Closet now the gowns of tulle;
Shelve the straw and lemon squeezer,
For the weather's getting cool.
Soda fountains are deserted,
Tennis now gives place to pool;
And the iceman's disconcerted
Since the weather got so cool.

From the seashore hies the plumber,
Sad converse the oysters hold,
Seeing signs of shrinking summer,
Now the weather's getting cold.
Adieu, dog days (water spaniels),
Lucky he whose bin is coaled;
Welcome now, back number flannels,
Hang it! ain't the weather cold?

—Buffalo Express.

THE TALK OF THE DAY.

Scene at Harvard.

Professor—Mr. B., I notice that you regularly absent yourself from prayers. I trust that you have a good and sufficient reason for such neglect.

Mr. B.—Yes, sir; conscientious scruples.

Professor—Indeed, I am glad to know that you have conscientious scruples; will you explain them?

Mr. B.—I am an atheist, sir.

Professor—(with surprise).—An atheist? Is your father an Atheist?

Mr. B.—No, sir; he is a Presbyterian.

Professor—And your mother, I trust she is not an atheist?

Mr. B.—No, sir; she is a Roman Catholic.

Professor—Oh, ho! this is interesting. I am delighted to know that an atheist is a cross between a Roman Catholic and Presbyterian. I will see you later, sir.

RATHER TOO APPROPRIATE.—The congregation in Dr. Woodbury's church had a quiet laugh yesterday morning over an accidental accident that came very near giving the pastor the reputation of a humorist. Subscriptions have lately been taken at the morning services for various purposes, and yesterday was no exception. After a few moments thus devoted to material interests, Dr. Woodbury called the deacons to bring their collections forward, and all responded but one. Him Dr. Woodbury overlooked, and went on to open his bible. Just as the late deacon slipped up to hand his collections to the pastor, the reverend gentleman announced his text, looking the deacon full in the face:

"What has thou in thine hand?"

The audience caught on and laughed out loud.—Minneapolis Journal.

MARRIED LIKE WHITE FOLKS.—A good one is told of an Athens minister. It is said that he was aroused one night recently about 11 o'clock, and upon going to the door he was greeted by a dark-hued son of Africa, upon whose arm was leaning a a dusky maiden, with: "What'er yer charge to marry niggers?" "Three dollars," replied the minister. "What'll yer charge ter marry us like white folks?" again asked the darky. The minister replied that the least he usually got from this class was $5. The latter mode was agreed upon, and the ceremony was performed. The minister then requested his $5, when the negro informed him that he hadn't yet kissed the bride according to white folks' fashion. The pair were married free.—Augusta (Ga.) Chronicle.

OPPORTUNITY.—There is an old story of a beggar to whom one day there appeared by the roadside a beautiful being, with her hands outstretched, laden with treasures.

As he gazed at her in stupid surprise, she turned with her treasures still held out to him, and once more, with beseeching eye, as if she would compel him to take what she offered, she passed slowly by and disappeared. She had no sooner gone than, as if waking from a dream, he hurried eagerly in the direction she had taken.

He met a traveler, and said, "Have you seen a beautiful stranger, with her hands full of things that I want, going along this road?"

"Yes," replied the traveler; "her name is Opportunity. But once offered and once refused she never returns."

Deacon Emerson was very strict about keeping the Sabbath. One Sunday morning, as he was riding to church, Mrs. Emerson being on a pillion behind, he saw a fox chasing a ribbit, which dodged under a large log. "Deacon!" exclaimed Mrs. Emerson, her sympathies being touched, "don't let that fox kill the rabbit! Get off and scare him away!" "Wife," replied the deacon, with a long-drawn sigh, "it would be breaking the Sabbath to interfere," and he rode on, leaving poor bunny to its fate. "The deacon is a very particular man," said his wife, in relating the story; "but for the life of me I could't say then whether he was too lazy or too pious!"—History of Weare N. H.

FILLED WITH WOE.—Mistress— Well, Bridget, did you see the dentist?

Biddy O'Galway—Yis, ma'am.

Mistress—Did he pull your tooth?

Biddy O'Galway—Sure, ma'am he didn't lay a han' to it to pull at all. He scooped it out wid a wee hoe, an' thin he druv it in to stay feriver—wid a plug on the top o' it to kape it tight. I'll niver be caught doin' the likes ag'in, ma'am. Vhat with him upsettin' the sate he put me in, an' tyin' a dirty bit av an old gum shoe in me mouth fer a bib, an' makin' a noise the size o' a coffee mill in my head, I'd laver walk the flure an' scrame.—Puck.

THE CHANGE IT MAKES.—Omaha Miss (at summer resort)—What a lot of wedding parties there are here!

Experienced Dame—I thought so at first, but I see now that I was mistaken. Most of the couples are only engaged.

Omaha Miss—Why, how can you tell the difference so quickly?

Experienced Dame—Where a couple are engaged, my dear, the gentleman looks after the comfort of the lady; when they are married the lady looks after the comfort of the gentleman.—Omaha World.

Georgie is four years old. One day the youngster had been taken with a slight attack of prevarication, and, wishing to impress upon his infantile understanding the sinfulness of telling fibs, the father related the story of George Washington and his little hatchet, with the remark that George Washington was a good boy and never told a lie. The child sat in deep thought for a moment, and then said "Papa, tood't he talk?"—Christian Secretary.

My Cottage Window.

Homely and humbly, these my cottage rooms—
No fine upholstering or gilded walls,
No woven threads of Persia's fabled looms,
No fair-arched entrance into stately halls.

No marble Clytic, with its frozen veins,
All bloodless, wandering over snowy breast;
But one sweet Cupid, touched with richer strains
Of rosy life on lip, and cheek, and crest

Of golden curls, whose spirits catch the glow
Of every sunbeam; this my kingly boy.
And my one window, wisely made for show
Of greatest foliage—these insure me joy.

My cottage window, framed with sturdiest vine,
Whose gladness laughs in every lusty leaf—
Where fuchsias hang their bells and pansies shine
Like violet eyes, touched with some childish grief.

Here blooms the rose, and there the spicy pink;
Here lifts the calla grandly, pure and fair;
And here sit I, to read, or work or think,
And twine bright flowers in baby's golden hair.

Call me not poor, for wondrous wealth is mine—
The wealth of boundless love and sweet content;
One human blossom, heaven shall make divine,
And God's dear flowers in loving likeness blent.

HIRAM GRAHAM'S INVESTMENT.

"Now we are not only out of debt, but we have got $100 ahead, and the question is, how we are going to invest it?"

Hiram Graham, sitting just outside of the open door to enjoy the grateful coolness of the summer evening, threw aside his paper as he spoke, and awaited his wife's reply. His wife, busy over her sewing, did not answer immediately.

"Come," he said, "let us have your opinion. I'll bet you've made up your mind what to do with it long ago. You know the saying, 'a man to save money, and a woman to spend it,'" and he laughed good-naturedly.

Yes, Mrs. Graham had made up her mind long ago. The thought of a time when they should be clear out of debt, and some of their surplus earnings could be expended for home comforts, had helped her to make over and repair many an old garment that she was about to throw away in despair; it had encouraged her to content herself with numberless inconveniences. But now that time had really come, she felt a strange reluctance about revealing her thoughts.

She was oppressed with fear that her long-cherished plan might be dashed to the earth. However, she commenced bravely enough.

"I have thought we could repaint the house some pretty color, such as silver grey, and have shutters put up at the windows the right shade of green to harmonize with the color of the house—the same as the green leaves of the poplar harmonize with the soft gray of its branches"—

"Why, Jennie," exclaimed Mr. Graham, "There is a great coat of paint on the house now. And there is no other color so durable as red lead, in my estimation."

"And," continued his wife, "I would have a yard enclosed with a neat picket fence."

"I don't see any use in tearing down that fence. The rails are as good and sound as they were twenty years ago."

"Please don't interrupt me, Hiram. I would re-paper the rooms, buy a new ingrain carpet for the parlor and muslin curtains for the windows."

"Thunderation! What is the sense of having curtains if you have shutters? Besides, these paper curtains answer every purpose as far as I can see. The paper on the wall is perfectly whole. It is true that you have patched it considerably; but that don't show much. And as for the carpet—why, haven't you got a new rag carpet in the room now?"

"Yes; but that would do for the sitting-room. And I would have a bay window made off the south side of the sitting-room for summer plants."

Mr. Graham laughed outright at this.

"Now, Jennie," he said, "I never said anything about it, but have always thought it kind of foolish to spend as much time and money as you do fussing with the flowers out of doors; but when you make flower beds of the house—that beats me!"

"Hiram," said Mrs. Graham, "You asked me for my opinion. Now please don't interrupt me."

"Very well. Go ahead."

"I would have a portico built over where you are sitting, and a wood house and a large, cool pantry, that I need so much, on the back of the kitchen. One part of the wood house would be finished off, where the cook stove could stand in warm weather. It would be so much cooler for us to eat in. Besides this, there are many little adornments, such as pictures, etc., that I would add afterwards."

"Why," exclaimed Mr. Graham, "if we were to go into that it would take every cent of the money."

"Well, we earned it to invest in something, didn't we?"

"Yes; but I want to invest my money in something that will bring me in some kind of an income."

"It would bring us in the best of all incomes—not in dollars, but what is better—joy and happiness. Life would have a fuller and purer meaning for us both; it would bring a higher and better atmosphere in which to rear up our children. Even the humming bird loves to deck its sweet little nest with pretty mosses and lichens. Ought we not to have as much love for home and its adornments as God's dumb creatures?"

"I have something more important to live for than a humming bird has," said Mr. Graham, tartly. "I would rather leave something more substantial to my children, such as bonds, well tilled acres, for instance. I will tell you what I have been thinking of," he said, with the air of one who felt that the expressing of his opinion must necessarily bring conviction of his superior judgment. "You know that I have always wanted that forty-acre lot of Southwell's, that joins me on the north. They say he is hard up now and when he finds that one can make a large payment down, I believe I could get it very reasonable. And when I got that paid for, I would have one of the best farms in the country. Now, what do you say to that?" he asked, triumphantly.

"It would run us right into debt again," said Mrs. Graham.

"Well, supposing it did? We have swung clear this time easy enough, and can again. You must remember that the land was badly run down when I first got hold of it, but the farm is in good condition now."

"Easy enough!" Mrs. Graham did not repeat the words aloud. Her husband did not know of the little sacrifices and acts of self-denial it had cost her. He never could know it, and therein lies the pathos of many a sacrifice.

The next morning Mrs. Graham was up betimes and busy as usual amidst her household cares, but her heart had lost its lightness; and as she stood under the locust which shaded the back door, churning, it seemed, too, as if much of the brightness had gone out of her life. Golden dandelions nestled in the grass that carpeted the yard like stray bits of sunshine; they were still bright with the dewy freshness of early morning. To the right was a low meadow land; the silver thread that traversed it showed where a brook murmured along, its tiny waves sparkling in the sunlight. To the left were fields of grain with ripened heads bowed, waiting for the sickle. The air was full of happy sounds, the tinkle of distant cow bells, the voice of domestic fowls and the song of wild birds. But her great disappointment overwhelmed it all.

She could think of nothing but the great, barn-like house, painted a glaring red, with its large, shutterless windows, like lidless eyes, staring out upon the dusty highway. Inside it was equally as barren of grace and beauty; the walls were dingy and unadorned by pictures of any kind; the furniture was guiltless of paint or varnish; with no works of literature worthy of mention besides the weekly paper, the Bible and an almanac. In this atmosphere she must live; here she must henceforth work on while her soul starved; here, too, she must rear her children, to see worth and beauty in nothing that cannot be represented by gold. What wonder, then, if her thoughts and eyes wandered over the fields of waving grain, to where stood a stately stone house on an eminence? She knew there was beauty there; breezes stole into large, airy rooms, through lace curtains; there were rich carpets and costly furniture, and a library that was almost an intellectual feast but to look at; outside there were pleasant walks and drives, and a flower garden filled with rarest floral treasures; and then she sighed softly as she thought to herself—"but love would not have been there, and life would have been of little worth without that."

"Jennie, Jennie! Oh, here you are," and Mr. Graham came out through the back door and seated himself upon the edge of a huge log that had been hewed out and did duty for both eavesdrop and cistern. It was not unusual for him to seek her; he always did when he came in and found her not in the house. It was not a bad habit in a man. His very life seemed bound up in her; and although he had the reputation among the neighbors of being "close" in his business transactions, he was kind-hearted and generous, too, in his way. This morning he had something of importance to communicate.

"I didn't tell you last evening," he said, "that I had already had some talk with Southwell about that land. He wouldn't listen to a cent under $2000 then and I wouldn't offer more than $1000. He came over to see me this morning, and offered to split the difference. Ain't that a bargain though! A little better than spending money for paint and paper, Jennie? Oh," rising to go, "I came near forgetting to tell you, Powers is here. He wants to hire out through the harvest. I have hands enough, but I suppose the more help I have the better I shall get along, so I told him to go right to work. I don't suppose he has been to breakfast yet, his folks are all slack. You might set out a bit for him to eat. Try and have the lunch ready by half-past nine; you can blow the horn, and I will send some of the men down for it."

Poor Jennie! It was like the last straw that broke the camel's back. She struggled hard, but the tears would come. Mr. Graham turned back and came instantly to her side when he saw that she was in trouble.

"What is the matter, dear," he asked compassionately, while his large, kind hand glided down her hair with a soft, caressing touch.

There was no answer, and tears only came faster.

"If you are not feeling well, I will slip down and get Miranda Powers to come up and help you. I guess I'd better anyway, hadn't I?'

Mrs. Graham mastered her emotions with an effort.

"Oh, no," she said, there isn't anything."

Mr. Graham hesitated: he was not satisfied with this explanation.

"There!" she said. "Now do you go along to your work, or I shall be foolish enough to cry again," and indeed she looked as if she might.

Hiram Graham had a faint idea as to what the matter was, and was very willing to do as she bade him. He felt considerably annoyed that his wife could not see the advantage of the proposed purchase that would so materially add to their mutual property. And then he began to wonder what she was thinking so silently about while she stood looking off toward the distant hill. A little jealousy crept in with the thought. The owner of the fine mansion had once been a formidable rival of his. There could have been no reason but the one she so shyly confessed to him in the soft twilight of a summer evening ten years ago. How proud and happy he had felt! He vowed she should never want for anything which he could procure. But he had changed since. He had but little to commence with. They had to practice such rigid economy, and to watch every dollar so closely to be able to meet the payments on the farm, that he had learned to love money, as much for the good it could purchase as for its own sake.

When he came to dinner, followed by his troop of hands, he could not help noticing how flushed and tired she looked, but she was as cheerful as ever. The morning cloud passed, and with the sweet spirit of self-sacrifice that characterized her, she had buried her dead hopes and taken up the burdens of life again as best she could.

Hiram Graham was not ignorant of this sacrifice, and it touched him keenly; the thought of it troubled him during the afternoon. He even forgot to estimate the probable yield per acre as the heavy sheaves were shoved off the rear platform and lay so near together on the shorn ground. He could not deny that his wife had worked as hard as he during the year past, and the economy that he had practiced had been mostly in her domain. He began to wish he had treated her wishes more respectfully, at least. But then he could not help looking over to where the forty acres lay. What a choice piece of land it was! How long he had wanted it! And now, when it was almost in his grasp, must he let it go? And even were he to yield to Jennie's wishes now, would she not know that he had done so reluctantly, and against his better judgment? And during the afternoon he thought the matter over and over.

"Powers," he called out, as that individual was leaving the field at night, "if the folks at home can spare Miranda, let her come up in the morning and help my wife."

"All right; she will be glad to come," was the answer.

Harvest was over, and Mrs. Graham spoke of discharging the girl.

"You had better keep her to help you," advised her husband.

"No," said Mrs. Graham, "when there are none but my own family, I can do the work easy alone. I believe I like to work," she added; "at least I am always happier when I am busy."

"How long has it been since you have been home to your father's on a visit?" he asked abruptly.

"Five years ago last June, when sister Ellen was married.

"How would you like to go out and see the folks this fall?"

What a glad light came into her face and then faded, as she said hesitatingly:

"How can I go?"

"Never mind. You have earned a play-day, and none of my transactions shall hinder you from enjoying one. You had better take the children with you; the folks will want to see them. You can go to-morrow and get what things you need, and Miranda can stay and help you get ready. You will want to get off as soon as you can, for you will want to make a good long visit while you are about it."

He appeared to be anxious to hasten her departure, but Mrs. Graham was too happy at the thought of seeing the home of her childhood again to notice it at the time.

"But what will you do without us, if we make too long a stay?"

"Don't mind me. I can keep a bachelor's hall," he said laughingly.

Two weeks after Mrs. Graham had gone, and Hiram Graham had the house all to himself.

After the lapse of five weeks he went to the station to meet his wife and children. They had enjoyed a most delightful visit, and all were glad and happy, and as they drove homeward there was much to be told, and many inquiries to be made. As they neared the house Mrs. Graham looked suddenly forward while her husband watched her face and rubbed his hands together in quiet glee. What was that soft, lustrous grey, gleaming out from among the green leaves? Was she dreaming? No; it was the house with its green shutters and porticoes.

"Why, Hiram Graham, what have you been doing?"

She looked again.

"And a picket fence? And the most charming little gate! And a graveled walk!" and then she couldn't keep the glad tears from coming.

"Come, Jennie," said Mr. Graham, teasingly, although his own eyes moistened with sympathetic happiness. "Don't feel so glad about it. I may have worse things yet to show you. There, how does that suit?" he asked after they had entered the house, pointing to the bay-window. "I didn't understand such things, so I got a workman that did, you see; it is all complete, ready for the plants. And here," he said, leading the way through the kitchen, and throwing open a door, "is a pantry that can't be beat anywhere. And this is something you didn't mention," he continued, approaching a neat sink in the kitchen, and laying hold of the handle of a cistern pump that stood in one end, up gushing a jet of soft water which told of a good cistern underneath. "Look through the window and you will see a covered drain that carries away all the waste water. I am going to fix it so you can irrigate your flower garden with it. You see I didn't do anything with these," he said after they had entered the sitting-room, glancing deprecatingly toward the dingy-colored papering, the dilapidated furniture and threadbare carpet. "I would rather trust that to you. And besides I found there was so much real enjoyment in it that I would be generous and leave some of the pleasure for you. Here is the money that is left," he added, presenting her a goodly roll of bills.

One pleasant day in autumn and all was complete; and indeed, as Mrs. Graham said, it looked like "a bit of Eden." "I do believe that I am just the happiest woman in the world."

He drew her gently to him.

"Jennie," he said, "what were you thinking about the morning I found you churning under the locust tree, and looking so intently at that old stone building on the hill?"

Her only answer was a merry laugh.

"Did you ever think so before?" Although he asked the question hesitatingly, he looked very wistfully into her face for an answer.

"No, you dear, simple darling, and I am sure I never shall again," and, looking up archly, "I didn't then."

Six years had passed away, and one bright morning in spring Mr. Graham entered the house. He had changed in six years; the slight roughness which had characterized him previously had worn away; and there was an increased dignity and manliness in his bearing. His children had also grown to be a constant source of parental pride and delight. So surely do our inner natures conform to the plan of our outward surroundings. He held up a paper he had in his hands.

"There," said he, addressing his wife, "is the deed of that Southwell forty acres clear from incumbrance. If it had not been for you," he continued, smiling, "I should have earned it long ago, and the whole Southwell farm, too, perhaps. But I thank God that I didn't," he added earnestly. "If I had I would have been so close over the workrack by this time that I never would be able to look up."

GOOD MANNERS.

Be rude to none; rudeness harms not even the humblest and poorest to whom it is directed, but it injures the exhibitors.

Never urge another to do anything against his desire, unless you see danger before him.

Always give precedence to elders, visitors and superiors. Offer them the best seat at the table, the best place by the fire, and the first of everything. Go farther than mere form and see that they are comfortable and happy.

Be not ostentatious in dress or deportment; nothing can be more vulgar. See that costumes fit the time and occasion.

Never try to outshine but to please.

Do not ask another to do what you would not be glad to do under similar circumstances.

Do not make witticisms at the expense of others which you would not wish to have made upon yourselves.

Never talk or laugh aloud in public places or upon the street.

Never treat superiors with servility or inferiors with arrogance. Speak as kindly to a day-laborer as to one occupying a high position.

Never needlessly wound the vanity of another or dilate unnecessarily upon disagreeable subjects.

Never intrude ill health, pains, losses or misfortunes.

Never omit to perform a kind act when it can be done with any reasonable amount of exertion.

Never unavoidably wound the feelings of a human being.

Never forget that vulgarity has its origin in ignorance or selfishness.

Remember that good manners are thoughts filled with kindness and refinement, and then translated into behavior.—Good Housekeeping.

Don't let us get soured with life. It does not mend matters for us, and it makes us very disagreeable to others. If we have had misfortunes we are not alone. The world is not all sunshine to everybody. We love the fresh, lighthearted laugh of a child. Why not keep it ourselves in after years? Does groaning ease any burdens? We love the ardor and natural enthusiasm of children. Are we any wiser if we have covered up all the impulse and warm feeling of our natures, so that the world knows only a cold, calm exterior? We know a woman who has lost all her property, though once very rich, nearly all her friends by death, has her hands so cramped by rheumatism that she has been unable to use them for years, and yet she is full of sunshine and thanks God every day for the great enjoyment she finds in life. We know another who, in the midst of luxury, wishes she had not been born, and some others who wish she had not. Not least of all shall we have to give account in the judgment as to what manner of spirit we possessed.—Congregationalist.

Sir Henry Thompson tells in the Nineteenth Century what those men should eat who can not exercise. "Those who have little time for exercise," he says, "and are compelled to live chiefly within doors must endeavor to secure, or should have secured for them as far as possible by employers, by way of compensation, a regular supply of fresh air without draughts, an atmosphere as free from dust and other impurities as can be obtained, with a good supply of light, and some artificial warmth when needed. These necessities granted, cereal foods, such as well-made bread in variety, and vegetable product, including fruits, should form a great part of the diet consumed, with a fair addition of eggs and milk if no meat taken, and a little of other animal food than fish. On such a dietary, and without alcoholic stimulants, thousands of such workers as I have briefly indicated may enjoy, with very little exercise, far better health and more strength than they experience on meat and heavy puddings, beer, baker's bread and cheese."

"What is a contingent fee?" asked a litigant of a well-known attorney the other day.

"Well," said the legalite, "if I take your case and lose it I get nothing."

"Yes, yes; that's all right."

"But if I win that case you get nothing."

"How's that? How's that? I don't think I understand you."

The attorney calmly repeated his statement. The still nonplussed litigant persisted:

"If I understand you, in either case I get nothing."

"Well, you know that's not my fault; but that is the meaning of a contingent fee. Shall I bring suit? What did you say? No? Well, I am very sorry. Good morning."—Pittsburg Press.

A Quarrel.

There's a knowing little proverb
From the sunny land of Spain;
But in Northland, as in Southland,
Is its meaning clear and plain.
Lock it up within your heart;
Neither lose it nor lend it—
Two it takes to make a quarrel;
One can always end it.

Try it well in every way,
Still you'll find it true,
In a fight without a foe,
Pray what would you do?
If the wrath is yours alone,
Soon you will expend it—
Two it takes to make a quarrel;
One can always end it.

Let's suppose that both are wroth,
And the strife begun,
If one voice shall cry for "Peace,"
Soon it will be done.
If but one shall span the breach,
He will quickly mend it—
Two it takes it make a quarrel;
One can always end it.

SHALL WE DRINK TO A DAY OF JUDGMENT?

It does no good to put certain drinks under the ban. "What is one man's meat is another's poison, reads just as well if drink is substituted for meat, and does not need repeating here. The immense variety of beverages which a person of ordinary contrivance can concoct, argues for a corresponding number of thirsty and willing throats waiting for them. They may be all good in their way; only see that each throat receives its proper portion. Do not give green tea to that nervous woman already so irritable she cannot dress the little children God has given her without twitching and slapping them to the tune of cross words. It is poor enjoyment to pay for her morning cup,—the consciousness that she has lost the love of an innocent little child with the knowledge that she has soured its merry disposition for that day.

And do not, we beg, insist on a child over whom you have control, showing you the bottom of a large milk cup drained dry. Pleadings and tears do not avail with a mother whose mind is made up that "milk is good for her." How does that mother know, pray tell? Has she ever given the matter one serious thought, beyond that of assenting to the general statement that milk is wholesome? That all children should like it, is equivalent with her to saying that they do. She does not consider that the little stomach, to be treated intelligently, should have this fact remembered and borne in mind, that its father could not drink milk when a child, and that now in the middle of life she recoils at the mention of it, with a memory for many an hour of a stomach soured after its trial. But that to her is all nonsense, even if she does remember it. That he could drink milk, so delightful to her, she does not for an instant doubt, were he really to make up his mind that he would. The will is at fault. And she secretly determines that their child shall learn early in life to "drink what is set before her." So the little thing is made wretched by nausea, and inward disturbance that makes outward irritability keeping her in disgrace half the time, and in defiance of the whole of it, simply because that mother would not bring her common sense and Christian judgment to bear upon the matter.—Margaret Sidney, in Good Housekeeping.

MAKING TROUBLE IN A BOARDING HOUSE.

"I want to give you a quiet talking to," said the manager of a leading boarding-house to a wealthy guest. "I had to discharge a good waiter to-day on your account."

"What do you mean, sir?" asked the gentleman, with some show of indignation.

"You have spoiled three good waiters for me already," said the manager firmly and respectfully. "You gave the man I have just sent away $5 a month. Now, sir, that was either intended as a generous gift or meant as a bribe to the man to give you more food and better service than you pay for. No matter what the motive, the effect was the same. I am always in the kitchen at meal times, and see to it that every guest has what he is entitled to and no more; so you got no advantage in that way, but you did receive a good deal more attention than you were entitled to. Mr. Jones, who sits at your table, pays me just as much as you do, and is just as good a customer to me. But he cannot afford to pay a waiter $5 a month as you do, and the consequence is the man neglects him to fuss with you. If he could afford to pay as much fees as yourself, neither of you would get any advantage, but he cannot, and himself and family have been so neglected that I expect they will leave the house, and all your generosity does is to deprive me of a good customer."

"I never looked at it in that light before," said the wealthy guest, "and I guess hereafter I'll get along without subsidizing the waiter, or content myself with a present that is not expected."—San Francisco Post.

Wife—Why, John, what made you get such a little umbrella with so much handle?

Husband—That handle's solid silver.

Wife—Yes, but you can't put the handle up when it rains.

Husband—Well, I'd like to know if I didn't put it up for $5 during the last wet spell?—Washington Critic.

Clara—Isn't Arizona a perfectly awful country, Tom?

Tom—It's pretty tough, Clara, pretty tough.

Clara—Don't they kill a frightfully large number of people out there.

Tom—Kill? Why, I've often seen a man hung up for the cigars.

Belle (on the stand) — Introduce me to your Pittsburg friends, dear. I hate to see a girl want all the good things in life.

Nell—How did you know he was a Pittsburg man?—Belle—By his ironical smile and steel-blue eyes.—Pittsburg Bulletin.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 19, 1888.

JUDGE SAWYER of the United States circuit court decided at San Francisco, Monday, that under the recent exclusion act passed by Congress all Chinese now in that harbor and all en route to this country must go back.

YELLOW FEVER does not yet relinquish its grip at Jacksonville, Fla. The number of new cases and deaths has greatly diminished, but a cold snap is needed to put an end to the plague. The total number of cases to date is 3692; deaths 322.

A RIGHTEOUS judge in Cattaraugus county, N. Y., refused naturalization papers the other day to a German who wished to become a citizen, because he was an habitual drunkard. If every drunkard could be debarred from the privileges of citizenship it would be one of the most excellent reforms of the day.

CHICAGO socialists have not lost their love for dynamite yet, and during the strike of street-car employes last week detectives arrested a man who had just placed on the rails four small cartridges, containing dynamite enough to have blown a car, passengers and horses to atoms. Such a fellow ought to be hoist by his own petard.

GOV. AMES has written some of the Prohibitory leaders that he is in favor of submitting the prohibitory constitutional amendment to the people, believes in the public school system, and has not contributed to Roman Catholic parochial schools. But this will hardly win him many votes from that party, for he has not on the Prohibitory wedding garment.

MAYOR HEWITT of New York handles Tammany Hall unsparingly in his letter accepting his renomination as mayor, and concludes that it is his duty to run again, and "test the question whether the city government is one of the people, for the people and by the people, or whether it is the private property of Tammany Hall, to be used for the benefit of the members of that organization."

MANY are the complaints now-a-days against the inefficiency of the railway postal service, in consequence of the removal of old and efficient employes to make room for Democratic office seekers whose only qualification is their politics. It is a shame that this important branch of the public service should be prostituted in this way, but this is one of the ways in which the present administration demonstrates its "reform" tendencies.

CONGRESS is going through the motions of business, though hardly a corporal's guard of members remains in either branch, most of them having gone home some time ago. The others would have followed before this, if a presidential election were not pending, but both parties have been afraid the other side would gain some possible advantage by an adjournment, so they have remained on guard. But they have now tired of this, and have decided to adjourn to-morrow, after the longest session on record.

GOV. AMES holds aloof from the controversy between the state board of lunacy and charity and its inspector, F. B. Sanborn, and in response to the latter's request for a hearing simply handed over a decision from the attorney general that the action of the board in discharging the inspector was legal. Mr. Sanborn does not fancy being snubbed in this way, and in a letter to the governor says:

> I may without offense recall to you excellency's memory that my request on the 8th inst. was not for another opinion of the attorney-general, but for a full and impartial hearing of the charges against me. Until that hearing and the more important one which concerns my clients shall have been granted, I cannot feel that justice has been done, if it has been seriously considered.

LESS than two years ago President Cleveland suspended a Republican United States district attorney for pernicious activity in politics, saying in his letter:—

> I do not think that such an official can enter as a business a political campaign and, consenting to a long list of engagements to address political meetings widely separated and of daily occurance, fill such engagements without neglecting his duty, if he holds an office worth having, nor without taking with him in the canvass his official power and influence.

Now Mr. Cleveland is a candidate for reëlection, and Postmaster General Dickinson, a member of his cabinet, and so holding "an office worth having," has been "filling a long list of engagements to address political meetings," but it does not seem to have occurred to the president to suspend him for so doing. His inconsistency is thus admirably commented on by the New York Tribune:—

> We submit these considerations to those who are fond of referring to Mr. Cleveland as a courageous official. He is not courageous. He surrendered his conviction in regard to the eligibility of a president for re-election just as soon as he discovered that he could secure a renomination. He surrendered his civil service reform convictions just as soon as the Democratic leaders put the screws on him—the phrase of Harper's Weekly was that he had "yielded to the pressure." He surrendered his convictions embodied in the familiar "order" to officeholders when the officeholders had made it plain that they did not intend to obey it. This is not the record of a courageous man. It convicts Mr. Cleveland of the cowardice which goes with sacrificing principle to expediency, the public welfare to personal and party ambition. Let us hear no more of the courage of the President. That virtue is made of sterner stuff than his.

It is announced that the contract has been awarded for the construction of a ship railway from the bay of Fundy to Baie Verte, on the gulf of St. Lawrense. The work will probably cost $5,000,000.

The Flynt Building & Construction Company has secured the contract to build the abutments of two new bridges at Wellesley, for the Boston & Albany Railroad Company.

District Deputy Dargan of Springfield visited Quaboag Council, Royal Arcanum, officially Tuesday evening. A collation was served and the evening pleasantly spent.

District Deputy Fred Allen, accompanied by Regent Fish of the Royal Arcanum of this place and Grand Vice Regent Robinson, visited the council at Spencer, Monday evening.

Evening services will be resumed at St. Paul's Universalist church Sunday, when a harvest concert will be given by the children, while the choir will render a choice musical programme.

People who drive over Main street, between the railroad bridge and Walnut street, are pretty generally agreed that if there is a piece of road anywhere that needs fixing up that is the identical one.

F. C. Hatch, the prime mover in the proposed annual hunt, is making arrangements for the event, which will surpass the one given last season. It will probably take place about the first of the coming month.

The registrars of voters have held three meetings up to date, and have registered the names of about thirty-five new voters in all. Three more chances to register will be given before election day.

An accident to a locomotive attached to a freight train on the New London Northern Railroad near Amherst, Tuesday evening, delayed the passenger train from the north, which arrives at 5 20 p. m., about four hours.

Charles Upham had a valuable colt stolen from the pasture about September 12th, the animal having been gone about three weeks before being missed. He offers a reward for the arrest and conviction of the interested parties.

Four new giant Baldwin locomotives, having four driving wheels on a side and weighing about 94 tons, are being used on the Boston & Albany road to draw freight between Springfield and Worcester. They draw 35 loaded cars, while 14 to 20 is a load for the ordinary engines.

September was an unusually rainy month, the rain-fall in this section being 12 inches, against an average of less than four for the last 54 years, and only seven clear days are reported for the month, which is said to have been the wettest September in 100 years. What's the matter with October, so far?

Monday was the first pleasant day for a long time, and the sight of old Sol was quite pleasant. He put in his appearance again Tuesday morning, but his work of the day before was evidently so out of his ordinary custom lately that he retired again until yesterday, and was then accompanied by a cold wind. To-day he has been in retirement again.

Quite a large number of music lovers will attend the Marie Howe concert in City Hall, Springfield, next Friday evening. A special train will leave Springfield for Palmer after the entertainment, to accommodate those who wish to attend. Application for tickets may be made at the office of the Flynt Building and Construction Co., where a limited number are on sale.

The treasurer's report at the annual meeting of the Hampden conference of Congregational churches, held in Springfield Tuesday, showed the contributions to missions, etc., from churches in this vicinity the past year, to have been as follows: Monson, $1065; Longmeadow, $428; Palmer, $485; Ludlow, $225; Wilbraham, $127; Three Rivers, $98; Indian Orchard, $79; Thorndike, $29; Hampden, $12.

About fifty persons assembled on the park last Friday afternoon to witness a running match for a purse of $25 a side between two professional sprinters, who gave their names as Dailey of Warren and Osgood of Ware. The race was a 100-yards dash, arranged by the sporting men of Ware and Warren, and proved exciting, Daily winning by about 3 feet. The track was heavy, yet the distance was covered in 10¼ seconds. J. Leary of Westboro acted as referee and W. Fitzpatrick of Palmer as timer. Those in a position to know estimated that over $1000 changed hands on the result.

Jules Levy, the greatest cornetist in the world, with his concert and opera company, will appear at the Loomer Opera House, Willimantic, Nov. 13, by special engagement, and a special train will be run to Palmer after the entertainment, stopping at way stations. A limited number of tickets has been reserved for Palmer people, and the demand for them will no doubt be great. The first part of the programme will consist of a concert, and the second part the opera of "Martha." Round-trip tickets from Palmer, including reserved seat in the parquet, are only $2, good on any train during the day.

The representative convention for this district will be held at the district court room next Thursday. National affairs occupy the attention of voters this year to such an extent that there is little interest, apparently, in local politics, and the question of candidates has hardly been discussed at all. The nomination is conceded to this town, as far as we have heard, though Brimfield may possibly feel that it should be passed along to her. Candidates will come to light plentifully by the time the convention meets, without doubt, but as yet the only one mentioned prominently is Lawyer W. W. Leach of this place.

Enviable Record of the Palmers.

The base ball season has closed here, and the admirers of that popular pastime are fast losing the interest and enthusiasm that usually centers in the national game. The ablest amateur teams in this section have met the Palmers the past season, and can testify to the efficiency of the nine, which has been composed of the right sort of material to win games. It is a question in the minds of many interested whether or not the town can support such a team another season, as without a good treasury to go to when occasion demands, or unless it has some other means by which it can be backed financially, it is liable to go to pieces soon. The attendance at the games has not been satisfactory to the management, yet for a town of this size the average number has been good. In batting, Shackley and Betts lead the team, but all have done heavy batting excepting Kee. The team has played about 21 games during the season, and the following record of those lost and won will no doubt be of interest:—

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Palmers | 8, | Homesteads | 7, |
| Palmers | 18, | West Brookfields | 0, |
| Palmers | 9, | Northampton Firemen | 5, |
| Palmers | 7, | Thorndikes | 6, |
| Palmers | 10, | Thorndikes | 4, |
| Palmers | 2, | Thorndikes | 1, |
| Palmers | 7, | Thorndikes | 6, |
| Palmers | 4, | Thorndikes | 5, |
| Palmers | 14, | Holyokes | 2, |
| Palmers | 6, | Chicopee Actives | 7, |
| Palmers | 7, | St. Jeromes, Holyoke | 9, |
| Palmers | 6, | Southbridges | 4, |
| Palmers | 3, | Southbridges | 10, |
| Palmers | 8, | L. J. Gunns | 8, |
| Palmers | 5, | West Brookfields | 4, |
| Palmers | 10, | Three Rivers | 13, |
| Palmers | 10, | Chicopee Amateurs | 8, |
| Palmers | 8, | Emeralds, Worcester | 7, |
| Palmers | 4, | Northampton Firemen | 5, |
| Palmers | 7, | Mutuals of Hartford | 1. |

Two of the above games were lost by the umpire, while the other four were lost simply because the boys could not "get there."

Burglars Enter Four Stores.

BUT GET A SMALL REWARD FOR THEIR PAINS.

Burglars made a clean sweep of the stores on the ground floor of French's block on Central street Wednesday night, but their reward was slight, less than $20 in cash, and some small articles. It is evident that there was more than one concerned in the affair, on account of the amount of work done. G. O. Henry's blacksmith and carriage shop at the east end of Park street was broken into for tools, and bits, drills, bit-stock and iron bars taken. The store of E. A. Buck & Co. was then visited, and an attempt made to force open the front doors. As they were double locked and would not yield, several holes were bored diagonally at the junction of the two half-doors, bars put in and the door crowded open, breaking the lock and splintering the wood-work on both sides. A pane of glass at the left, in a show-window, was broken, and revolvers scattered about the sidewalk. Two holes were drilled in the top of the safe, but the operators were evidently frightened away before their work was completed. They secured $1.04 in pennies from the money drawer, half a dozen revolvers, and a few razors and pocket knives.

At Sears & Cook's grocery the door sprung enough to let the lock slip by, and no damage was done. Here the till yielded about $8 in change. Several boxes of cigars, about two dozen cans of fruit and a quantity of sardines—in all about $25—were also taken.

The door at Davis's fancy goods store was a hard one, and in forcing it the heavy plate-glass in it was broken into innumerable pieces. About $5 in change rewarded them here, and some small fancy articles.

Chisels from the hardware store were used to pry open the door of Wassum's tailor shop, the glass here being smashed also. The safe was not locked, and the inside was all torn to pieces but failed to yield any money, so an overcoat, undercoat and a pair of pants were taken.

It is strange that no one heard the noise which the breaking wood and glass must have made. One man living near by said he heard a slight noise, about 3 o'clock, he thought, and it is surprising how many men have since been found who also heard a racket at 3 o'clock, some of them living several blocks away. Beyond this there is no clue to the guilty parties, other than that they are amateurs, from the manner in which the job was done, and live not far away, from the canned goods and eatables carried off.

Personal.

H. L. Holden was in Boston over Sunday.

Mrs. H. C. Strong is at Hartford, visiting her mother, Mrs. Cornelius Wilson.

David Knox, who has been quite sick for the past week, is recovering slowly.

Mrs. Calvin Torrey of Boston has been visiting Mrs. L. M. Shaw this week.

Mrs. Julia Masterson of Woonsocket, R. I., has been visiting her son this week.

Lawyer S. S. Taft made an address at a Republican rally at Granby Wednesday.

George Galpin of Bismarck was the guest of J. E. Miller a portion of the week.

Milton E. Holdsworth of Turner Falls spent Sunday with his parents on Park street.

Mrs. L. Moore and daughter of New York state are visiting Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Moore.

Mr. Bowen of South Manchester has been spending the week as the guest of F. J. Wassum.

John Masterson and wife and Miss Katie E. Hearn will spend the Sabbath at Woonsocket, R. I.

H. P. Longley of Westboro, formerly of this place, spent Sunday here among friends and relatives.

Mrs. Jerome Montague of Holyoke has been spending the week with Mrs. J. A. Breckenridge.

Mrs. Henry Osler of Chicago, Ill., will spend the remainder of the month with Mrs. L. M. Shaw.

Miss L. Gould of Northampton, who has been spending a few days with Miss Annie Shaw, has returned home.

L. M. Hodgkins, wife and daughter, of Florida, are visiting Mr. and Mrs. C. P. Stone at the Converse House.

Miss Annie Shaw has gone on a pleasure trip to Dover Plains, N. Y., where she will remain a week among friends.

J. M. Sisk, the faithful driver of the state primary school team, has returned from a week's vacation and resumed duties.

Prof. P. S. Masterson of White's Military Band of Providence, R. I., was in town the first of the week visiting relatives.

Conductor Sedgwick of the Ware River Railroad has been enjoying the autumnal scenery of New York state for the past few weeks.

D. B. Spaulding, cashier of the Stonington Savings Bank at Stonington, Ct., and wife were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. C. K. Gamwell the first of the week.

M. J. Dawson, janitor at the union passenger station, has been absent a portion of the week, having been assigned special detective work by the Boston & Albany Railroad Company between Rochdale and Jamesville, where so much trouble has been caused passenger trains by mischievous boys.

BRIMFIELD.

The Republicans will have a big rally at the town hall to-morrow evening, with speeches by Joseph H. Walker and E. F. Thompson of Worcester.

Invitations are out for the wedding of Elmer A. Lane and Nettie L. Adams next Tuesday evening, at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Hitchcock.

The Republicans will hold a caucus early next week to elect delegates to the representative district convention and to choose a town committee. The feeling is very general in the party that the candidate should come from Brimfield this year.

LUDLOW.

A manikin has been presented the village schools by interested citizens.

The concert which the Willing Hearts and Ready Hands intended giving has been postponed.

One of the pleasantest gatherings ever known in our quiet town was a party given last Saturday at the residence of Mrs. Albert Bly in honor of her grand-daughter, Miss Lillian Keith. Over thirty guests, most of them young ladies, were present. After partaking of a dainty and bountiful supper all repaired to the parlors, where music and dancing made all merry. A great many presents were left to remind Miss Lillian of her friends, and it is not likely that she will soon forget her fourteenth birthday.

BONDSVILLE.

The Methodist society is making arrangements for a turkey supper and entertainment, Wednesday and Thursday evenings, Oct. 31st and Nov. 1st.

The John Sullivan farm in the southeast part of Belchertown, composed of 200 acres of land, will be sold at auction next Thursday at 1 o'clock p. m., together with stock, grain, farming tools, etc.

Patrick J. Mansfield, Jr., of this place, was instantly killed at Springfield Tuesday morning by a kick from a horse. He went to Springfield last May to learn the tinsmith's trade with Simpson Clark. While taking care of the horse he had occasion to pass behind the animal, which struck out with both hind feet, striking the young man in the back of the head, at the base of the brain. He was fairly lifted off the floor by the force of the blow, and expired instantly.

WILBRAHAM.

The registrars meet at the Allis House this evening.

Mrs. Wells Phelps is spending a week with her daughter at Greenwich.

"Pieria" society will hold an open society in Fisk Hall Friday evening, Nov. 16.

The Ladies' Benevolent Society met with Mrs. Walter Hitchcock Thursday afternoon and evening.

Prof. Winchester is to deliver a lecture before the "Athena" society in Fisk Hall the last of the term.

The students of the academy had a holiday Wednesday, instead of the "Chestnut walk," as previously planned.

Dr. Horace G. Webber has entered into partnership with Dr. George Fuller of Monson, and will commence practice there the first of November. Dr. Stebbins Fosket will resume his former practice here for the present.

THREE RIVERS.

Cora E., wife of E. L. Derby, died at her former home in Orange Wednesday at the age of 26 years, after a not very long illness from consumption. Mr. Derby came to Palmer about three years ago as an employe of the New London Northern Railroad Company, but for the past two years has been station agent for that road at this place. He has the sympathy of the entire community in his recent affliction.

The funeral of Capt. David Milliken was held at the Baptist church Sunday afternoon at 2.30, and was attended by a large number of relatives and friends, also a delegation from Thomas Lodge of Masons at Palmer. Rev. M. S. Howard of Wilbraham, assisted by Rev. John Eyers of this place, officiated. Capt. Milliken was for a long time overseer of the dye house of the Palmer Mill, and many of the employes were present. He had been a resident of Three Rivers, and been identified with its interests ever since the present mill was built. He always took an active part in temperance work and everything that pertained to the well-being of his fellow-man. He enlisted in the war of the rebellion from Illinois, and was soon made captain. He leaves a widow and three sons, James I., assistant superintendent of the Palmer Mill, R. S., overseer of the dye-house at Thorndike, and A. A., overseer of the dressing and finishing rooms of the Lawrence corporation of Lowell.

WALES.

Salem J. Shaw of West Sutton has been spending a few days here among relatives.

Rev. H. P. Smith has bought 200 barrels of apples to ship to Hartford, Conn. He contemplates erecting a house on the old site this fall and winter, having it ready to occupy in the spring.

James Freeland has moved his family to Montville, Conn., where he will have charge of the entire business of Aaron Shaw's woolen mill. Mr Shaw has recently purchased a half interest in the mill owned by the Hooper heirs, which now gives him possession of the whole property.

Complaint was made to Justice H. A. McFarland Tuesday that the small house of Rev. H. P. Smith, occupied by his hired man, had been broken open and a feather bed and bed clothing stolen. Suspicion was at once fixed on Willie Walls and George Starkey of Holland, whereupon a warrant was issued for Starkey's arrest and put into Constable Willis's hands, who went to the home of Walls and arrested Starkey, who was the main actor in the case. The stolen property was found in the house of Walls, with whom Starkey boards. He was taken back to Wales and put in the care of Constable Switzer, who took him before Judge Robinson at Palmer Wednesday, when he was bound over to wait the hearing of the grand jury in December. Walls acknowledged the theft and gave up the bed, saying that he was drunk at the time of the theft and did not know much about it, so he was not arrested.

THORNDIKE.

The social dance at Union Hall last Friday evening was enjoyed by about fifty couples.

C. D. Henry's Theater Co. will appear at Union Hall for one week, commencing the 29th of the month.

The new barn which is being built for John Loftus is being pushed rapidly, and will soon be completed.

Mr. Sullivan's class in vocal and instrumental music now numbers about twelve, and still continues to enlarge.

The second hands returned the compliment Saturday evening and invited their overseers to an oyster supper.

There is talk of holding a Democratic rally in Union Hall in the near future, providing speakers can be secured.

What's the matter with the citizens of this village, that they do not take steps toward getting some street lights?

The subject of the morning address at the Congregational church next Sunday will be "God's aid in man's crisis." Evening service at 7. All are invited.

John Walker, while picking apples from a tree a few days ago, lost his footing and fell to the ground, a distance of twelve feet or more, and was injured somewhat internally.

Lyons and Luman's orchestra will furnish music for the Father Mathew dance, which will be held at West Warren on the evening of the 6th of November. A number from this place will attend.

The following letters remain uncalled for at the post office: Mrs. Annie Flemming, Peter Millett, Charles Paquette, John F. Swain, Mrs. Cora B. Smith, Fred Webster, Mrs. Willis, Miss Nellie Fye.

Patrick Hurley lost a valuable horse the other day, while on the road to Ware. An unknown dog jumped from the brush beside the road, frightening the horse, which ran and burst a blood vessel.

The auction sale of books and magazines belonging to the Thorndike Literary Club, which was to have taken place Saturday evening at the school-house, was postponed until next Saturday on account of the stormy weather.

The Emmet Club still continues to increase its membership at every meeting, and now has about 25 members. They also hold weekly rehearsals on the play they are to present Thanksgiving eve, which promises to be a grand success.

MONSON.

Don't fail to get your name on the voter's list.

A. D. Ellis is building an addition to his residence.

Jenks opens his branch store in Wales next week.

Several cases of typhoid fever are reported by the doctors.

Mrs. J. Stebbins of Brooklyn, N. Y., is visiting friends in town.

Mrs. Henry Aldrich's residence has been neatly painted this week.

The exterior of Rev. J. F. Lee's new residence is nearly completed.

Monson people turned out en masse to the Stafford fair on Thursday.

The livery business of James McBride was sold at auction on Monday.

Some of the straw shop women are going to Framingham the coming season.

Stewart & Harvey have the contract to build William Underwood's new barn.

Arthur E. Fitch, lawyer, may be consulted at the office of George H. Newton.

Wesley A. Squier has been appointed administrator of the estate of the late Arba Squier.

James Hobbs has been doing the telegraphing at the depot during C. L. Stiles' vacation.

Prof. Sullivan of Chicopee is organizing a class in vocal music, which will meet at the Catholic church.

The Windsor Club will give a reception to their women friends at the club rooms next Tuesday evening.

Rev. J. F. Lee is making a marked improvement in front of his new residence by grading and terracing.

Martin Hanley gave a description of his army experiences at the meeting of Marcus Keep post Monday evening.

There will be a service of song, with an address, at the Pease district school house at 3 p. m. next Sunday.

The decorations at the Congregational church last Sunday were very beautiful, and the exercises very interesting.

G. W. Seymour and W. G. Meacham attended the reunion of their regiment, the 22d Connecticut, at Suffield, Wednesday.

Dr. Horace Webber of Wilbraham is to move to Monson, and will associate in practice with Dr. G. E. Fuller Nov. 1st.

Misses McLaughlin and Sibley have opened a room in Diechmann's basement for the cleaning of men's garments and sewing.

C. A. Bradway and Rev. Mr. Emerson were elected delegates to the Christian Endeavor convention, held at Worcester Thursday.

C. A. Bradway feels justly proud over that silk umbrella, the first prize in Jenks' word contest. Miss Carry Beach won the second prize.

Several Monson people went to the Stafford fair Tuesday and Wednesday in spite of the rain, but returned home disappointed because of the postponement.

The following scholars have been neither absent nor tardy for the past month in District No. 13: Elsie Bradway, Lola Bradway, Fannie Bradway, Rosie Bradway, Winnie Bradway and Katie Bradway.

The stone-cutters' ball occurs at Central hall this evening, and a good time is assured. Music will be furnished by Colts' band of Hartford, and Prof. Fox will prompt.

The harvest concert at the Universalist church was postponed Sunday evening, on account of sickness among those who were to take part, and will be held at some future time.

The delegation from Springfield that was to inspect Monson academy and Flynt's granite quarries last Saturday did not come, owing to the unfavorable weather. The party is expected to-morrow.

The Republicans have elected these delegates to the representative convention: Lee Blanchard, E. D. Cushman, H. C. Norcross, L. C. Flynt, C. S. Phetteplace, A. D. Ellis, C. W. Holmes, Jr., R. P. Fay and William Sutcliffe.

Miss Emma Moulton, formerly a well known school teacher in Monson, died at her home in East Brookfield of consumption, last week Wednesday. The remains were brought to Moulton Hill cemetery for interment Saturday afternoon.

Ye small boy was greatly pleased when he learned at the close of the season Tuesday, that there would be no school on Wednesday, so he might attend the Stafford fair, but the rainy weather the following day put a dampener on all his anticipations.

Does the Palmer high school have any doubts in regard to the ability of the Monson academy team to play a good game of ball? If so, the latter club would enjoy nothing better than meeting them on the ball field this fall and giving them more "points" than they would get out of a winter's practice.

The Ware clerks played a return game with the clerks of this place on Flynt's park yesterday afternoon, which resulted in a victory for the Monsons by a score of 25 to 18. The Wares were given a reception at the Cushman House after the game. Supper was served, after which the gentlemen invited in their lady friends and dancing furnished amusement for the remainder of the evening.

The outlook for the straw business the coming winter is not very encouraging to the straw workers, and many are to leave town for positions in other shops. However, some interesting developments are expected soon. Rumors are to the effect that some of the former help of Fay, Peck & Co. have been notified that their services would be wanted the coming winter, and this statement has been verified in more than one instance. This goes to show that the firm intends to come to some settlement soon.

Evangelist Miss Grace Weiser will speak and sing at the Methodist church next Sunday morning at the regular service at 10.30. It is expected that meetings will be held at the same place every evening of the week at 7.30, except Saturday. Also at 3 p. m. on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday. Miss Weiser may be expected to sing and speak in all these meetings, and to have full charge of many. All are cordially invited to the opening service Sunday morning, also to as many of the subsequent meetings of the Sabbath and throughout the week as it may be found practicable to attend.

Personal.

Edward Morris is at home from Amherst college.

Mrs. Jane Bell is visiting her son in Franklin, Ct.

Mrs. Lottie Whittemore has taken a position with Mrs. S. J. Bradway for the coming season.

Geo. L. Jenks has been at the Hub buying goods this week.

Mrs. Cyrus Truesdale and daughter have been visiting friends in Springfield.

Bert Noble is taking a course of study at Childs' business college in Springfield.

Mrs. Arthur Seymour of Manchester, Ct., is visiting Mr. and Mrs. G. S. Seymour.

W. F. Bullington has secured a position with a straw firm at South Framingham.

Charles L. Moulton of East Brookfield has been visiting friends here this week.

Mrs. Oliver Hyde of Belchertown has been visiting her sister, Mrs. A. G. Chapman.

W. B. Messenger of Middlefield has been visiting his sister, Mrs. D. B. Needham, a few days.

Miss Addie Stebbins of Brooklyn, N. Y., has been the guest of Miss Mary Hathaway this week.

Timothy Keefe, a resident of Monson for the past 40 years, has moved his family to Rockland.

Mrs. E. E. Thompson has been the guest of Mr. and Mrs. E. D. Kelso of Springfield the past week.

WARE AND VICINITY.

The late William Hyde, by his will, gave $2000 to the public library.

F. P. Clark has moved into his new house on Church street, which is one of the finest residences in town.

There were four baptized at the Methodist church last Sunday, and six persons were taken into the church.

Rev. S. H. Newman of Brookfield will preach at the Methodist church next Sunday, in exchange with the pastor.

Levi W. Robinson is to leave town, having bought out the Worcester county agency of the White sewing machine at Worcester.

James McMahon lost one of his pair of grey horses Tuesday on account of its eating an extra allowance of oats, which it accidentally got at.

Prof. Turner gave a good stereopticon entertainment at the Town Hall last Friday evening, and All Saint's church was benefited nearly $100 thereby.

John H. Storrs, Jr., says "The Mansion House license has not been taken away, and it's not going to be." Are we to conclude from this that this famous case is to be dropped where it is?

A Republican caucus will be held at the district court room next Tuesday evening to choose delegates to the fifth Hampshire representative district convention, to be held at Enfield Oct. 24th.

A ladies' chorus class will be formed next Tuesday evening. Those wishing to become members will please leave their names with Miss H. S. Richardson next Tuesday, between 5 and 6 o'clock p. m.

Rev. A. T. Perry preached a sermon to the children last Sunday from the text "Suffer Little Children to Come Unto Me." The baptismal service in the afternoon was postponed on account of the weather.

Miss Lottie Romp, aged 18 years, died last Friday at the residence of C. H. Ormsby. The funeral was held at the Methodist church Sunday afternoon, with services by Rev. E. Hitchcock. There was a large attendance.

The first meeting of the Wednesday Evening Club for the season is to be held Nov. 14. A very pleasant programme has been arranged for these meetings for the winter, being a series of papers on the history of Ware.

The Harrison and Morton cavalry battalion, which was out for practice last evening, was stoned as it was passing along the street. If this is a sample of the opposition the Republicans have, the sooner the latter are placed in power the better.

A Kindergarten class has been started by Miss H. M. Severance. For the present it is held in the house of Rev. Mr. Duffield, but should it meet with favor and grow, perhaps a more convenient place can be secured and the teacher encouraged to stay and help do what seems to be a needed work.

The alarm of fire last Friday night was caused by a fire in a cattle car which was bringing home a herd of cattle belonging to Charles Robinson of Barre Plains, that had been to Springfield to the Bay State Fair. The cattle were gotten out without damage, except breaking the horn of one valuable cow.

DeWitt L. Richards of Albany, N. Y., and Emma L. Cooke of Ware, were married Oct. 10th at the residence of Miss Waterman, the ceremony being performed by Rev. E. Hitchcock. There were many costly presents by shopmates of the bride and other friends in Ware, and from friends in Mr. Richards's office in Albany.

The second grand Republican rally will be held in the Town Hall next Monday evening at 8 o'clock. The speakers are Hon. J. Q. A. Brackett, Lieut. Governor of Massachusetts, and Hon. Chas. H. Allen of Lowell, member of Congress from Massachusetts. The Harrison and Morton Battalion expects to parade before the time of the meeting at the hall. Ladies are invited to be present.

The Congregational church at Ware Center, the East Congregational church and the French Protestant church, are invited to be present at the examination and ordination of Arthur Titcomb at the Congregational church in Gilbertville, Wednesday, Oct. 31, at 3 o'clock p. m. Mr. Titcomb has been engaged as acting pastor of this church for one year.

The Harrison and Morton battalion is making preparations for a fine showing, and their first appearance in public is expected to be next Monday evening. W. V. Howard is commander-in-chief, with F. P. Clark for the cavalry and Chas. Sargent for the infantry as lieutenants. The uniforms are furnished by F. N. Hosmer. It is expected there will be 200 footmen and 60 or more horsemen.

JOTTINGS FROM THE HUB.

From our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, Oct. 17, 1888.

Two different sets of advices come to the city regarding the political situation. Some of our friends from the country say that it is perfectly dead as regards political interests, that no one seems to care anything about political matters as they usually do on presidential years, and that one would not think that a canvass was in progress. That is one side of the story. On the other side is the testimony of those who have been on the stump addressing audiences in all parts of the state. They report that they never saw such a general interest as there is this year, and they think that there will be a tremendously large vote. This was the report in the early weeks of the campaign, but it continues to be made even till to-day, and there can be no doubt that the report is correct. The diverse statements can be reconciled in this way, that people are not talking much about politics this year, for very likely they are more undecided as to where they ought to vote, or feel as if they had need of more light, and so they do not feel as much as usual like talking with their friends. But when an opportunity is offered for them to hear sound political and financial doctrine, then they are most eager to improve it. This will explain the apparent deadness of the campaign, as it is reported to exist in the interior of the state, and at the same time will account for the large attendance at the political rallies. This is most encouraging, for the right side has nothing to fear from a long discussion. Deliberation only adds to its strength.

A meeting of the Republican state committee was held at the headquarters to-day, and about twenty members were present. Some who were not there sent in their reports by mail, and in that way the committee heard from 35 of the 40 senatorial districts. According to the statement of Dr. Burden, the chairman of the state committee, these reports were all of them of the most encouraging nature. They show that the party is getting better organized than it has been hitherto, and that the members are getting work done which is essential in order to have the party in good fighting trim. He also says that the reports from the different congressional districts are excellent, and that the outlook is favorable. He is quite sure that the Republicans will carry eleven out of the twelve districts in the state, but at the same time, it is evident that his cheerfulness is not as well founded as he wishes it was. The fact is that several of the congressional districts are very close, and the result appears at this time to be very doubtful. In the third, fifth, seventh, ninth and tenth this is so, and there is a decided uncertainty about the second and sixth, though they are generally conceded to the Republicans. With Josiah Quincy in the second against Councilor Morse, about whose nomination there was such a contest, there will be likely to be many Republican bolters. Some talk has been heard of running ex-Senator James S. Allen of Bridgewater as an independent against Morse, but it does not seem likely that he will run. Quincy is young, clean and able, and would be a credit to the district, but the fact that he is opposed to the present high tariff will count against him. The feeling against Morse is as deep on the part of some of the friends of Dr. Burden as was the feeling of the Bates men in the Worcester district two years ago, and it is possible may lead to a similar result. But the probability on the whole is that Morse will be elected.

The tariff holds the field against all other issues, and the campaign is so far advanced now that the drift of discussion cannot be changed. The voter will want to make up his mind to vote as if nothing were at stake except the tariff question. Whether or not it has been the best policy, it is the fact that the debates have run almost exclusively to the tariff, and the campaign literature has hardly made mention of anything else. Perhaps the Republicans have put out one or two little things relating to other matters, but they have not issued anything of consequence on any other topic, and certainly the literature of the Democrats and of the Tariff Reform League has been exclusively in that line. The League will have out something this week bearing on the point of the damage to industry which has been caused by the tariff. It will undertake to show that while some manufacturing has been created by the protective system, yet other industries equally important have been destroyed, and that the latter would have given employment to thousands of workingmen without putting a tax on other industries, while the present industries require a tax upon the public in the form of a tariff to enable them to live. Of course the home market which would have been created by the industries thus destroyed would have been as good as that now enjoyed under the protected industries. This is a most interesting field of investigation, though it is not as certain in its demonstration as the figures which can be supported from the census. It is a complicated matter, but the discussion of this campaign will bear fruit hereafter, and will be of positive benefit to the country.

Dr. Burden has his congressional fight off his mind, and so has more time to give to the duties of his position. The meeting of the state committee to-day gave an unwonted appearance of life to the headquarters. The committee has many speakers now on the stump, and would be glad of more.

But the view of the situation would not be complete with mere mention of the outlook as it seems from the Republican headquarters. Though the Democrats have no hope of electing their state ticket, yet they do hope to increase their membership in the House of Representatives. They now have the third, fourth, ninth and tenth districts. They hope to hold all of these and to carry also the fifth, where Col Higginson is running against Banks, and the seventh, where Roads is the Democratic candidate against Coggswell. Two years ago Coggswell did not have a majority of his district, and the split has been largely made up in the interest of Roads. He is popular, and the fishery issue does not have much of a grip on the people of either party. Every one knows that Banks has seen his best days, and the fact that Higginson was the commander of the first regiment of colored troops in the war will help him with the colored people. These are factors which come into the account, and no one can overlook them in making a true estimate of the situation.

The base ball season has ended and the much-praised "twenty-thousand-dollar battery" of the Boston club has been able to keep the whole crowd up as high as fourth place in the list. The managers have secured the pick of the now defunct Detroit club, and say that they will have good batters next season. So we live in hope, and meantime the pennant goes to some other city every year.

"From Year To Year."

"One of Raphael Tuck & Sons' Calendars for the year 1889 is really a gem. It is in book form, and designed by J. Pauline Sunter, with couplets by Helen M. Burnside. January shows two little girls who come timidly along drawing behind them a little wagon full of dolls; they hold one another by the hand and look as pretty as they are innocent, their hair fluttering in the breeze and falling in masses over their foreheads, their chubby little faces aglow with good nature and even dolls laughing. Their appeal—'Could we stay this year with you?'—could not be refused by any one. They evidently stay the year, for in the pages that follow they are shown in various occupations, feeding the birds, plucking wild flowers, rollicking in the grassy fields, and sitting by the seashore, making little rivers in the sand. On the page between June and July there is a picture of a milestone almost hidden by the flowers, but on which the inscription 'Half Way' can be seen. Throughout the Calendar they are dressed in costumes appropriate to the different months of the year. In April they take refuge from the showers 'neath umbrellas; in May they fall asleep among the daisies in the field as they murmur:—

"'Nodding, nodding, to and fro,
In the grass the daisies grow.'

"In December they depart, muffled up to protect themselves from the cold, their satchels on their arms; and as the hands of the clock point to midnight they say:—

"'We hope you have had a pleasant year.'

"The last page of the calendar has a candle burnt almost to the bottom, and is just dying out, indicating the close of the year."

This charming calendar book for 1889 has eighteen pages of color and monochrome illustrations, gold edge, silk cord and tassels.

How Repulsive

Is bad breath, and yet how many otherwise attractive, polite, and particular people afflict their friends with the foul odor of their breath. If there was no remedy for this, it might excite our sympathy, but as there is no need of a foul breath, it is an unpardonable breach of good manners to obtrude such an offense on good society.

Foul breath arises from disordered digestion which can be corrected by using Sulphur Bitters, and the result will be a pure, sweet breath.

After using Ely's Cream Balm two months I was surprised and delighted to find that the right nostril, which was closed up entirely for over twenty years, was open and free as the other, and can use it now as I could not do for many years. I feel very thankful.—R. H. CRESSENHAM, 275, 18th St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Interested People.

Advertising a patent medicine in the peculiar way in which the proprietor of Kemp's Balsam, for Coughs and Colds, does it is indeed wonderful. He authorizes all druggists to give to those who call for it a sample bottle free, that they may try it before purchasing. The large bottles are 50c. and $1.00. We certainly would advise a trial. It may save you from consumption.

Advice to Mothers.

Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of cutting teeth? If so, send at once and get a bottle of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures dysentery and diarrhœa, regulates the stomach and bowels, cures wind colic, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING is pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female nurses and physicians in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price 25 cents a bottle. 1y23

BUCKLEN'S ARNICA SALVE.

THE BEST SALVE in the world for Cuts, Bruises, Sores, Ulcers, Salt Rheum, Fever Sores, Tetter, Chapped Hands, Chilblains, Corns, and all Skin Eruptions, and positively cures Piles, or no pay required. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction, or money refunded. Price 25 cents per box. For Sale by Legro & Lynde. 1y29

A Certainty.

Steele's Little Bile Pills are without an equal for stimulating the liver to healthy action, and creating a proper secretion of bile, thus removing from the system the germs of malaria, curing constipation, indigestion, and inducing a healthy circulation of the blood, without which no one can enjoy sound health. They are small, but effective; free from nauseating propensities and griping pains, and do not interfere in their action with the ordinary routine of daily life. Heavily sugar coated. To be had of LeGro & Lynde, for 25 cents per bottle.

THE VERDICT UNANIMOUS.

W. D. Sult, Druggist, Bippus, Ind., testifies: "I can recommend Electric Bitters as the very best remedy. Every bottle sold has given relief in every case. One man took six bottles, and was cured of Rheumatism of 10 years' standing." Abraham Hare, druggist, Bellville, Ohio, affirms: "The best selling medicine I have ever handled in my 20 years' experience, is Electric Bitters." Thousands of others have added their testimony, so that the verdict is unanimous that Electric Bitters do cure all diseases of the Liver, Kidneys or Blood. Only a half dollar a bottle at LeGro & Lynde's Drug Store. 2

A WOMAN'S DISCOVERY.

"Another wonderful discovery has been made, and that too by a lady in this county. Disease fastened its clutches upon her and for seven years she withstood its severest tests, but her vital organs were undermined and death seemed imminent. For three months she coughed incessantly, and could not sleep. She bought of us a bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption and was so much relieved on taking first dose that she slept all night and with one bottle has been miraculously cured. Her name is Mrs. Luther Lutz." Thus write W. C. Hamrich & Co., of Shelby, N. C.—Get a free trial bottle at LeGro & Lynde's Drug Store.

Very Wonderful

are the effects produced by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Sores, Scabs, Glandular Swellings, Boils, Carbuncles, and all kinds of Humors disappear, as if by magic by the use of this STANDARD BLOOD-PURIFIER.

F. C. James, of Albany, Greene County, Tenn., writes: "Ayer's Sarsaparilla saved the life of my only child. When three years old her head was covered with Scrofulous Sores. She became almost helpless. Skillful physicians did all they could to relieve her, but failed. At last I purchased a bottle of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, gave it to her according to directions, and she immediately began to improve. Encouraged by the result, I continued to give her this medicine until the cure was complete."

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
Sold by all Druggists. Price $1; six bottles $5.

S. S. S. FOR THE BLOOD.

PEED'S MILL, TEXAS, June 20, 1888.—The Swift Specific Company, Atlanta, Ga.—Gentlemen: One of my children was troubled with rheumatism and boils for about two years. We gave her various kinds of medicine, but without profit, and began to despair of curing her at all. I was persuaded to try your Swift's Specific. After she had used several bottles the diseases all disappeared, and she is now a hale, hearty and healthy girl twelve years old. Another child has just become afflicted in the same way, and I am using the S. S. S. and anticipate a prompt and permanent cure.

N. C. WAGGONER.

RICH HILL, MO., July 7, 1888—The Swift Specific Co., Atlanta, Ga.—Gentlemen: Our little girl when but three weeks old broke out with eczema. We tried the prescriptions from several good doctors, but without any special benefit. We tried S. S. S., and by the time one bottle was gone her head began to heal, and by the time she had taken six bottles she was completely cured. Now she has a full and heavy head of hair—a robust, hearty child. I feel it but my duty to make this statement.

Respectfully, H. T. SHOBE.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., June 27, 1888—The Swift Specific Co., Atlanta, Ga.—Gentlemen: In 1886 I contracted blood poison, and at once sought a physician, who treated me for several months. By his advice I went to Crab Orchard Springs, Ky., where his course of treatment was carefully observed. I recovered, as I thought, but the next spring pimples began to appear on my face and body. These gradually increased to sores and running ulcers. I was advised to try S. S. S., and immediately after taking it I commenced to improve, slowly at first, but more rapidly afterwards, and soon nothing remained to tell of my trouble. My blood is now thoroughly cleansed, and my system free from taint, and I owe my present condition—a perfect cure—to your medicine. I cheerfully give this statement that others who have suffered as I have may reap the same benefit.

HARDY M. BURT, 24 West Ninth St.

HOMER, LA., May 25, 1888—The Swift Specific Co., Atlanta, Ga.—Gentlemen: About two years ago my general health gave way entirely. I was so debilitated that I almost despaired of ever feeling well again. All that the physicians did for me brought no permanent relief. Friends insisted that I should give S. S. S. a fair trial, although I thought it would be throwing away money. After taking a thorough course my health and strength returned, and I must say that S. S. S. alone cured me, as I discarded all others while using it. As a tonic I can most heartily recommend it; for general debility, it certainly is a specific.

AMONG THE PARAGRAPHERS.

Barber (desirous to please)—"How would you like your hair cut, sir?" Customer (innocently)—"First-rate! That's what I came in here for."—The Idea.

"Hopeful Youth—"Is Miss De Cash in?" Servant—"Yis, sor." Hopeful Youth—"Is she engaged?" "Yis, sor; but he isn't here this evening. Come in."—The Cartoon.

Minister—"You are a nice innocent looking little boy, Johnny. I'm sure you don't go fishing Sunday?" Johnny—"No, sir; me and the Mud alley boys play ball.—Burlington Free Press.

A Gorham man has eaten so much pop corn the past winter that his wife now has to feed him on glue and molasses, and wet him down every morning to keep him from blowing away.—Stray.

Mrs. Flysparrow (to new acquaintance)—"You seem to be an inveterate lover of the weed, Mr. Nicotine. May I ask if your father smokes?" "I trust not, madam; he has dead some time."—Stray.

"Ah, Mrs. Plainley, you were at the Black street church yesterday. Who supplied the pulpit?" "My husband did the woodwork and Chord & Tossels furnished the upholstery."—Boston Transcript.

Old Boy—"Thomas, if my wife asks you where I am, tell her I have gone to the opera." Servant—"Certainly, sir; certainly; but where are you really going, in case anybody else should want to know?"—Texas Siftings.

This, from the Journal of Education, may be true but it sounds ominous: "If we could see ourselves as others see us, most of us would hardly see ourselves at all." A great deal depends upon the condition of the I.—Stray.

Miss Bruce (who has heard that her friend Miss Deering has had a falling out with Mr. Downey)—Why, I thought, Eugenia, that you and Dick were solid. Miss Deering (icily)—O, dear, no—only plated.—The Cartoon.

"Are you going out riding?" "Yes." "Why do you take that bell along instead of a whip?" "Because, you see, I bought this horse from the street railroad company, and he won't move unless I ring a bell."—Texas Siftings.

To the long list of "horrors of 1888" another must be added. A "musical prodigy" only seven years old, who plays on the violin and piano, has been discovered in Florida. The yellow fever is raging in the same state.—Norristown Herald.

Leader of lynching party—"Now, young man, make a full confession, or up you go." "I was fooling with a gun. I pointed it at my brother, and—" "You didn't know it was loaded?" "No." "Men, pull on the rope and let him swing."—Nebraska Journal.

Chumley—"I'm in a fix to-day, Brown, for money; what would you say if I were to ask you for a temporary loan of a hundred or two dollars?" Brown—"Well, Chumley, if the loan will be temporary, I might let you have the two dollars.—Accident News.

"Invalid—"I have been here at these springs, doctor, six weeks, and I don't see that the water has had the slightest effect." Dr. Candid—"You must have patience. There was a man here last season who did not die until after he had been here two months."—Texas Siftings.

Finks (looking in the mirror)—"George, why didn't you remove this grease spot from the lapel of my coat?" George—"Dat a grease spot, sah? I fought it was one o' dem campaign buttons; and I was telling 'Rastus dat it was de purtiest one I'd seen yet."—Boston Transcript.

Dealer (to clerk)—"I am going to mark those boys' diagonal suits $15 to-morrow." Clerk—"Fifteen dollars! Why, we've been selling them for $10 all along." Dealer—"I know it, but I'm going to give away a base ball bat with each one of them free of charge."—Detroit Free Press.

"So there was a row at your house last night, Quigley?" "Yes, my uncle was badly hurt. But how did you hear about it? I took every precaution to have the affair kept quiet." "What precautions did you take?" "I engaged several detectives to work on the case."—Nebraska Journal.

Wife—"I stopped at Mme. Medium's today and asked to be put in communication with mother's spirit." Husband—"Did you succeed?" Wife—"No; after two or three ineffectual trances the madame was forced to give it up." Husband—"Perhaps, my dear, she tried in the wrong place."—New York Sun.

"John," said Mrs. Billus, affectionately, "I wish I could do something to relieve your toothache, or, at least, to help you forget it. Shall I sing for you?" And she seated herself at the piano. "I—I guess I can stand it Maria," moaned Mr. Billus, bracing himself in his chair; "go ahead."—Chicago Tribune.

"Daniel," remarked the Great Hesitator, as they sat at lunch, "can you tell me why the Mills bill is like this piece of pie?" "Sire, I give it up—something about a condition, not a theory that confronts us, ain't it?" "Don't trifle." "Well, most royal Reformer, why is the Mills bill like that piece of pie?" "Because it's an entering wedge, Daniel."—Chicago Tribune.

A KANSAS TORNADO.

"One July night," continued the tall man, "I had my wheat all stacked ready for thrashing, and went to bed feeling as rich as if I owned the country. About midnight, as near as I can recollect, I heard a clap of thunder, and then the house began to rock like a willow tree. Then everything was quiet for a while, and I went to sleep. Early the next morning my wife got up and looked out of the window,"

"'John?' said she, 'where on earth is your wheat?'"

"'What?' said I, jumping out of bed, 'What's that you say?'"

"'Where's the wheat?'"

"I looked out of the window, too, and stranger, I saw the most remarkable sight I ever saw. There wasn't a grain of wheat within a mile of me. There wasn't a remnant of my barn. My barnyard was gone, the horse, the cows, and even the pigs were gone. I got dressed and walked out doors. The place was changed, stranger—changed in a single night. My house was sitting in a garden by the side of a creek. There was a new barn in the yard, some red cows—mine were white; some black pigs—mine were spotted; and instead of wheat there was the allfiredest stack of cornstacks you ever looked at. I thought at first I was dreaming, and asked my wife to kick me, but I wasn't. About breakfast time some neighbors came in and asked where Mr. Jones was. I never heard of him."

"'He used to live here,' they said. 'He lived here last night."

"Then I told them of the crash and the rocking, and they said I must have been struck by a tornado. I asked where I was they said in Izurd county, which was fifty miles south of where I went to bed. Sure enough, they were right, The strangest part of it was, the house wasn't hurt a bit. The roof even didn't leak. The neighbors said it was a visitation of Providence, and the place belonged to me. But that wasn't all, stranger. About a year after I heard from some of my old neighbors that Jones' house had been moved right up to where my old house stood, by the same blasted wind. We both concluded to stay where we were, and avoid any trouble on that account. I've been away three months, and can't exactly say where I do live now, but I expect I am still at the old stand."

CORNS.

No, I would not have them removed by surgery," though it can "be done with safety," as it is easy to prevent them, and cheaper to remove them yourself. To prevent them, wear well-fitting boots, neither too small, nor too large. Corns are caused by too great friction of the surface, serving as a protection to the nerves beneath, on the same principle that the skin thickens on the insides of the hands of the blacksmith, and others who do rough work particularly. You have simply not to cause any, not to "raise" them. If the boots should not be worn, or any thing of the kind, for a few months, the corns would disappear. as there would be no use for them. As they are albuminous, and as albumen is easily dissolved by an alkali, they can easily be removed by a few applications of any strong alkali, as potash, or even saleratus, frequently applied. Should any strong alkali be used, it is well to have some vinegar, or any acid, at hand, to neutralize any that might be on any other part by accident, as the acid will destroy the alkali. If also, it should "eat in" too much causing pain, the vinegar may be applied to the corn. (Warts may be removed in the same way.) It is easy to put a pad, with a hole in the centre, around the corn, protecting it from the pressure, and promoting comfort. Just to the extent that they are thus protected, they will disappear.—Dr. Hanaford in Household.

LONG CONFINEMENT FROM SICKNESS.

When the sick person is confined to bed for more than a few days, bed sores are a danger that must be carefully guarded against. They are most insidious in their approach and often neither patient or nurse is aware of anything being wrong until the mischief is done. In most cases they are easily prevented but they are always very difficult to cure. They appear most frequently on the lower part of the back, particularly if the sick person is in the habit of lying on the back and seldom changing the position. To prevent their formation the back must be bathed twice a day with a solution of tannic acid, alcohol, brandy or any spirit, to toughen the skin, and when dry powdered with corn starch, buckwheat meal, pulverized common starch, or any absorbent powder. If this is done faithfully it will be effectual. When the sufferer is very thin the shoulder blades and elbows should be frequently examined, and if there is redness, or chafing treat it in the same way. If through neglect a bed sore has formed the part must be relieved from pressure by arranging two pillows on a firm foundation so that the sore will come in the space between them. It must be washed by squeezing tepid water over it from a sponge and dressed with any healing ointment spread on soft linen.—Elizabeth Robinson Scovil, in Good Housekeeping.

SOMETHING ABOUT HOYLE.

"According to Hoyle," is phrase common among card players, many of whom are under the impression that Hoyle was a reformed gambler who turned his attention to bookmaking as a means of keeping himself out of the poor house.

Edmund Hoyle was born over 200 years ago, and died at the advanced age of 97, dying in Cavendish square, London, in 1739. He was among the first who took a special interest in whist, and after it became a craze he devoted several years of his life to teaching the game at a guinea a lesson. Some suppose that he invented the game, but it was well known before he was born. However, he did much to perfect it. He was paid $500 for a treatise on whist, which was published in 1743. At that time he was attached to a government office in Ireland. Toward the close of his life he revised his treatise, and included in it backgammon and other popular games of the day.

If this were not written by a woman it would, no doubt, be regarded as libelous:

"A worrying woman you never can please,
She's always unhappy and never at ease;
And with nothing to vex her, she'll worry, no doubt,
Because she has nothing to worry about."

TRUE ECONOMY.—It is true economy to buy Hood's Sarsaparilla, for 100 Doses for One Dollar," is original with and true only of this popular medicine. If you wish to prove this, buy a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla and measure its contents. You will find it to hold 100 teaspoonfuls. Now read the directions, and you will find that the average dose for persons of different ages is less than one teaspoonful. This is certainly conclusive and unanswerable evidence of the peculiar strength and economy of Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"I took Hood's Sarsaparilla for loss of appetite, dyspepsia, and general languor. It did me a vast amount of good, and I have no hesitancy in recommending it."—J. W. Willeford, Quincy, Ill.

"I have been troubled by scrofulous affection all my life. It is one of the marked recollections of my boyhood days, and for several years has rendered me unable to labor much. I think Hood's Sarsaparilla, which I have been using at intervals for ten years, is the best thing I have ever taken. I am now 60, and my general health seems better than ever.—H. D. Abbott, Warren, N. H.

Cleveland's
Superior
Baking Powder
The Purest and Best.

Is made only of strictly pure grape cream of tartar, strictly pure bicarbonate of soda, and a small portion of flour as a preservative, nothing else whatever, and is warranted entirely free from alum, ammonia, phosphates, lime, and all other adulterations frequently found in baking powders. The character of materials used, their purity, and the nicety of their combination, render Cleveland's superior baking the most healthful and most economical in use, and it always affords wholesome, nutritious, and delicious food.

It is recommended for purity, healthfulness and efficiency by government and state chemists, chemists of boards of health, and professors in institutions of learning throughout the country.

Brimfield, Mass., Oct. 11, 1888.

3-28 OLIVE H. BAKER.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS,— HAMPDEN, SS. September 28th, A. D. 1888. By virtue of an execution which issued on a judgment recovered in the District Court of Eastern Hampden in said county, on the fourth day of August, A. D. 1888, in favor of Lorenzo Hutchinson of Monson, in said county, and against John Barry and James Barry, both of said Monson, I have this day taken all the right, title and interest which the said defendants or either of them have, including the right to redeem any of the said tracts of land hereinafter mentioned which may be subject to mortgage, to wit: A tract of land containing four and one-half acres, situate in said Monson, and bounded and described as follows, beginning at a stake and stones at the northwest corner of the lot and running southerly about twenty-five rods to a stake and stones, thence easterly on land formerly owned by Alston Calkins about twenty-seven rods to a stake and stones, thence northerly on land now or formerly of George S. Harvey about twenty-four rods to a stake and stones, thence westerly to the first mentioned bound; also a tract of land containing about sixteen acres, situate in said Monson and bounded southerly by land of Hiram Stacey, westerly by land of James Fitzgerald, northerly by highway leading from Monson to Wilbraham, and easterly by land of Patrick Carroll and land of William N. Flynt; also three other tracts of land situate in Monson and joining each other, and being a part of the Rodolphus Homer farm so-called, the first tract containing twelve acres and 133 rods more or less, and is same known as the south pasture lot, the second tract contains nine and one-half acres more or less, and is same known as the south mowing lot, the third tract contains twenty-eight and three-fourths acres more or less, and is same known as the west pasture, said three tracts being full described in deed of James G. Allen to said James Barry, dated May fourth, A. D. 1874, and recorded in Hampden Registry of deeds, book 313, page 490, and on Thursday, the first day of November next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, in front of the Court House in Palmer in said county, I shall offer for sale by public auction to the highest bidder said right, title and interest, including the right to redeem any of said tracts which may be subject to mortgage, to satisfy said executon and all fees and charges of sale.

4-26 H. A. NORTHROP, Deputy Sheriff.

A Thought.

In Grandma's old oaken chair I sat,
  Thinking the moments away;
A thought of the past had o'er me come,
  And I ceased all work that day.
On yonder meadows I gazed afar—
  Eyes, dreamy, were filled with tears—
On visions of happy scenes gone past,
  Again lived the by-gone years.

Clasped in my hand a book lay open
  To Longfellow's "Rainy Day,"
My soul was full of sombre feeling,
  So I thrust the book away
And wondered if life's sun were shining
  'Hind the clouds encircling me.
A sob arose—I could not check it—
  As I thought what life might be.

My thought linger'd not in the present,
  But the time when 'round my soul
Romance had woven her tangled meshes,
  Her net of shimmering gold.
I gazed in the eyes of my hero—
  His eyes so tender and true—
Whils't he breathed, in words impassioned,
  A vow he could never undo.

He came to me out of the darkness,
  A halo of rad'ant light;
I gave him the love of my girlhood,
  Pure as the lily so white,
For his honored words had won me.
  I dreamed of the future's bliss
While he held me close to his bosom,—
  Pressed on my lips his first kiss.

Time and care then passed me lightly,
  My sweetheart was by my side;
I blushed when fondly he kissed me
  And called me his darling bride.
I gave not a thought to the future,
  But lived in a world my own;
Enshrined in youth's holiest passion—
  Love, that to woman is known.

But, ah! could I e'er have believed it?
  I was doomed to the bitterest woe;
The shadows were closing around me—
  Surely, sadly and low.
For the man to whom I'd entrusted
  The priceless love of my heart,
Had broken the vows he had spoken,
  Each word a thrice-poisoned dart.

For days I awaited his message
  Which never came unto me;
It was the old, old story—oft told,—
  Man's lack of fidelity,
Youth's healing balms soothed not the wound;
  Of his mem'ry still I sing;
To his mem'ry and his truer self
  Fondly, will ever I cling.

Grandma's voice is calling me to come,
  And I know my dream is o'er,
For back to this world must I hasten now,
  And think of the past no more.

—Hattie E. Schell.

THE COOK OF THE PHŒNIX.

The boys at Camp Hilarity were having what they called a "high old time." They sat, or lay at full length, on the rocky, barren ground around a roaring camp fire, for the air was keen, although the month was June. The day that was just closed had been the regular monthly pay-day. The mine in which they worked, the Phœnix, had yielded an enormous and wholly unexpected amount of rich ore, and the superintendent and part owner, Jared Hale, had generously given to each man employed at the mine $25 more than the pay roll called for.

"I'll make it fifty, boys," he said, "if you'll make the old Phoenix turn out as much ore next month as she has this."

"We'll do it, boss, if she has it in her," replied Scotty Sharp, "and I believe she has and more too."

The Phœnix mine was almost at the summit of a barren mountain in the Rocky range. Its discovery had been the last half hopeful, half despairing effort of Jared Hale's ten years of almost ceaseless and altogether unavailing prospecting in many a mountain gulch and on many a mountain slope and summit.

With the first discovery of mineral in the Phœnix he had sold half his claim for a trifling sum, that he might go on developing the mine, the real value of which he little suspected. And now he knew that the Phœnix was one of the richest in the range, so rich that he did not care much if he had sold half of it for five hundred dollars.

"It's got enough mineral in it for half-a dozen men," he said, "and half of a good thing like this is enough for a fellow that hasn't known what it was to have a decent suit of his clothes to his back, and hardly a decent meal 'o victuals for ten years."

So he and his partner were on the best of terms. Hale stayed up in the mountain and superintended the work at the mine, while Tom Logan, his partner, lived with his family at D——, a small mountain town fifty miles distant, to which the ore from the Phœnix was sent to the reduction works there located.

Camp Hilarity was fifteen miles from the nearest store or post office. The camp itself consisted of one long, low, log cabin, a general boarding-house, and three or four smaller log cabins, all occupied by the forty or more men employed at the Phœnix mine.

All of the men took their meals in the long, low, log cabin, down the center of which there ran a rough table of unplaned pine boards, with its worn and stained cover of white oil cloth.

The men were very hilarious that June night. They laughed and joked and told stories and sang songs.

Jared Hale was the merriest man among them. He sang louder and longer, and told the best stories of them all; but in the midst of his hilarity he stopped suddenly and said, with a shade of annoyance in his tone:

"But it's too bad about the cook pulling out for Denver to-day and leaving us in the lurch. Of course the fellow had to go, his family being sick, but it leaves us in a bad fix all the same. You boys want good food, hard as you work. Any of you know how to cook?"

No one replied for a moment, then from the gloom and the shadow of the pines in the rear of the lounging men, a strange voice said quietly:

"I do, boss; I'm purty considabel of a cook, if I do say it myself."

Every face was turned in the direction from whence the voice came. Most of the men rose to their feet. Jared Hale started quickly up and cried out:

"Well, who re you, and where are you?"

A man came slowly forward and stood with his hat off in the full light of the flaming fire. None of the men had ever seen him before. He was tall and grizzled and uncouth; his beard and hair had long been uncombed and uncut, and were of unusual length. He stooped a little as he walked; he had a careworn, sober face, and great, dull, dark eyes that gave to his whole face an appealing, pathetic look. He was evidently about forty years of age. He seemed somewhat confused as he stood there with his worn old hat in hand, a target for so many curious but not unfriendly eyes.

"I'm Jasper Breen, gentlemen," he said slowly; "Old Jas, folks generally calls me, an' I come from nowhere an' everywhere. The Lawd only knows where I ain't hung out, durin' the last ten years, an' what I aint done fer an honest livin' in that time; but I kep' honest, gentlemin, an' I'm honest still. Your gold dust an' your pretty bank ain't no more to me nor the dirt under my feet's long's they aint my own that I come fair by."

"How did you happen to come away up here, so far from the main trail?" asked Jared Hale.

"Well, I see the smoke coming from the trees up here on this here mounting when I was way down there on the trail, an' thinks I to me, I can jist about reach that camp fire by dark, an' I reckon they'll let me stay over night, anyhow, an' if they don't, they cayn't more than turn me away, an' it'll be the fust time a miner ever turned me off when I was cold an' hungry an' dead broke as I am this minnit; yes, sir, boss, I aint got a cent on earth, an' I—I—well, boss, I've walked more'n forty miles sence sun up, an' I aint had a bite to eat, not a bite."

There was a pathetic little quaver in his soft, drawing voice as he finished, and the great mournful eyes glistened in the firelight.

"You aint?" said Jared Hale. "Well, then I reckon you are ready for your supper, and you can just come along with me and try your hand at cooking by getting up a supper for yourself—you can have full swing in our commissary."

"I'm a right good cook," said the man as he walked with Jared down the long cabin near the mine. "I cooked six months in a res'rant down to Leadville, an' was meat cook four months in Aspen, an' I allers did the cookin' for the diff'rent gangs I've prospected with. I wisht you'd try me, an if you reely want a cook, I can beat the Dutch on sody biskits an' vension flour gravy."

Now "sody biskits" and vension "flour gravy" were delicacies greatly esteemed by the men of Camp Hilarity, and their last cook had been lacking in good biscuit and gravy making ability.

"You'll suit the boys to a T if you're an expert in that direction," said Jared, "and I'll give you a chance to try your hand; but you want to tidy yourself up a bit, man."

So Jasper Breen tidied himself up best he could, and became cook of the Phœnix mine. He was popular from the beginning. All of the men liked him. It would have been hard to find reasonable cause of complaint with Jasper Breene. He was so mild-mannered, so inoffensive, so obliging, and so cheery, in spite of the sorrowful and the dull eyes that seemed to have been made for tears alone. And then his venison gravy and soda biscuits were beyond criticism. The men vowed, some of them swore, that "Old Jas," as they called him, was the best cook that the Phœnix ever had or ever could have.

Jared Hale raised the cook's wages at the end of the first week, and told him that he might consider himself a fixture in Camp Hilarity for as long a time as he chose to stay. He seemed indifferent to his increase of salary and to the success of his efforts.

"I'm glad the boys like my grub," was all he ever said in reply to their hearty and extravagant commendation of his culinary skill.

The fame of the Phœnix's rich June output was noised abroad. Other miners came into the gulch, and faint wreaths of smoke curling up among the pines and drifting away with the low hanging clouds told of other camp fires and other cabins on the mountain slopes and in the ravines near Camp Hilarity.

In July there was a great rush to the locality, and by the middle of August there was a town of nearly a thousand inhabitants at the base of the mountain below Camp Hilarity. The surroundings were wonderfully picturesque and beautiful, with a wealth of magnificent mountain scenery that could not be surpassed in the state.

Tourists began to find their way to the little town, which was called Crystal City. A large hotel was erected, and a genuine "boom" set in.

"Hi, boys," said Lanky Sim, one of the miners employed at the Phœnix, as he sat at the supper table in the boarding-house cabin one evening in July, "don't any of you smell a mouse 'bout the boss going down to Crystal every evening now, do you?"

"Why shouldn't he go?" asked Scotty Sharp, with an air of indifference. "I'd go myself if I wasn't too blamed tired every night."

"You'd go anyhow, Scot, if there was a purty woman to make it pleasant for you after you got there, a-playin' on the hotel pianny an' a-singin' love songs an' all that, eh?"

"Shucks!" said Scot with an air of contempt, "I aint no use for the wimmen; they're no good! An' I never see a downright purty one in a minin' camp yit, blamed if I have."

You aint seen her yit," said Lanky Sim, "I have. I see her las' night. I was passing by the hotel; you know its got long winders in the front, an' it's so close to the street a feller can peep right into their fancy parlor, an' I stopped to get a peep of how white folks live, an' by George, if I wa'n't tuck back when I see an all-fired stavin purty woman, dressed up fit to kill, a-settin' at the pianny a playin' one o' them skittish, jigly, operry airs, an' our boss, yes sir, our boss, be-gosh, a-standin' by to turn the music when she'd bob her head for 'im to turn it."

Jared Hale, the boss, was down at Crystal City when Lanky Sim told this interesting bit of gossip at the camp table. The boys received the story with a shout, and nothing else was talked about during the remainder of the meal.

"Hi, you, Jas," said one of them to the cook, who had heard the story in his usual impassive manner, "aint you got a sweetheart to play the pianner an' come sweet games on you, eh?"

The cook turned his sorrowful dark eyes toward the shouting group around the table.

"Me?" he asked, gravely, and none of the men noticed the tremor in his voice, nor the sudden glistening of his eyes. "Me?" I aint no ladies' man, boys, an' I never was—no, I never was."

Late in the summer it became known that Jared Hale would be married in two weeks, and that his wife was to be the "purty woman" of whom Lanky Sim had told the Phœnix men six weeks before.

"She's feathered her nest well," said Sim, gracefully commenting on the news. "The boss is as white a man as ever drawed breath, an' he'll treat a wife well, he will. The old Phœnix is worth a good half-million now, an' the boss is just the sort of a man that'll give a woman full rein when it comes to spendin' money, an' I'm mightily mistaken if the woman he's goin' to marry aint one of the kind that'll make the money fly. He's goin' to buy a fine house in Denver, an' she'll run it in grand style, now you kin jist bet on that."

Marcia Drew was the name of the girl who had so easily won the love of the rich owner of the Phœnix. She was no longer a girl, but was in the fullness and completeness of a most beautiful womanhood. The owner and proprietor of the hotel was a distant relative, and Miss Drew had come to Crystal City to spend the summer months amid the refreshing coolness and transcendent beauty of the mountains. Here she had met and learned to love Jared Hale, and here they were to be married.

If Jared Hale's wealth had influenced her in making him her choice, she kept the fact carefully guarded in the secret recesses of her heart. Her love for him to all outward appearance, was as fervent and sincere as was the honest, manly love that made her so dear to him, that he was happy only in her beautiful presence.

The arrangements for the wedding were simply planned; they were too simple, in fact, to please the boys at the Phœnix mine.

"Blame it all, Hale," said old Hi Sparks with the freedom of one who had "prospected" with Jared for ten years, when they were both "poor'n dirt," "us fellows, we don't like to see you go off in this one hoss sort o' style. There's a little church just gone up down to Crystal. Why don't you be married there, so us fellows can have a chance to see your lady? Not half of us ever even seen her, an' this here 'strictly private' sort o' weddin' don't just suit us, speshly as you're goin' to hop into the stage an' pull out for Denver soon as the thing's over with."

"Oh, but we're not going to hop off in that sort of way," said Jared laughingly. "My wife to be says she wants to see the Phœnix, our mine, as I call it now, before she goes away, and I wanted her to see some of you boys whom I have known so long, before she goes away, so we are coming up here after our marriage and look around a little on our joint possessions before we go off on our six months tour of the great cities we've both wanted to see all our lives."

This information was received with a shout of approval by the men, who were all anxious to see the "boss's lady."

"Say," said Lanky Sim, with the eagerness of one who has had a happy thought, "I tell you what let's do—let's get up a weddin' dinner in the cabin for 'em. We can clean it out good an' trim it up with evergreens an' mountain flowers, an' hire dishes an' things from down in Crystal, an' Old Jas can just spread himself on a weddin' dinner; can't you, Jas?"

"I recken I kin," said the cook with the assurance of one who has full confidence in his own abilities.

"We'll get it up on the sly," said Lanky Sim, "an' the boss shan't know a thing of it 'till he sees it, an' we'll make it as fine as money can buy."

The wedding day came, fair and beautiful as only mountain days can be. There was much hand-shaking and some huskiness of voices as the boys shook hands with Jared before they went up to the mine for a half-a-day's work.

On his way down to Crystal Jared stopped to shake hands with the cook, who was alone in the cabin. He gave Jared his hand and said earnestly, while tears gathered in his eyes:

"God bless you, Mr. Hale! You've treated me like a gentleman, you have; I hope you'll be happy—happier'n I was in my married life."

"You?" said Jared. "I didn't s'pose you'd ever been married."

"No, I reckon not. I don't look like a ladies' man. I wa'n't one. I'd ort never to have married, an' I don't know as I blame my wife so very much for—for—leavin' me."

There were tears on his grizzled cheeks now.

"Yes," he said, "she left me. She wa'n't only seventeen when I coaxed her to marry me, an' a girl like that don't know her own mind. I'd ortn't to have coaxed her into marryin' me. Then, 'fore we'd been married a year I got the minin' craze and come off out here expectin' to send for her; but, Lord, what sort of a country was this to bring her to! I wouldn't do it! An' I swore I'd never go back 'till I'd made her rich, fool that I was! After six years I did strike it rich, an' I went back with fifty thousand in my pocket only to find—to find—my God! my God!—she'd left me! She'd got a divorce; but it wa'n't no fair divorce. I'd never had no notice served on me, an' I'm her husband yit, boss, an' she's my wife in the sight of God.

"I hadn't heard very reg'lar from her, me strayin' 'round like I was, an' these mountain mails so oncertain; but I never dremp of her doin' such a thing. I spent a sight o' my money tryin' to find her, but I never did. Nobody knowed where she'd gone. The rest of the money I fooled away in one way an' another. I didn't care. I don' care yit. Money wa'n't nothin' without her."

"Poor fellow," said Jared kindly, she wasn't worthy of you, Jasper; but I am so sorry for you, when I am so very, very happy."

"It makes me happy to see you," said the cook, "I'll be glad to take your lady's hand an' wish you both everlastin' joy and peace."

* * * * * * * * *

The old cabin walls were almost a solid mass of evergreens and bright-hued mountain flowers when the boys had made it ready for the boss and his bride. The long table was covered with a snowy cloth, and Jasper had "spread himself" in the preparation of the wedding feast. He was the last to go to his little room in the rear of the cabin to "spruce up a bit." The other men were already in holiday attire. Some of them had flowers in their buttonholes, and Lanky Sim even sported black kid gloves in spite of the gibes and jokes of his comrades.

The bridal party entered while the cook was still in his little room. He heard Jared's exclamation of pleased surprise, and a murmur of women's voices praising his work. It was time for him to hurry out and serve the coffee. He opened the door softly and looked full in the face of the bride, then he stepped quietly back into the little room with an ashen face and both hands clutching at his wildly beating heart. A moment later he was lying face downward, on the earthen floor of the cabin, his hand clasped to his head, his white lips moving, but no words came from them. Scotty Sharp found him so a few moments later, when he hurried in to tell him that it was time to serve the coffee, and that the bride had asked to be introduced to him.

"What's up?" asked Scotty briefly. "Great heavens, man, you're dying;" he said as he lifted Jasper's ghastly face from the cold ground.

"No—no—yes—I hope so," he said in a frightened whisper. "I—I'm sick, I can't go out; you boys 'll have to do the rest. I—I—" his white lips and his great dark eyes closed softly.

"Here you, Lanky—boys!" cried Scotty sharply, and the men came hurrying in; they lifted him to his bunk, he opened his eyes and said, still in a whisper:

"Don't let me spoil the fun, boys. Let me alone, I'm all right. Don't mind me."

Jared Hale pushed his way through the crowd around the bunk.

"Why Jasper, old fellow," he said cheerily, "what's gone wrong with you? This is too bad. Can't I do something for you?"

"No, no, let me alone, please," he pleaded. "Do go on with your dinner."

They slowly and unwillingly left him by himself. Jared was the last to leave the room. Jasper made a sign for him to remain.

"Your—your—wife," he said with a gasping effort, "I would like to see your—your —her alone, for just a minute, I want to tell her something about—my wife."

"Poor fellow!" said Jared to himself, "I guess he's out of his head, but I'll humor him just the same. The woman that wrecked his life will have something to answer for on the judgment day."

A moment later Jared Hale's handsome wife stepped softly into the little room. There was no sign of recognition on her beautiful face until he put out one toil-worn hand and said softly:

"Marcia!"

She drew back in terror with a face as white as his own.

"Don't be afeerd, Marshy," he said, half rising and still holding out his hand, "I'll never trouble you, Marshy—dear. I kinder thought the time might come when you'd like to feel sure o' that. Rest secure, Marshy, I wouldn't make you no trouble for all the world. I aint a-blamine you a bit—dearie, only I—I—; can't you come an' touch me once, Marshy; couldn't you—you —kiss me once, Marshy?"

She stepped close to the bed with staring, tearless eyes; she took his rough hand in her own soft-gloved and trembling hands, she stooped and kissed him with dry cold lips, and stole quickly out of the room to fall fainting in her husband's arms.

"My poor darling," he said tenderly, "I ought to have staid in the room with you, I was afraid it would be too much for you to endure alone."

When the wedding party had gone old Scotty stepped quietly into the little room with a plate piled high with dainties and a cup of hot coffee for Jasper. A moment later he rushed out and cried excitedly:

"Great heavens, boys, old Jas is dead—dead as a door nail!"

They rushed into the little room and came stepping softly out with bowed heads and tears in their eyes.

"I've often noticed him clap his hand up to his left breast sudden like," said Lanky Sim, "he must have had some kind of a heart trouble."

It was indeed—a heart trouble.—Drake's Magazine.

A Canine Pill.

When merry childhood romps and plays
With canine playmates on the lawn,
Or when the lonely meathound bays
The tranquil moon from eve till dawn;
I laugh at romping pup and child,
And in their mirth grow young again,
And the gaunt meathound's accents wild,
Weary me less than wrangling men.

I love the watch-dog's bark because
It "bays me deep-mouthed welcome home;"
I cannot chide the muddy paws
That streak my garb from neck to dome.
I love to see the setter slim
Go frantic when the sun goes down,
E'en though the man who hunts with him
Will buy the game he shoots in town.

And the boys' dogs—I love them too—
Boy and the dog I love to sing;
The yelping, mongrel, motley crew,
What jolly comradeship they bring.
When other earthly pleasures cloy,
And joys once bright you daily miss,
Wait for a dog that owns a boy,
And view a scene of perfect bliss.

But thou—oh, woman with a dog
That leads thee with a silken line—
O'erfed and underbred, a clog,
A stupid mass of hair and whine—
When I behold thee and thy dog
My heart is with strange frenzy fired;
Scat! Whoop! Get out! I give it up;
You make me tired.

A TRAVELING LIAR.

One afternoon in September, as I was toiling over a rocky trail in the Smoky Mountains, which range of the Blue Ridge separates Tennessee and North Carolina for many miles, a girl about thirteen years of age, bareheaded, barefooted, and having on a single garment made of cheap stuff, suddenly jumped into the road a few feet ahead of me, fell down, rolled over, lost her hold on a bundle of roots and barks, and was up and off like a shot. She passed me without seeming to see me, and the next minute a bear came rolling out of the bushes upon the spot she had covered. I had a big revolver handy, and Bruin was dead before he could suspect how my hair stood on end and my legs wobbled. He wasn't fifteen feet away, and he looked as big as yearling calf, and even if I did shoot with my eyes shut he would have been ashamed of me if I had failed to kill him with six bullets. He was kicking his last when the girl came back, regarded him a moment with bulging eyes, and then said:

"Lordy! but I thought I was a goner! Who be you 'un?"

"Oh, I happened along here. Why didn't you scream?"

"Couldn't. Hadn't wind 'nuff."

"How far did he chase you?"

"A right smart mile."

"Well, who are you?"

"Susan. Come up to the house."

She picked up the lost bundle and started on ahead, and a quarter of a mile above we came to a cove and the inevitable mountaineer's cabin. The cove was the same, cabin the same, the surroundings the same as a score of others. Aye! The gaunt, miserably dressed women stood in the door, two children rolled on the ground, and a big dog slouched out of the cabin and growled fiercely at the approach of the stranger. Susan led me straight to the door, and as we halted at the threshold she explained:

"B'ar was chasin' me. He 'un killed it with his popper."

As soon as the matter was understood the three of us went and make a litter, and after a hard tug got the bear to the cabin. We had just arrived when the husband came home, having been off on a hunt, and the girl braced up, got a rest for her back against the house and told the story as follows:

"Got my roots tied up. B'ar cum fur me. Took a run. Met he 'un. He 'un never run 'tall. Heard him shoot—pop! pop! Went back. B'ar war dead. Told he'un to come back and see we'uns. Give him yer paw, pap."

"Stranger," said the man, as he came to me with outstretched hand, "put it thar! Reckon you saved the gal's life, for suah. Mam, giv him yer paw."

"Ise thankful, shore I am," she said as we shook hands.

I wanted to go five miles farther up the trail to Uncle Joe Billing's place, but there was a general protest on the instant, and the mountaineer exclaimed:

"Stranger, do you 'un think we 'uns are heatherns? We's pore an' forlorn an' shuckless, but we's got feelin's. You's got to stop right yere till to-morrow."

"Deed he has!" added the wife. "Nobody who saves our Suse from a b'ar is gwine to walk off like that."

"I thought I was done gone when I heard him go pop! pop!" said Susan, "and the b'ar fell down in a heap."

Then there came a period of silence, with every one looking full at me. I knew what was coming. The man was uneasy, while the wife looked puzzled. By and by the husband hesitatingly began:

"Stranger, we'uns is thankful to you 'un, but—but—"

"It don't make no difference, I say!" exclaimed Susan.

"Yes her do," replied the father, as he pulled a piece of bark from the log. "Stranger, we'uns want to know if—if—"

He couldn't get it out.

"You want to know what I am doing here," I suggested.

"That's it."

"Well, I'm traveling for health and to see how people live."

"Whar from?"

"Michigan."

"Then you 'un is a Yank?"

"Yes."

"And you fit into the war?"

"Yes."

"And you walloped us?"

"Yes."

"And you hain't no spy?"

"Never!"

"Stranger, I believe you! Put it thar! Nobody who fit into the war would be mean 'nuff to come spyin'. Jist feel right to home. All we've got belongs to you."

In the evening three or four mountaineers dropped in, one of whom was accompanied by his wife. The women used their snuffsticks, and the men lighted their pipes and as a starter the host turned to me with:

"Stranger, w'ar is that Michigan?"

"North of Ohio."

"Many people up thar'?"

"Plenty."

"Twenty thousand?"

"Detroit alone has ten times that number."

He winked at each man in turn, and I heard the visiting female exclaim to herself:

"Oh, Lord! please forgive him for lyin'."

"Been on a steamboat?"

"Yes."

"More'n one?"

"Fifty, I presume."

He winked again and the visiting female sighed:

"Oh, my soul! but what a dreadful liar!"

"Mebbe you hev seen the ocean?" remarked one of the men after a signal to the rest that he would draw me out.

"I have."

"Reg'lar ocean?"

"Yes."

There were three whistles of astonishment, and the female visitor clasped her hands and appealed:

"Oh, Lord! don't lay it up agin him this time, fur he killed the b'ar!"

It was now the turn of an old man who had thus far preserved the strictest silence. He cleared his throat, uncrossed his legs and observed:

"And I reckon you may hev' sawn the President?"

"Yes, sir."

"What! You hev!" exclaimed all in chorus.

"Certainly, and shaken hands with him."

"Oh, Lord! Oh, my soul! but how has he got the narve to lie so?" whispered the women, while the others uttered a sort of a groan over my wickedness.

There was a deep silence for several minutes, and then the visiting female leaned forward and said to her husband across the room:

"Joseph, ax him about bloons and telephones."

"I have seen a bloon," I replied.

"Land! but listen to him!"

"And I have talked through a telephone."

"How many times?"

"Five hundred."

The women dropped their snuff sticks, and each man started up. They looked from one to the other and then at me, and by and by the visiting female slipped off her chair with the words:

"Poore an' needy feller-sinners, let us pray fur him!"

And I'm writing you the solemn truth when I tell you that prayer went clean around the room, and it was all for my benefit.

Next day when I was ready to go, the mountaineer gave me a hearty shake of the hand, called the children up to bid me good-by, and as I started off he whispered:

"If ye stop with any of the boys to-night cut it off short whar' ye saw the ocean. The hull of it is too much for one dose!"—Detroit Free Press.

A MAN'S MEMORY.

"You had better put them down on a piece of paper," said Mrs. S., on giving her first order. "Oh, no," said Mr. S., "my memory is good." "Well, then, a spool of 60 Coates's black thread." "Yes." "A yard of not too light and not too dark calico." "Yes." "A small hammer, a can of peaches of the Pasadena brand, a dozen small pearl buttons, two yards of cardinal ribbon, silk on one side, satin on the other." "Yes," said Mr. S., thoughtfully. "A pair of slippers for baby, a dozen lemons, a good tooth brush, a pineapple, two ounces of sky-blue German yarn, an ounce vial of homœopathic nux vomica pellets, a—" "Wait a second," said Mr. S., counting on his fingers. "And a bottle of vanilla extract and a yard of triple box-plaited crepe lisse ruching and three yards of small-checked nainsook, and—" But Mr. S. had seized his hat and was running for the station. What the poor man brought home was a yard of bedticking, three yards of black crepe, a bottle of vinegar, eight yards of nankeen, a scrub brush, a pound of green yarn, 60 spools of cotton thread, a yard of very black calico, and a pint bottle of homœopathic pills. "There, my dear," throwing down his package triumphantly, "I don't think you'll find a thing missing. Who says a man can't do shopping?"—New York Sun.

RESULTS OF SAVING SMALL AMOUNTS OF MONEY.

The following shows how easy it is to accumulate a fortune, provided proper steps are taken. The table shows what would be the result at the end of fifty years by saving a certain amount each day and putting it at interest at the rate of 6 per cent:

| Daily Savings. | The Result. | Daily Savings. | The Result. |
|---|---|---|---|
| One cent........ | $950 | Sixty cents.... | $57,024 |
| Ten cents........ | 9,504 | Seventy cents.... | 66,528 |
| Twenty cents.... | 19,005 | Eighty cents..... | 76,032 |
| Thirty cents...... | 28,512 | Ninety cents..... | 85,537 |
| Forty cents...... | 38,015 | One dollar....... | 95,041 |
| Fifty cents....... | 47,520 | Five dollars..... | 475,208 |

Nearly every person wastes enough in twenty to thirty years, which, if saved, and carefully invested, would make a family quite independent; but the principal of small saving has been lost sight of in the general desire to become wealthy.

Not Over Anxious.—A small New Yorker had been having a day of unmitigated outrageousness, such as all children who do not die young are likely to have at times; and when he was ready for bed his mother said to him:

"When you say your prayers, Georgie, ask God to make you a better boy. You have been very naughty to-day."

The youngster accordingly put his petitions in the usual form, and then before closing with "Amen" he added:

"And please, God, make me a good boy." He paused a second, and then, to the utter consternation of his mother, concluded with unabated gravity: "Nevertheless, not my will, O Lord, but Thine, be done!"

The mother knew not what to say, and very wisely she said nothing.

BILL NYE'S ADVICE ON MATRIMONY.

"My Dear Sir:—Would it be asking too much for me to request a brief reply to one or two questions, which many other married women as well as myself would like to have answered?

"I have been married now for five years. To-day is the anniversary of my marriage. When I was single I was a teacher and supported myself in comfort. I had more pocket money and dressed fully as well if not better than I do now. Why should girls who are abundantly able to earn their own livelihood struggle to become the slave of her husband and children and tie themselves to a man when they might be free and happy?

"I think too much is said by the men in a light and flippant manner about the anxiety of young ladies to secure a home and a husband, and still they do deserve a part of it, as I feel that I do now for assuming a great burden when I was comparatively independent and comfortable.

"Now, will you suggest any advice that you think would benefit the yet unmarried and self-supporting girls who are liable to make the same mistake that I did, and thus warn them in a manner that would be so much more universal in its range and reach so many more people than I could if I should raise my voice? Do this and you will be gratefully remembered by Ethel."

It would indeed be a tough, tough man who could ignore the simple plea, Ethel; tougher far than the pale, intellectual hired man who now addresses you in this private and underhand manner.

You say that you had more pocket money before you were married than you have since, Ethel, and you regret your rash step. I am sorry. You also say that you wore better clothes when you were single than you do now. You are also pained over that. It seems that marriage with you has not paid any cash dividends. So if you married Mr. Ethel as a financial venture, it was a mistake. You do not state how it has affected your husband. Perhaps he had more pocket money and better clothes before he married than he has since. Sometimes two people do well in business by themselves, but when they go into partnership they bust higher than a kite, if you will allow me the full English translation of an expression which you might not fully understand if I should give it to you in the original Roman.

Lots of self-supporting young ladies have married, and have had to go very light on pin money after that, and still they do not squeal as you do, dear Ethel. They did not marry for revenue only. They married for protection. (This is a little political bon mot which I thought of myself. Some of my best jokes this year are jokes that I thought of myself).

No, Ethel, if you married expecting to be a dormant partner during the day and then to go through Mr. Ethel's pockets at night and declare a dividend, of course life is full of bitter, bitter regret and disappointment.

Of course I want to do what is right in the solemn warning business, so I will give notice to all simple young women who are now self-supporting and happy that there is no statute requiring them to assume the burdens of wifehood and motherhood unless they prefer to do so. If they now have abundance of pin money and new clothes they may remain single if they wish without violating the laws of the land. This rule is also good when applied to self-supporting young men who wear good clothes and have funds in their pockets. No young man who is free, happy and independent, need invest his money in a family or carry a colicky child twenty-seven miles and two laps in the night unless he prefers it. But those who go into it with the right spirit, Ethel, do not regret it.

I would just as soon tell you, Ethel, if you will promise that it shall go no further, that I do not wear as good clothes as I did before I was married. I don't want to. My good clothes have accomplished what I got them for. I played them for all they were worth, and since I got married the idea of wearing clothes as a vocation has not recurred to me.

Please give my kindest regards to Mr. Ethel, and tell him that, although I do not know him personally, I cannot help feeling sorry for him.—Hot Springs News.

RUM AND RELIGION.

Four Christian countries have sent over twenty-five million gallons of rum into the Congo state within the three years of its establishment, Berlin alone having sent three-quarters of a million in one year. England, Germany, France and America are the countries which send missionaries and liquor to the Congo state. It is small wonder to read that "liquor meets with ready sale," and that "some of the missionaries are becoming discouraged." Already prohibition is evoked for the Congo state. It would seem as if the powers might now unite in stopping this dreadful traffic. But the almighty dollar still holds a firm grip on the consciences of men.—Christian at Work.

Some excitement was caused at a reception in Philadelphia last week by the discovery that a young man who had no grandfather had crept in through the back door. He was summarily ejected.—New York Sun.

In the silent midnight watches, when the house is calm and still, and the business-like mosquito brings around his little bill, laugh we now to hear the beggar, with a plaintiff sigh, give up trying to collect it, saying "By and by," and, in the chill October weather, crawling off to die.—Burdette.

A Literary Curiosity.

The following very remarkable little poem is contributed to the San Francisco Times from the pen of H. A. Deming. The reader will see that each line is a quotation from some one of the standard authors of England and America. This is the result of years of laborious search among the voluminous writings of thirty-eight leading poets of the past and present. The number of each line refers to its author below.

1 Why all this toil for triumphs of an hour?
2 Life's a short summer, man's a flower.
3 By turns we catch the vital death and die;
4 The cradle and the tomb, alas! so nigh.
5 To be is better far than not to be,
6 Though all men's lives may seem a tragedy;
7 But light cares speak when mighty griefs are dumb,
8 The bottom is but shallow whence they come.
9 Your fate is but the common fate of all;
10 Unmingled joys here no man can befall.
11 Nature to each allots its proper sphere;
12 Fortune makes folly its peculiar care.
13 Custom does not often reason overrule,
14 And throw a cruel sunshine on a fool.
15 Live well; how long or short, permit to heaven;
16 They who forgive most shall be most forgiven.
17 Sin may be clasped so close we cannot see its face—
18 Vile intercourse where virtue has no place.
19 Then keep each passion down, however dear,
20 Thou pendulum betwixt a smile and tear.
21 Her sensual snares let sensual pleasure lay,
22 With craft and skill to ruin and betray.
23 Soar not too high to fall, but stoop to rise,
24 We masters grow of that we despise.
25 Oh, then, renounce that impious self-esteem!
26 Riches have wings and grandeur is a dream.
27 Think not ambition wise because 'tis brave;
28 The paths of glory lead but to the grave.
29 What is ambition? 'Tis a glorious cheat—
30 Only destructive to the brave and great.
31 What's all the gaudy glitter of a crown?
32 The way of bliss lies not on beds of down.
33 How long we live, not years, but actions tell—
34 That man lives twice who lives the first life well.
35 Make then, while yet we may, your God your friend,
36 Whom Christians worship, yet not comprehend.
37 The trust that's given guard, and to yourself be just,
38 For live we how we can, die we must.

1, Young; 2, Dr. Johnson; 3, Pope; 4, Prior; 5, Sewell; 6, Spencer; 7, Daniel; 8, Sir Walter Scott; 9, Longfellow; 10, Southwell; 11, Congreve; 12, Churchill; 13, Rochester; 14, Armstrong; 15, Milton; 16, Bailey; 17, Trench; 18, Somerville; 19, Thompson; 20, Byron; 21, Smollett; 22, Crabbe; 23, Massinger; 24, Cowley; 25, Beattie; 26, Cowper; 27, Sir Walter Devanant; 28, Gray; 29, Willis; 30, Addison; 31, Dryden; 32, Francis Charles; 33, Watkins; 34, Herrick; 35, William Mason; 36, Pill; 37, Dana; 38, Shakespeare.

A STARTLING DELIVERANCE.

I am unable to say where or when the events related in the following story took place. Neither can I give any details concerning the personal circumstances of the narrator. All I know is that she was a young woman of French nationality, and that the "uncle" of whom she speaks—her senior by some thirty years—was more distinguished as a philosopher than as an enthusiast. Whether the conspiracy against the reigning authorities in which our heroine and her friends were implicated happened to be of any historical importance is also more than I can say. As my object in reproducing the narrative is merely to illustrate the curious operation through natural channels of laws which are usually regarded as "occult," and the activity of which on the material plane has given rise to the common notion of "miracle," I do not propose to trouble the reader or myself with any preamble of merely local interest. So, without more introduction, I leave the diary of the writer to recount the adventures set down therein by her own hand.

I.

I was concerned in a very prominent way in a political struggle for liberty and the people's rights. My part in the struggle was, indeed, the leading one, but my uncle had been drawn into it at my instance and was implicated in a secondary manner only. The government sought our arrest and for a time we evaded all attempts to take us, but at last we were surprised and driven under escort in a private carriage to a military station, where we were to be detained for examination. With us was arrested a man popularly known as "Fon," a poor weakling whom I much pitied. When we arrived at the station which was our destination, "Fon" gave some trouble to the officials. I think he fainted, but at all events his conveyance from the carriage to the caserne needed the conjoined efforts of our escort, and some commotion was caused by his appearance among the crowd assembled to see us. Clearly the crowd was sympathetic with us and hostile to the military. I particularly noticed one woman who pressed forward as "Fon" was being carried into the station, and who loudly called on all present to note his feeble condition and the barbarity of arresting a witless creature such as he.

At that moment my uncle laid his hand on my arm and whispered: "Now is our time; the guards are all occupied with 'Fon;' we are left alone for a minute; let us jump out of the carriage and run!" As he said this he opened the carriage door on the side opposite to the caserne and alighted in the street. I instantly followed, and, the people favoring us, we pressed through them and fled at the top of our speed down the road. As we ran I espied a pathway winding up a hillside away from the town and cried: "Let us go up there; let us get away from the streets!" My uncle answered: "No, no; they would see us there immediately at that height; the path is too conspicuous. Our best safety is to lose ourselves in the town. We may throw them off our track by winding in and out of the streets." Just then a little child, playing in the road, got in our way and nearly threw us down as we ran. We had to pause a moment to recover ourselves. "That child may have cost us our lives," whispered my uncle breathlessly.

A second afterward we reached the bottom of the street, which branched off right and left. I hesitated a moment; then we both turned to the right. As we did so—in the twinkling of an eye—we found ourselves in the midst of a group of soldiers coming round the corner. I ran straight into the arms of one of them, who the same instant knew me and seized me by the throat and waist with a grip of iron. This was a horrible moment! The iron grasp was sudden and solid as the grip of a vise; the man's arm held my waist like a bar of steel.

"I arrest you!" he cried, and the soldiers immediately closed round us.

At once I realized the hopelessness of the situation, the utter futility of resistance.

"Vous n'avez pas besoin de me tenir ainsi," I said to the officer; "j'iral tranquillement."

He loosened his hold, and we were then marched off to another military station, in a different part of the town from that whence we had escaped. The man who had arrested me was a sergeant or some other officer in petty command.

He took me alone with him into the guard-room and placed before me on a wooden table some papers which he told me to fill in and sign. Then he sat down opposite to me and I looked through the papers. They were forms, with blanks left for descriptions, specifying the name, occupation, age, address, and so forth of arrested persons. I signed these, and, pushing them across the table to the man, asked him what was to be done with us.

"You will be shot," he replied, quickly and decisively.

"Both of us?" I asked.

"Both," he replied.

"But," said I, "my companion has done nothing to deserve death. He was drawn into this struggle entirely by me. Consider, too, his advanced age. His hair is white; he stoops, and had it not been for the difficulty with which he moves his limbs both of us would probably be at this moment in a place of safety. What can you gain by shooting an old man such as he?"

The officer was silent. He neither favored nor discouraged me by his manner. While I sat awaiting his reply I glanced at the hand with which I had just signed the papers and a sudden idea flashed into my mind.

"At least," I said, "grant me one request. If my uncle must die, let me die first."

Now I made this request for the following reason: In my right hand the vein of life broke abruptly half way in its length, indicating a violent and sudden death. But the point at which it broke was terminated by a perfectly marked square, extraordinarily clear-cut and distinct. Such a square occurring at the end of a broken line means rescue, salvation. I had long been aware of this strange figuration in my hand and had often wondered what it presaged. But now, as once more I looked at it, it came upon me with sudden conviction that in some way I was to be delivered from death at the last moment, and I thought that if this be so it would be horrible should my uncle have been killed first. If I were to be saved I should certainly save him also, for my pardon would involve the pardon of both or my rescue the rescue of both. Therefore it was important to provide for his safety until after my fate was decided. The officer seemed to take this last request into more serious consideration than the first. He said shortly:

"I may be able to manage that for you," and then at once rose and took up the papers I had signed.

"When are we to be shot?" I asked him.

"To-morrow morning," he replied, as promptly as before. Then he went out, turning the key of the guard-room upon me.

II.

The dawn of the next day broke darkly. It was a rough, stormy day; great black, lurid thunder-clouds lay piled along the horizon and came up slowly and awfully against the wind. I looked upon them with terror—they seemed so near the earth and so like living, watching things. They hung out of the sky, extending long ghostly arms downward, and their gloom and density seemed supernatural. The soldiers took us out, our hands bound behind us, into a quadrangle at the back of their barracks. The scene is sharply impressed on my mind. A palisade of two sides of a square made of wooden planks ran around the quadrangle. Behind this palisade and pressed up close against it was a mob of men and women—the people of the town who had come to see the execution. But their faces were sympathetic, an unmistakable look of mingled grief and rage, not unmixed with desperation—for they were a down-trodden folk—shone in the hundreds of eyes turned toward us.

I was the only woman among the condemned. My uncle was there and poor "Fon," looking bewildered, and one or two other prisoners. On the third and fourth sides of the quadrangle was a high wall, and in a certain place was a niche partly inclosing the trunk of a tree, cut off at the top. An iron ring was driven into the trunk midway, evidently for the purpose of securing condemned persons for execution. I guessed it would be used for that purpose now. In the center of the square piece of ground stood a file of soldiers, armed with carbines, and an officer with a drawn saber. The palisade was guarded by a row of soldiers somewhat sparsely distributed, certainly not more than a dozen in all. A Catholic priest in black cassock walked beside me, and as we were conducted into the inclosure he turned to me and offered religious consolation. I declined his ministrations, but asked him anxiously if he knew which of us was to die first.

"You," he replied; "the officer in charge of you said you desired it, and he has been able to comply with your request."

Even then I felt a singulr joy at hearing this, though I had no longer any expectation of release. Death was, I thought, far too near at hand for that. Just then a soldier approached us and led me bare-headed to the tree-trunk, where he placed me with my back against it and made fast my hands behind me with a rope to the iron ring. No bandage was put over my eyes. I stood thus, facing the file of soldiers in the middle of the quadrangle, and noticed that the officer with the drawn saber placed himself at the extremity of the line, composed of six men. In that supreme moment I also noticed that their uniform was bright with steel accoutrements. Their helmets were of steel, and their carbines, as they raised them and pointed them at me, ready cocked glittered in the sunlight with the same burnished metal. There was an instant's stillness and hush while the men took aim. Then I saw the officer raise his bared saber as a signal to fire.

It flashed in the air; then with a suddenness impossible to convey, the whole quadrangle blazed with an awful light—a light so vivid, so intense, so blinding, so indescribable that everything was blotted out and devoured by it. It crossed my brain with instantaneous conviction that this amazing glare was the physical effect of being shot, and that the bullets had pierced my brain or heart and caused this frightful sense of all-pervading flame. Vaguely I remembered having read, or having been told, that such was the result produced on the nervous system of a victim to death from fire-arms.

"It is over," I said; "that was the bullets."

But presently there forced itself on my dazed senses a sound—a confusion of sounds—darkness succeeding the white flash, then steadying itself into gloomy daylight; a tumult; a heap of stricken, tumbled men lying stone still before me; a fearful horror upon every living face—and then it all burst on me with distinct conviction. The storm which had been gathering all the morning had culminated in its blackest and most electric point immediately overhead. The file of soldiers appointed to shoot me stood exactly under it. Sparkling with bright steel on head and breast and carbines they stood shoulder to shoulder, a complete lightning conductor, and at the end of the chain they formed, their officer, at the critical moment, raised his shining, naked blade toward the sky. Instantaneously heaven opened and the lightning fell, attracted by the burnished steel. From blade to carbine, from helmet to breastplate it ran, smiting every man dead as he stood. They fell like a row of ninepins, blackened in face and hand in an instant, in the twinkling of an eye. Dead! The electric flame licked the life out of seven men in that second; not one moved a muscle or finger again. Then followed a wild scene. The crowd, stupefied for a minute by the thunderbolt and the horror of the devastation it had wrought, recovered sense, and with a mighty shout hurled itself against the palisade, burst it, leaped over it and swarmed into the quadrangle, easily overpowering the unnerved guards. I was surrounded, eager hands unbound mine, arms were thrown about me; the people roared and wept and fell about me on their knees praising heaven. I think rain fell; my face was wet with drops, and my hair—but I knew no more, for I swooned and lay unconscious in the arms of the crowd. My rescue had indeed come, and from the very heavens.—Dr. Anna Kingsfort.

MENTAL SCALES FOR HOUSEWIVES.

Ten common-sized eggs weigh one pound.

Four teaspoons are equal to one tablespoon.

Soft butter the size of an egg weighs one ounce.

One quart of sifted flour, well heaped, one pound.

One pint of coffee A sugar weighs twelve ounces.

One pound of best brown sugar weighs thirteen ounces.

One tablespoon, well rounded, of soft butter weighs one ounce.

Two teacups, well heaped, of coffee A weigh one pound.

Two teacups, level, of granulated sugar weigh one pound.

Two teacups of soft butter, well packed, weigh one pound.

One and one-third pints of powdered sugar weigh one pound.

Two tablespoonfuls of powdered sugar or flour weigh one ounce.

One pint, heaped, of granulated sugar weighs fourteen ounces.

Two and one-half teacups, level, of the best brown sugar weighs one pound.

Two and three-fourths teacups, level, of powdered sugar weighs one pound.

One tablespoonful, well heaped, granulated coffee A or best brown sugar equals one ounce.

Miss Parloa says one generous pint of liquid, or one pint of finely-chopped meat, packed solidly, weighs one pound, which it would be very convenient to remember.

Teaspoons vary in size, and the new ones hold about twice as much as the old-fashioned spoons of thirty years ago. A medium-sized teaspoon contains about a dram.

HIS FIRST NIGHT OUT.—Bride (of a month)—"My husband seems to be out very late to-night."

Maid—"Yes'm; its after 11 o'clock."

"Mercy on me! Do you suppose he could have met some former sweetheart and—"

"No, indeed, mum; the butler tells me your husband is at the club, having a good with his bachelor friends, and I think ma'am, you ought to do something about it."

"Why, of couse. How thoughtless I am! Get me that box of phosphorus from the cabinet."

"Dearie me! You ain't going to commit suicide?"

"Suicide! You must be crazy. I'm going down to the front door to rub phosphorus on the keyhole."

IDENTIFICATION.—Young man to coroner—"I see by the newspapers that there is an unclaimed body at the morgue."

Coroner—"Yes, sir."

"I think the body is that of a friend of mine."

"Was there any peculiarity about your friend by which you could identify his remains?"

"Yes, sir; he stuttered horribly."—Drake's Magazine.

On Doing Without.

Oh, Tom, I've just seen such a love of a bonnet?
Pale blue, and tea roses, half blown, and such lace!
I'm sure that some poet could write a sweet sonnet
About it when over—Well, somebody's face.

The cost. Thirty dollars. You know, it's imported,
The fashion, you see, dear, has but just come out.
I tried it on, Tom, and oh! I was transported.
Can't have it? Now, Tom, why? Can't I do without?

Let's see: there the gas bill, the milk and the grocer!
Jack wants his new shoes, and the butcher's bill's due;
And the dress-maker—there, I see you wish to know, sir,
How much it all makes. Well, of course, forty-two.

Have I bonnets up stairs? Yes. Worn out? No, of course not.
But—There! I can't have it; to argue's no use.
Well, Tom, then that table, all gilding and what not
We saw at the auction. Don't scowl so, you goose!

The table is lovely. I'm sure that we need it;
The parlor, you know, dear, is really quite bare.
Twenty dollars; 'tis nothing! you never will miss it.
Why, Thomas, I'm shocked. Was that meant for a swear?

Very well, sir; there's surely no use of your scolding.
The gas bill, I hate it; the butcher's still more.
You're always reminding me—Hark! did the bell ring?
A bundle for you just been left at the door.

What's in it? No matter. I'll see for myself, then,
The shoes that you got on your way from the cars?
Oh, Tom, what a story! There, now, it is open;
As I live, you extravagant wretch, it's cigars!

"Mr. Smith, for tobacco, to So-and-so debtor."
Five hundred cigars. Fifty dollars, no doubt.
Now, then, sir—the gas bill, the milk—you had better Preach poor. Now that bonnet I shan't do without.

CARL DUNDER.

I like to shpeak mit some poys sometimes, because it may do her some good. All of us were boys sometimes—all but der womans—und we know how hard it vhas to get along. I doan' take one tousand dollar und be a poy like I used to was. It vhas too much measles und chicken pox—too many headaches und sore toes—too long to wait pefore nobody dares to hit you mit der boot-shank.

I like all poys to read about Robert Fulton. He vhas der man who makes us some shteamboats. He keeps dot idea in his head more ash ten years pefore he can pring her oudt. Nopody pelieves he will soocceed. Eafrypody makes some fun of him. He vhas called some cranks und lunatics und fools, und der poys yell oudt at him as he valks der shtreets. Vhas he discouraged? Does he get mad und kick dot shteamboat into der middle of last week? Does he gif oop und pecome a bad mans? Oh, no. He goes right aheadt like a bee-line. He fails once—twice—three—ten times, but he doan' gif oop. When eafrypody laughs at him for a fool dot shteamboat moves off on der Hudson river like a queen und der problems vhas solved. Think of der value of dot invention! If we doan' haf shteamboats to-day we vhas nopody at all. All comes py dot one man, und nopody says von word to help him. Let dot pe a lesson to all poys. Persevere. Stick to him. Doan' let go.

Und I like to shpeak mit you aboudt Benjamin Franklin. Vhile odder poys vhas skating, or swimming, or fishing, he vhas making oop his mind how dot lightning in heafens could be harnessed for der benefits of der peoples. He thinks und thinks, und plans und plans, und eafrypody says he vhas so soft on top his head dot some dogs wouldn't pite him. His own friends vhere so disgoosted mit his conduct dot dey like der shudge to send him oop fur six months. But py-und-py dot lightnings vhas caught und harnessed, und you see the results around you to-day, If he doan' catch dot lightning we doan' haf some telegraphs, nor burglar alarms, nor electic lights. Shust imagine how dull und dreary a city would look mitout its tousands of telegraph poles und its hundred lines of wires stretched upon 'em. But for Franklin. Edison might have been a hotel clerk, und Brush der partner in a corner grocery. Shust reflect on her. I like to shpeak mit my brudder-in-law four miles away. I goes by my telephone und says:

"Hello! hello! hello! hello! hello! hello! hello! hello! hello! hello! Central! Vhas dot you! Hello! hello! hello! hello! hello! Vhats der matter? Hello! I say. Must I be all day aboudt him? Hello! here! Gif me Springwells. Hello! you! If you doan' be quicker I goes by der manager und complains. I vhas here half an hour already. I said gif me Springwells. I like to haf some talk mit my brudder-in-law. Hello! I say!"

Und I shtrike on der box und yell hello! feefty times more, und wait ten minutes longer, und sompody wakes oop und says:

"Vhell, vhat is here?"

"I like to shpeak mit Springwells."

"Springwells? You can't do it. Der lines vhas crossed. Good-bye!"

Und if Franklin doan' discover dot lightning, und if somepody doan' make him oop py telephone, see vhat troubles I haf to shpeak mit my brudder-in-law! By dot same telephone I call der doctor if I vhas sick in der night. Of course I doan' get him, but it makes me better to call. Und if some tief vhas in my house, I ring for der police to come to take him avhay, but dot tief vhas afraid und he drops my pocketbook und runs avhay.

My advice to some poys vhas to stick to her. Doan' gif oop if somepody calls you a fool. You vhas all right. By-und-by pring out some great invention, und der peoples who vhas laughing vill laugh no more. Shust keep quite und doan' speak to nobody, und like enough you vhas a bigger man dan der president.

Doctor (to patient)—"Have you any objection to my calling in a consulting physician?" Patient—"Call in as many accomplices as you need to complete the assassination."

POOR OLD MOTHER.

"Going north, madam?"

"No, ma'am."

"Going south, then?"

"I don't know, ma'am."

"Why, there are only two ways to go."

"I didn't know. I was never on the cars. I'm waiting for the train to go to John."

"John? There is no town called John. Where is it?"

"Oh! John's my son. He's out in Kansas on a claim."

"I'm going right to Kansas myself. You intend to visit?"

"No, ma'am."

She said it with a sigh so heart-burdened the stranger was touched.

"John sick?"

"No."

The evasive tone, the look of pain in the furrowed face, were noticed by the stylish lady as the gray head bowed upon the toil-marked hand. She wanted to hear her story; to help her.

"Excuse me—John in trouble?"

"No, no—I'm in trouble. Trouble my old heart never thought to see.

"The train does not come for some time. Here, rest your head upon my cloak."

"You are kind. If my own were so I shouldn't be in trouble to-night."

"What is your trouble? Maybe I can help you."

"It's hard to tell it to strangers, but my old heart is too full to keep it back. When I was left a widow with three children, I thought it was more than I could bear; but it wasn't as bad as this—"

The stranger waited till she recovered her voice to go on.

"I had only the cottage and my willing hands. I toiled early and late all the year till John could help me. Then we kept the girls at school, John and me. They were married not long ago. Married rich as the world goes. John sold the cottage, sent me to the city to live with them and he went West to begin for himself. He said he had provided for the girls and they would provide for me now."

Her voice choked with emotion.

"I went to them in the city. I went to Mary's first. She lived in a great house with servants to wait on her; a house many times larger than the little cottage—but I soon found there wasn't room enough for me—"

The tears stood in the lines on her cheeks. The ticket agent came out softly, stirred the fire and went back. After a pause she continued:

"I went to Martha's—went with a pain in my heart I never felt before. I was willing to do anything so as not to be a burden. But that wasn't it. I found they were ashamed of my withered face—ashamed of my rough, wrinkled hands—made so toiling for them—"

The tears came thick and fast now. The stranger's hand rested caressingly on the gray head.

"At last they told me I must live at a boarding house, and they'd keep me there. My heart was too full of pain. I wrote to John what they were going to do. He wrote right back, a long, kind letter for me to come right to him. I always had a home while he had a roof, he said. To come right there and stay as long as I lived. That his mother should never go out to strangers. So I'm going to John. He's got only his rough hands and his great warm heart—but there's room for his old mother—God bless—him."

The stranger brushed a tear from her fair cheek and awaited the conclusion.

"Some day when I am gone where I'll never trouble them again, Mary and Martha will think of it all. Some day when the hands that toiled for them are folded and still; when the eyes that watched over them through many a weary night are closed forever; when the little old body, bent with the burdens it bore for them, is put away where it can never shame them—."

The agent drew his hand quickly before his eyes, and went out, as if to look for the train. The stranger's jeweled fingers stroked the gray locks, while the tears of sorrow and the tears of sympathy fell together. The weary heart was unburdened. Soothed by a touch of sympathy the troubled soul yielded to the longing for rest, and she fell asleep. The agent went noiselessly about his duties that he might not wake her. As the fair stranger watched she saw a smile on the careworn face. The lips moved. She bent down to hear.

"I'm doing it for Mary and Martha. They'll take care of me sometime."

She was dreaming of the days in the little cottage—of the fond hopes which inspired her, long before she learned, with a broken heart, that some day she would turn, homeless in the world, to go to John.

AT THE RACES.—Alfred—Did you enjoy the races to-day, Miss Brush?

Miss Brush — Oh, very much! The weather was delightful, the attendance large and fashionable, and although the pleasure was slightly marred by the death of two little jockeys in the steeplechase, I can scarcely recall a day I have enjoyed so much.

WHAT IS LIFE WITHOUT LOVE?—Magistrate—Madame, your husband charges you with assault.

Madame—Yes, your honor; I asked him if he would ever cease to love me, and he was so slow in answering that I hit him with a mop. I'm only a woman, your honor (tears), and a woman's life without love is a mere blight.

NO CREDIT IN THIS WORLD.—"Didn't young Brown inherit his late uncle's property?"

"Yes, he was the sole heir."

"Yet he seemed to be genuinely affected at the funeral. His face bore every mark of grief and distress."

"Yes, Brown is subject to hay fever."

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 26, 1888.

THE political suspense, expense and pretense will soon be over now.

THE New York supreme court sustains the validity of Samuel J. Tilden's will, and New York city will get about $4,000,000 for a new public library. It would have been a strange thing if so acute a lawyer as Mr. Tilden had left a will which would not hold.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND is to review a parade of Democratic business men at New York to-morrow afternoon. Gov. Hill will be noticeable by his absence, as he has an engagement to speak in another part of the state; but if there were more love between the gentlemen the governor would have managed to be on the platform with the president, "you bet."

ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS, the author of "Gates Ajar" and other well known books, who has held somewhat pronounced views upon the enjoyments of single blessedness, has at last found the gates wide open to the greater joys of married life, and at the age of 45, or thereabouts, has taken to herself a husband ten years younger in the person of Rev. Herbert D. Ward of the New York Independent.

SENATOR SPELLMAN having positively declined a renomination, the Democrats of the Eastern Hampden district have selected James Kirkham, president of the First National Bank of Springfield, as their candidate for state senator. Col. Metcalf, the Republican nominee, is a most worthy candidate in every respect, but the saloon interests don't like him, and will do their best to defeat him. This, however, ought to help rather than hurt him, and we believe he will be elected by a handsome majority.

MR. POWDERLY apparently feels that something must be done to save the Knights of Labor from complete disintegration, and he telegraphed the conventions of brotherhood engineers and brakemen last Friday, proposing that steps be taken toward bringing about an understanding and fraternal coöperation between the different labor organizations. A federation of such organizations might be made profitable and beneficial to all, though it is by no means certain that it would, for if used simply to uphold strikes and strikers it would soon prove itself a rope of sand.

THE liquor interests are paying close attention to the nomination of candidates for the Legislature this year, and will look still sharper after their election. They have defeated the renomination of Mr. Manning, in the 22d Worcester district. He was chairman of the liquor committee at the last session, and did not please the rum men. Temperance men need to look sharp or they will get left in the make-up of the next Legislature, for the Democrats, with good reason, are counting on some valuable help from the prohibitionists, in the way of candidates nominated to draw voters fron the Republican nominees.

> The national committee having intrusted me with the collection of contributions in Ohio, it becomes necessary at this stage of the campaign to again notify you of these necessities. There should be no mistake as to the amount expected at your hands. I am directed to look to you for five per cent of the annual pay roll of your office. Should I not hear from you by the 20th of this month I shall draw on you for a portion of the amount yet unremitted.

The above was not written in the dark ages of Republican reign and corruption, but is from a circular sent out this month, under the bright glory of a Democratic reform administration. It is a refreshing illustration of the sort of reform which is being pushed now, and goes ahead of anything yet produced, in its "stand and deliver" tone.

A PROMINENT Philadelphia independent, Henry C. Lea, has made a careful review of President Cleveland's record on civil service reform, and comes to this conclusion:—

> In 1884 I strove for the success of Grover Cleveland, and I have never repented of it, for it seemed the best of the alternatives offered. To-day I stand where I stood in 1884, and I denounce Mr. Cleveland because he has proved false to all his pledges made to secure the independent vote which elected him, and because his reëlection would mean the indefinite postponement of reform.

This accords with Republican criticism of the president, and is put quite as sharply as if a Republican had said it. Partisan prejudice is not the basis of all the criticism of Mr. Cleveland's administration by any means.

COL. R. M. PULSIFER, of the Boston Herald, was found dead at his country home in Islington last Friday, having died suddenly some time during the night. He had been suffering from nervous prostration and insomnia, and had gone to his country home for a quiet night's rest. Death probably resulted from heart disease. Col. Pulsifer was only 45 years old. He went into the Herald office when 18 years of age, and in 1869, with Messrs. Haskell and Andrews, bought the paper, and started it upon its career of wonderful prosperity, which has been due largely to the wise business management. With increasing wealth Col. Pulsifer invested in many doubtful schemes, and anxiety over his financial condition doubtless hastened, if it did not cause his death.

WE commend to every Prohibitionist these words of the Rev. John F. Clymer, pastor of the Winthrop street M. E. church of Roxbury:—

> I shall vote for prohibition by voting for Harrison and Morton. I have been a prohibitionist in spirit for 20 years, and have advocated the principles of prohibition in private and in public with greater sacrifice to earthly treasures than most men of my age. Twice I voted with the third party and have zealously espoused their men and measures. I am still a prohibitionist from head to foot, but I am now satisfied that the third party measures to secure the inestimable blessing of prohibition in the present state of public sentiment are unwise and premature. The Democratic party is in purpose and plan the rum party of the land, and they put on record this fact, that their greatest joy and their grandest victories are achieved through the work of the third party prohibitionists. Good people should never do right in such a way as to make the devil glad.

LOCAL NOTICES.

Wanted, a few bushels of butternuts and walnuts. Inquire at JOURNAL office.

PALMER AND VICINITY.

An attempt is being made to start a singing school here for the winter.

Elder S. P. Hayward of Pepperill will preach at the Advent chapel next Sunday.

George W. Ely has this week received several young horses from New York state.

Another broker's office is soon to be opened in town by Ayer & Co. of Worcester.

The Woman's Relief Corps will hold an important meeting in Grand Army Hall this evening.

The electric light station is soon to be connected with the water-main of the Palmer Water Company.

The Sunday-school of the Second Congregational church will hold its annual harvest concert Nov. 11.

J. H. Woolrich has purchased the gray horse "Who'd 'a Thought It." Mr. W. thinks the colt is threatened with speed.

The Democratic campaign flag has fared badly in the storms of the past week, and presents a somewhat ragged appearance.

Quiet a number of Palmer people attended the concert in Springfield Tuesday evening by the Boston Symphony Orchestral Club.

C. L. Moore, photographer, of Springfield, calls attention in another column to his discount checks, recently distributed in town.

The Democrats of the 10th Hampden district will hold their representative convention at the court room in this village next Monday at 2 p. m.

Locomotive "C. L. Spaulding" of the New London Northern Railroad broke a piston rod Wednesday morning, and was sent to the repair shops.

Main street is being repaired. Good enough! It ought to have been done long ago. Some of the other streets of the village are also receiving needed attention.

The premiums awarded at the late fair of the Eastern Hampden Agricultural Society are payable any time before December 1st, at the office of the treasurer, O. P. Allen.

A man who was loudly offering to bet two to one on Cleveland's election one day this week, was quickly shut up by a local Republican who accepted the terms, $1000 to $500.

The Flynt Building and Construction Company is building a repair shop at New London, Ct., on the site of the one recently burned and owned by the New London Northern Railroad Company.

A social and entertainment, under the auspices of the Ladies' Society, was held at the Congregational church Wednesday evening, when the young ladies successfully repeated the broom drill given last spring.

Contractor F. F. Marcy of this place, with a force of men, is at present engaged in erecting a four-tenement block and building an addition, 24 by 34 feet, three stories, with a tower, to a factory for the Phœnix Woolen Company at Stafford Springs, Ct.

The Cleveland and Thurman Club is considered the most active political organization the town has had in many years, and its membership is rapidly increasing. Fifty new uniforms were ordered this week for the Old Roman Battalion, making 100 in all.

James Harrington of Southbridge was thrown from a vehicle near the agricultural park Tuesday evening and had his arm somewhat injured. The accident was caused by the horse taking fright at an object which it saw coming from within the park.

A certain young M. D. of this village was unconsciously made the victim of a good joke a short time ago. He was dining at one of the hotels when a waiter approached him and said, "Please sir, cook would like to see you after dinner, she wants the bill for her mother's funeral."

No better advertising medium for the approaching holiday trade can be found than the columns of the JOURNAL, on account of its large circulation in the adjoining towns, as well as Palmer. And it is the merchant who makes his wares known that gets the largest part of the trade.

Dennis Mack of East Brookfield and Miss Annie Moynahan of North Wilbraham were united in marriage at St. Thomas' Catholic church Tuesday afternoon by Rev. T. J. Sullivan, and Fred L. Woodard and Delia Bartlett, both of this village, were married by the same pastor Wednesday evening.

Several lights of glass were broken out of the doors and windows of the special train from Springfield Tuesday night which ran to accommodate those who wished to attend the Democratic rally. A fight also took place, but the interference of those who desired to quell the row prevented the affray from being of a serious nature.

The Brunswick Billiard Parlors were opened Wednesday evening in the vacant store in Caryl Brothers' block, the manager and proprietor being Thomas J. Conroy of this place, who intends to have an attractive programme of athletic sports weekly, while arrangements are now in progress for a walking match.

The merchants begin to feel as though they would give almost anything if they could only have pleasant weather for a time. The rain has prevented out-of-town customers from coming in, or even home people from getting out more than was absolutely necessary, and the dealers have worn long faces for some time in consequence.

St. Paul's Universalist church was well filled last Sunday evening, the occasion being the annual harvest concert, in which the children participated and rendered a well arranged programme in a creditable manner. The collection of vegetables, arranged in an attractive way on and about the platform, represented harvest time, while autumnal foliage made a handsome background.

At their caucus last evening the Prohibitionists chose these delegates to the representative convention, to be held at the court room to-morrow: J. I. Milliken, Hubbard Lawrence, O. A. Parent, C. F. Gegenheimer, J. A. Squier, R. S. Milliken, B. F. Clark, Dr. W. H. Stowe, E. J. Wood. A town committee was also chosen, consisting of C. F. Gegenheimer, G. F. Wright, R. S. Milliken, O. A. Parent, F. A. Bowen.

At church sociables in Evanston, Ill., each person is given a card on which a dozen names are written, and is required to talk five minutes with every one whose name is on the card. At the expiration of five minutes a bell is struck and a new partner is sought. By this plan wall flowers are eliminated, everybody receives attention, cliques are broken up, and all go home happy. This might not be a bad plan to try in Palmer.

Registration here ceases next Wednesday evening, when the board will hold a session at the district court room from 7 until 10, and as this is the last chance, every voter who has not already done so should not fail to avail himself of the opportunity of registering. Every voter intending to register should have his tax receipt or assessment notice with him, as in this case it will save going home after it, and aid the registrars in performing their duties.

The officers have not yet obtained a clue which will lead to the arrest and conviction of the persons who recently burglarized the stores in French's block on Central street. It seems to be the general opinion that if an electric light had been located at the junction of those two streets at the time the others were set up, that the robbery would not have occurred, as burglars do not like to operate so well in "daylight," but the job probably was not done until after the lights were out.

The dancing school at the Weeks House hall, which is in charge of Miss Gould, is increasing in membership at every session. There are over thirty members at present in the children's class, and others express their intention of attending. Those who are interested in the formation of an evening class are requested to meet in the hall this evening at 7.30, when the first instructions will be given. Already about fifteen couples have decided to join, while there are others who reside out of town that are making arrangements to attend.

The county commissioners, after much time for deliberation, have ordered the discontinuance of the Fenton and Farrell bridges and the highways leading thereto, and also the construction of a road from a point near the farm house of O. D. Wells to a point near the farm house of Theodore Farrell. As a result of these changes two grade-crossings on the Boston & Albany Railroad will be abolished, and some of the land owners in that section will claim damages. The commissioners will hold a meeting to hear remonstrances November 15.

Amos Cutler Billings, who died at Waukesha, Wis., the 13th, was a former resident of Palmer, and will be remembered by the older citizens. He was born in Bakersfield, Vt., July 24, 1811. He learned the carpenter's trade from his father, but on leaving home entered a hardware store in Worcester, after which he opened a general store at Fairfield, Vt. He was the first station agent of the Boston and Albany road in Palmer, and in 1839 was largely instrumental in securing a post office for this village, being appointed postmaster. He served one term in the Legislature, and in 1855 moved to Two Rivers, Wis.

Our concert goers will have a chance to return in good season after the Howe benefit concert in Springfield this evening, as a car has been engaged, and it now stands Palmer people in hand to show their appreciation of this opportunity by turning out in numbers large enough to at least pay the guarantee, for as a general thing those who furnish the accommodations do not get enough to pay for their trouble. With such attractions as this concert offers, and the steadily increasing reputation of Miss Howe, as shown by her enthusiastic reception in Worcester Monday evening, Palmer people ought to turn out in good numbers.

A pleasant and quiet social affair, in the form of a marriage ceremony, took place on Pine street at 3 o'clock Monday afternoon at the residence of D. W. Taft, the contracting parties being B. R. Freeland of Seattle, W. T., and Miss Ida A. Taft, a former teacher in the intermediate school in this village. Rev. H. W. Pope of the Second Congregational church tied the nuptial knot, and the couple left for a brief wedding trip. The presents were numerous, among them being a silver butter set from the former scholars of the bride, who held the recipient in high esteem during her many successful terms in the intermediate school. Only the relatives and nearest friends of the couple were present.

A. E. Webb, an experienced teacher from Wisconsin who is stopping in our town, has spent several days visiting the schools and factories of this vicinity. He expresses himself well pleased with the schools, stating that the teachers are thorough and competent, and the discipline complete. He has been much interested in visiting the factories, and seeing with what dispatch woolen and cotton fabrics are made. The apparently lively times here as compared with the West are probably due, he thinks, to the protected manufactories, which are equivalent to so many gold mines in a community, whereas the Western farmer, having to compete with the world in raising agricultural products, has suffered many years on account of extremely low prices.

The Boys on Grand Parade.

The Old Roman Battalion, as the Cleveland and Thurman Club calls itself, accompanied by the Bondsville Brass Band, went to Springfield Tuesday evening and participated in the largest street parade that has been held there this season. Although the boys were assigned position in the rear of the procession, they made a very creditable appearance, and the band, which was the only one there, won praise for its good music. Over 125 tickets were sold at this place, and upon their return home at 12.15 the boys formed at the station, and preceded by the band, marched to the headquarters, where they disbanded after giving three ringing cheers for Cleveland and Thurman. The battalion will go to Monson Monday evening, where a rally will be held, preceded by a street parade. The Bondsville Brass Band has been engaged to accompany it. Holyoke Democrats will have a demonstration next Wednesday evening, and have invited the battalion to attend, and a vote will be taken upon the matter this evening.

Personal.

F. S. Blanchard of Worcester was in town over Sunday.

Mrs. E. P. Moore has returned from an absence of several months.

Mrs. W. S. Chase of Hoosic Falls, N. Y., is in town visiting relatives.

S. S. Taft addressed a political meeting at Indian Orchard last Saturday evening.

Vernon H. Woolrich returned home Saturday after an absence of several months.

Mrs. H. E. Armstrong of Castleton, Vt., is visiting at D. W. Taft's on Pine street.

Mrs. H. S. Stratton returned Saturday from the White Mountains, and is now visiting friends in Vermont.

Rev. Mr. Pope lectures at Belchertown next Tuesday evening for the benefit of the Christian Endeavor society.

Dr. E. E. Hill has been given the position of assistant demonstrator in the Pennsylvania college of dental surgery.

Charles H. Sanders, who has been suffering from a severe illness, has recovered his health sufficiently to be out-of-doors again.

District Deputy Grand High Priest Wilby of Greenfield visited Hampden Chapter, Royal Arch Masons, officially Monday evening.

H. C. Strong addressed a Democratic mass meeting at Warren Wednesday evening on the reformation of the tariff. He will also speak at Monson next Monday evening.

Aid for Yellow Fever Sufferers.

The following letter, written by Dr. Silas L. Loomis, a member of the relief committee of the Howard Association of Fernandina, Fla., gives some idea of the distress of the people in that section of the country:

> The population of Fernandina to-day is about 3000,—500 white, mostly men from the north, and 2500 colored. The quarantine was declared August 9th, and all who could leave went away. Of those remaining about 1350 have had the fever of a very mild type. The number of deaths I have not been able to ascertain, probably about 50, mostly whites. The fever is now mostly among the colored. From dispatches of the 22d there were 15 new cases and no deaths the 20th; on the 21st nine new cases and one death. The sick are comfortably taken care of; neither nurses or physicians are needed. There is no suffering or want of medicine. While in these respects Fernandina is very well provided for, there is great destitution of food and great want is felt. A dispatch just at hand says there is a great need of provisions and substantial aid of other kinds. From August 9, the date of the quarantine which closed around these people and shut them up as lepers, there has been no work; 400 Swedes and longshoremen have not had half a day's work. All other business is closed. The steamers that usually ship all kinds of vegetables were taken off and no communication is now had. No shipments are made. In that warm climate these vegetables have all been lost and thus their winter's store destroyed. Fish are plenty, but flour, meal, rice, bacon, and fresh meats for soups are greatly needed. There is a suffering for food. This want must be felt till there is a good frost. Refugees are advised not to return before December 1st or 15th, and business cannot revive under the most favorable circumstances sufficient to furnish employment before January 1st. We find the citizens of Fernandina shut up from the world as lepers till December 1st and are even now without substantial food and means to earn a dollar. In an address to the Odd Fellows of the United States, issued October 22, is the following: "Whereas, The funds subscribed so liberally by the lodges and other voluntary contributions have been expended, and much suffering and distress is now eminent . . . I would make an earnest appeal by this means to the brotherhood at large to make small contributions for their relief." This appeal is equally applicable to the public, and I earnestly request a calm consideration of the question by every one.

The Representative Caucus.

A large number from the different villages attended the Republican representative caucus at the town house Monday evening. Chairman J. S. Holden called the assembly to order and after appointing a committee, of which W. C. Greene of Thorndike was chairman, to retire from the room and bring in a list of delegates to attend the convention, Dr. William Holbrook suggested that S. S. Taft enlighten the assembly upon the subject of Republicanism. Mr. Taft arose and said that "the time has come when we want every Republican voter at the ballot box, and if every man votes Republican who is Republican in principle, we will surely poll a victory for Harrison and Morton at the polls on the 6th day of November next. This town has gone Democratic for the past two or three years simply because the Republicans have remained at home thinking that everything would be all right without them, and because Republicans walked up to the ballot box and deposited ballots that were neither Republican nor Democratic, and that is what elected Grover Cleveland President of the United States; it was nothing else." He closed by advising the Republicans to vote the straight ticket, emphasizing the fact that "He who is not with us is against us."

Lawyer Charles L. Gardner considered the outlook for Republican success on election day of the very best, and urged the voters to do their duty at the polls.

The committee reported the names of the following persons, which were taken up separately and chosen delegates to attend the convention: T. D. Potter, C. E. Fish, John S. Holden, E. G. Murdock, H. E. W. Clark, G. C. Buell, F. A. Ruggles, John Green, H. G. Loomis.

The Republicans Nominate Lawyer W. W. Leach for Representative.

The tenth Hampden Republican representative convention was held in the district court room at 10 o'clock yesterday morning, and was a harmonious assemblage of delegates. Chairman John S. Holden of the district committee opened the meeting by reading the call, and after the usual preliminaries had been disposed of Lawyer S. S. Taft was made chairman and Charles Grosvenor of Ludlow secretary of the convention. The latter moved that a recess of five minutes be allowed for a consultation of the delegates from the different towns, and the motion was carried. The following committee was then appointed to collect and examine credentials: N. S. Hubbard of Brimfield, Charles Greenhalge of Ludlow and Charles E. Fish of Palmer. The committee reported the whole number present was 19, Palmer being represented by 9, Ludlow 4, Brimfield 4 and Holland 2. After the report had been accepted Lawyer Charles L. Gardner moved that the convention proceed to take an informal ballot for a candidate to represent this district in the General Court, which was seconded and carried. He then said:

> We are assembled here to-day as Republicans representing the towns which constitute the 10th Hampden representative district, and I trust that harmony will prevail, and that whoever is made the nominee of this convention to-day will be given the unbiased and united support of all the Republicans in this district at the polls on election day. It is a well-known fact that Palmer possesses the largest number of voters of any town in the district, and owing to that fact it is entitled every other year to name the man who shall represent the district in the state Legislature. No such interest would have been manifested at the caucus held here this week had it not been generally conceded that Palmer was to furnish the candidate this year, and in view of that fact the delegates from this town are here united on the man who shall represent us, and the man in question is in every way qualified to creditably fill the position if nominated and elected, and this man whose name I am to present to you is W. W. Leach of this town.

N. S. Hubbard of Brimfield followed, saying:

> We came to this convention as Republicans, and as the preceding speaker has said, I hope that harmony will prevail throughout; but as Brimfield has not furnished a candidate for representative in five years, and as she is accorded that privilege once in five years, we came here understanding that it was our turn, and the man whose name I am to present to this convention is an ardent Republican in principle, has worked untiringly to promote the interests of the party, and is in every sense qualified to represent this district in the General Court. This man is Charles A. Homer of Brimfield.

Thos. J. Morgan of Brimfield then arose and set things right by saying that if it was so understood that Palmer was to furnish the man, so also was it understood, in Brimfield at least, that Brimfield was to furnish the man, but that if Palmer is entitled to the privilege, he, for one, would surely give the Palmer candidate his support, but, of course, could not speak for the convention. He concluded by saying that when it does come Brimfield's turn to name the man he hoped the other towns would unite and support the candidate from that town. The following committee was then appointed to collect and count the ballots: T. J. Morgan, Brimfield, J. S. Holden, Palmer, A. L. Roper, Holland. The result was as follows:

|---|---|
| Whole number of ballots cast, | 19 |
| W. W. Leach, Palmer, | 10 |
| C. A. Homer, Brimfield, | 6 |
| Scattering, | 3 |

Capt. H. E. W. Clark moved that the informal ballot be made formal, and the motion was carried. Capt. Clark moved that the chairman of the several town committes constitute the district committee for the ensuing year, and this motion was also carried. It was then moved and carried that the chair appoint a committee of one to notify Candidate Leach of his nomination and also to present him to the convention, and Mr. Gardner was assigned the duty. Candidate Leach, as he entered the room was greeted with applause, and said:

> I thank you, gentlemen, one and all, for the honor you have tendered me to-day in making me your candidate, for I consider it a great honor to be nominated for any office by a Republican convention composed of such a body of men as are here assembled to-day, and I am glad to have been allowed this opportunity to assure you that if elected the duty which devolves upon me will be discharged faithfully, and that the interests of the Republican party in this district shall not be misrepresented.

Mr. Taft was then called upon to address the convention but declined, and introduced as a substitute Rev. F. W. Betts of this place, who talked interestingly for a short time, after which the convention adjourned.

HAMPDEN.

F. K. Batchelder has been granted an increase of pension.

THREE RIVERS.

G. E. Dalrymple has moved his grocery store and meat market to C. H. Murdock's block.

The Bullock property on School street has been sold to John Twiss, who will remodel it.

Several of our high school scholars have been obliged to remain at home this week on account of sickness.

The Ladies' Society of the First Baptist church of this village will hold a harvest supper next Thursday evening.

Miss Mabel Frost has been visiting her aunt, Mrs. Charles Nickerson, the past week. She started Tuesday evening for her home in Galveston, Tex.

BRIMFIELD.

The Moses H. Baker farm, with stock, tools, etc., will be sold at auction next Thursday.

The house and barn of Alfred Lombard were burned last Friday morning, the cattle in the barn being all that was saved. The loss was $2000, only partially insured.

Last week Thursday evening the friends of Rev. Joseph Kyte met at the parsonage, and the ladies provided a bountiful supper, of which about 75 partook, the pleasant occasion being saddened only by the thought that Mr. Kyte, with his family, is so soon to leave town, after a four and one-half years successful pastorate. At the close of the evening an envelope containing $30 was handed him with a few feeling remarks, which were responded to by Mr. K. and his wife. The president of the Christian Endeavor society spoke in behalf of the society, and the superintendent of the Sunday-school also made a few remarks. The good wishes of Mr. Kyte's friends, especially the young, go with him.

WARREN.

Mrs. Calvin Cutter has gone to Washington to spend the winter.

The operetta, "Laila," was repeated in the town hall Tuesday evening.

A large delegation went to West Warren Tuesday evening to attend the rally at that place.

Mr. Handy died quite suddenly Tuesday afternoon, having been an invalid for several months.

The French Protestant minister from Ware occupied the pulpit of Rev. D. O. Clark last Sabbath.

The Ladies' Missionary society met with Mrs. George Shumway Wednesday afternoon, and reorganized for the coming year.

The Women's Suffrage society had a meeting in Crescent Hall Monday evening. An address was given by Miss Pond of Boston, followed by a reception.

E. W. French of Manchester, N. H., has purchased the stock of goods of Orcutt & Coash of the New York store, and will soon open a line of dry goods, men's and boys' clothing, etc.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

Mrs. E. B. Gates is sick with typhoid fever.

Mrs. J. B. Cunningham is to occupy the house vacated by E. H. Cutler.

Mr. H. W. Cutler attended the Worcester convention of Christian Endeavor societies, and will shortly give the local society an account of the same.

Mr. D. Mack of Brookfield and Miss Annie Moynahan of this village were married Tuesday afternoon by Rev. T. J. Sullivan at Palmer, and had a reception at the home of the bride's father in the evening.

The boys say that some of the local participators in the Democratic rally at Springfield Tuesday night looked a good deal the worse for wear the next day, but this is believed to be a "campaign slander gotten up for political effect."

Mr. E. H. Cutler has removed his family to Brooklyn, and will make that city his home in the future. This takes from the village a family that will be much missed, especially from Grace church society, as both Mr. and Mrs. Cutler were active members.

Mrs. Henry Cutler, who had been sick about three weeks with complicated trouble of the brain and spine, died Monday and was buried Wednesday, the funeral being held at 11 a. m. in Grace church, and the burial being at Ashland, the old home of the family. The floral decorations were very fine, consisting of a pillow of rosebuds from the family, a crown and wreath from the mill hands, and "Gates Ajar" from the Ladies' Benevolent society. The singing was by W. F. Miller, Mrs. Dr. Hannum and Mr. and Mrs. Gallup of Ludlow.

THORNDIKE.

John Loftus is soon to open a livery and feed stable.

Station Agent Greene has sold his property on High street to Jerry Kelley.

Michael Lane of Boston is visiting his sister, Mrs. McAuliffe on Main street.

Francis Mayett, the market man, paid a business trip to Vermont the past week.

Postmaster John A. Wright is very low at his house on Church street with neuralgia.

Mr. and Mrs. Patrick Twiss and family of New London, Conn., are visiting friends in town.

Belmont's mass in E flat will be sung by the Catholic church choir on Christmas, with orchestral accompaniment.

Daniel Crowley has recently bought the William Harvey place on High street, and will move into the same in the spring.

A number of the local Democrats went to Springfield Tuesday evening by special train from Palmer, to attend the rally and parade.

Mr. and Mrs. James Griffin have the sympathy of the community in their deep sorrow, having buried their oldest child Monday.

The annual auction sale of the Thorndike Literary Club was well attended Saturday evening, and the books, magazines, etc., sold well.

The subject of the morning address at the Congregational church next Sunday will be "The joy of the Lord is your strength."

Politics are rather dull in this village at present, but one citizen has wagered $50 that this town will go Democratic by at least 25 majority.

The Thorndike Co. is making a great improvement in their No. 2 mill canal, both in appearance and as far as good solid work is concerned.

Next Sunday is the last of Rev. E. W. Shurtleff's engagement at the Congregational church, after which he will go to Southern California for his health.

The much talked of rally which was to be held here this week has been given up, owing to the fact that the speakers wanted could not be secured.

A petition has been handed to the town fathers this week, signed by residents of Main street, asking for better access to and from their residences. The road has been cut down, in some places two feet, which leaves the sidewalk at quite a height from the road.

It is rumored that the Emmet club is to present the "Drummer Boy" in the near future for the benefit of sick soldiers and their families. The play will be under the auspices of the Grand Army, and will no doubt draw a crowded house, as the object is one that will be worthy of the patronage of all.

C. D. Henry's Theatre Co., which played here some time ago and which is to open a week's engagement next Monday, is spoken of very highly and is giving perfect satisfaction wherever it appears. The Worcester County News of October 12th published the following: "C. D. Henry's Original People's Theater Co. played to good houses last week in Music Hall with very good success, although two-thirds of the company were entirely new people, never having played the pieces before last week. The company was newly organized in Boston just before coming here. They opened Monday night with the "California Detective," and the play was rendered in such a manner as to satisfy those present. Tuesday "Monte Cristo," by Alexander Dumas. This is the only 10-cent company on the road that can and do produce this play, and they represent it in a manner that would envy other companies playing to popular prices. Mr. Guina was especially good as Count de Monte Cristo. Friday night the grand play of "Partners," in which all the company did good work. Messrs. Guina and Ripley were the center figures in the play. Miss Rose St. Armour as Mr. Marshland's daughter was very good, and Mr. Johnson as the villain was exceeded in acting by none. Saturday night the "Private Secretary" was played to about 1300, leaving standing room only. There was not a sober face in the house during the entire performance. Mr. Dorcey as Benson Catermole, and H. C. Ripley, were the crowning features.

MONSON.

Remember the sociable at the academy to-night.

Miss Grace Weiser will speak at the state primary school Sunday morning.

Frank L. Bliss and Miss Lou Hunn were married last week Wednesday evening.

Gage & Reynolds have began the winter term, and commenced sewing straw hats Wednesday.

The annual report of the assessors has been issued, and may be had at the town clerk's office.

It is expected a few Monson people will go to Willimantic Nov. 13th, to hear Jules Levy, the cornetist.

Several Monson people will attend the concert given by Mary Howe at the City Hall, Springfield, to-night.

The second of the series of social dances will be held at Green's Hall to-night. Lane's orchestra will furnish music.

Work on the Universalist church is steadily going on, and the growing walls are objects of great interest to the public.

Services will be held in the Gage district school house Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock, under the auspices of the Christian Endeavor society of the M. E. church.

The friends of Mr. and Mrs. William Bowman will be pleased to know that their daughter Flora, who has been dangerously ill, is much improved in health and is rapidly recovering.

Several tracts of land belonging to John and James Barry will be sold at auction in front of the court house at Palmer next Thursday at 10 o'clock a. m.

The 9th Hampden Republican representative convention was held at the town hall this afternoon, and L. J. Potter of East Longmeadow was nominated on the informal ballot.

A very enjoyable chestnut party was indulged in by about fifty of the academy students last Saturday, on the grounds of P. S. Anderson at East Hill. The party was photographed by Gaouette.

The Democrats will hold a grand rally at the Town Hall next Monday evening. The speakers will be Henry W. Ely of Westfield, City Solicitor Carroll of Springfield and Homer C. Strong of Palmer.

The Palmer high school and Monson academy base ball nines cross bats on Flynt's park to-morrow afternoon. Considerable feeling exists between these two teams, and an interesting game is expected.

Geo. W. Burdick is doing an extensive business in stone-hammers. He is sending hammers to nearly every state in the Union, and has this week received large orders from Minnesota, Ohio and Dakota.

The harvest concert of the Universalist Sunday-school, postponed from Oct. 14th, will be given in Central Hall Sunday evening at 7.30 o'clock. The exercises are to be of an interesting nature, and the hall will be appropriately decorated for the occasion.

The last meeting of the registrars will be held next Wednesday from 2.30 to 4, and from 7.30 to 10 p. m. Registration will cease at 10 o'clock. The law requires this, no matter how many may be waiting, and voters should not wait until the last moment before getting their names on the list.

The Windsor Club reopened its rooms Tuesday evening with a reception to the lady friends of members, and refreshments were served during the evening. The first prizes at whist were captured by Miss Mabel Anderson and R. F. Bradway, and the consolation prizes by Miss Smith and George L. Jenks.

Orrin Shaw died very suddenly Saturday morning from the effects of a paralytic shock the evening before. He had been up street with his wife, and it is supposed was putting out his horse when the shock came upon him. He was found in the barn in an unconscious state and taken to the house, but did not recover and died the following morning. The funeral was held at the house Tuesday.

The stone-cutters' ball at Central Hall last Friday night was a success in every way, in spite of the rain. There were 75 couples in the grand march, and nearly twice that number held dancing tickets. Quite a number of out-of-town guests were in attendance, and the gallery was packed with spectators. The music by Colt's band of Hartford was fine, and duly appreciated.

Mrs. Erasmus B. White, who has been in poor health for some weeks, died very suddenly of heart disease yesterday morning at her home on Washington street. Mrs. White awoke in the morning apparently as well as usual of late, but on attempting to rise in bed she fell back and expired at once. Mrs. White leaves a large circle of friends who esteemed her for her lovable character and earnest Christian activity. She had been a valued member of the Second Baptist church of Palmer for many years.

The following shows how hard it is oftentimes to get even respectable people, and those who ought to be most interested, to have anything to do with prosecuting the illegal sale of liquor. Three boys of about 12 or 13 years of age were made drunk in one of the unlicensed places of the town where liquor can be had, and one of them was taken home to his widowed mother in that condition. It was learned where the boy had secured his liquor, and the mother agreed to testify against the parties, but when the time came had disappeared, taking the boy with her, having been bought off by the man who sold the stuff.

Large congregations have assembled during the week at the Methodist church to hear Miss Grace Weiser, the young lady evangelist. Miss Weiser is a pleasing speaker and claims the attention of her hearers throughout her address, and an excellent singer. At the Sunday morning service at 10.30 o'clock Miss Weiser will speak on "How I was helped out of skepticism and led into the present work." The meetings will be continued each evening of next week at 7.30 o'clock, and special services will be held Wednesday and Thursday afternoons at 3 o'clock. Miss Weiser will speak and sing at all these meetings until Thursday, when she will close her work in this town.

Personal.

Miss Carrie Burdick will spend the winter at Leverett.

W. P. Potter and wife of Stafford were in town Tuesday.

W. F. Buffington will clerk for Geo. L. Jenks at his branch store in Wales.

Miss Rena Granger of Springfield was the guest of Harlow Chapin and family Sunday.

The Proposed 62 1-2 Cents on $1 Settlement of Fay, Peck & Co.

LIKELY TO FALL THROUGH.

About two months ago the insolvent firm of Fay, Peck & Co. called a meeting of their unpaid help, and proposed they should accept 62½ cents on a dollar in payment of their claims. The firm also promised that as soon as the last name was on the document the help would recieve their money. They also stated they could effect a settlement with the importers for 20 cents on a dollar. Thus they would be able to start the shop again the coming winter. The employes, after much thought and consideration, based principally upon the fact that they needed the work and that the best interests of the town demanded they should, accepted the proposed terms so that the shop might run the coming season, and it is understood every one signed. Since that time the help have been expecting to receive their money until this week, when the firm sent out cards advising the help to see a lawyer and send in their claims to the assignee at once.

As this proposed settlement was to be made before Saturday night, it is evident now that the firm will make no settlement, and will leave the matter in the assignee's hands. The firm states that the shop will run this winter, and have written to their out of town help asking for their services.

Three Serious Accidents.

George Phillips was accidentally shot by George Griffin of Palmer while they were hunting in the woods near Amherst last Friday. Griffin was but a short distance from Phillips, but owing to the thickness of the brush where they were hunting, the men were entirely out of sight of each other; a bird flew up and Griffin in attempting to shoot it emptied a full charge of No. 10 shot into Phillips's left arm and side. The doctor has already removed over one hundred pellets. Owing to the fineness of the shot they did not enter the flesh far enough to result fatally; he is doing as well as could be expected, and unless blood poisoning sets in will recover in a short time.

Harry Needham, son of William Needham, met with a severe accident Friday afternoon. He and two companions hitched a horse of W. N. Flynt & Sons' in their order wagon, the boys having been allowed of late to deliver goods. The horse took fright at some flyers that were being distributed in the street, and started on a run. Young Needham in jumping from the wagon was caught in the wheel, breaking his leg just below the thigh and cutting an ugly gash in his chin, besides badly bruising his body. He was removed to his home, the limb set and he is now doing well.

James Burdick narrowly escaped death Monday while at work on an emery wheel at his father's blacksmith shop. The belt of the machine slipped the pulley and encircled his neck, throwing him with great force on the floor, but in so doing the belt luckily slipped off his neck. He was picked up unconscious and carried to the house, where he soon recovered. This is the second time that a similar accident has happened to him.

WARE AND VICINITY.

Tax Collector Fred W. Farrar is quite seriously sick with typhoid fever.

Miss Sawtelle, formerly of the firm of Judd & Sawtelle, is visiting friends in town.

Napoleon Girard was given a surprise party Saturday evening, and presented two chairs and a mirror.

The talk of a driving park is revived again, after lying dormant nearly a year. Will it end in talk?

George E. Ballard has returned to Ware, and will take charge of the electric light plant, commencing Nov. 1st.

Tickets for the lecture course will be on sale at Blood's drug store next week. Course tickets $1, single 50 cents.

The Republican club has engaged both the Cadet and Cornet bands for their grand demonstration the night before election.

Harry Prendiville has a pair of genuine Turkish cymbals for his Military Band. They cost over $30, and are very fine toned.

At a meeting of the registrars of voters Tuesday evening there were 70 names added to the voters' list and 5 removed. There are now 909 names on the list.

It is said that the Hampshire Agricultural society of Amherst might be transferred to Ware if a suitable place was provided for it, and money enough subscribed.

It is reported that the Cleveland and Thurman club has voted to engage the First Regiment drum corps of Boston for their parade the night before election.

The copper trimmings for the new All Saints' church are reported as costing $5000. The exterior is approaching completion, so one may now judge something of its grand appearance.

The case of David Oakes against the town, for alleged damages received on South street last winter, was decided at Northampton Wednesday in favor of the town. It is reported Oakes' claim was for $4000.

D. A. Jennison had eleven sheep killed recently by dogs. One of the dogs has been shot, and it is supposed the owner of another is known. If so, he will have to answer for the misdeeds of his cur.

A troupe of Indians commenced Wednesday evening a series of entertainments at Music Hall, showing Indian customs, dances, etc., to continue each evening for two weeks. The admission is free, the object being to advertise Indian medicines.

Henry A. Utley has sold the Ware Steam Laundry to A. E. Aldrich and John Priest for about $3000. The laundry is provided with modern machinery and has a wide reputation for good work, which the new proprietors will be sure to maintain.

About 250 from Ware attended the Republican rally at Northampton Thursday evening, accompanied by the Ware Cornet Band, and all are enthusiastic in their expressions of pleasure at the good time and the good treatment they received at Northampton.

At the Republican caucus Tuesday evening 16 delegates were elected to attend the representative convention at Enfield, Wednesday, who were supposed to be in favor of William S. Douglass for representative, which proved to be so, as at the convention he was unanimously nominated.

George H. Coney and his man were in great danger when they took the vane from the East Congregational church spire recently, as it was found afterwards that the final timber, against which the ladder rested, was but a mere shell of solid wood, the center being completely decayed.

William Bonney, one of the strongest Democrats in town, understood it was a Democratic rally at Northampton Thursday evening, and drove in from the west part of the town to be with his party in the demonstration, and could hardly be persuaded, until he saw the company, that it was not the one he trains in.

The Democratic delegates to the fifth Hampshire representative convention, to be held at Ware to-morrow afternoon, elected at the caucus Wednesday evening are: George S. Marsh, John W. Clark, F. S. Cushman, A. Dubois, William Medcalf, E. T. Hampton, Felix Bombard, Edward Deery, Thomas Breen, P. J. Crowe, Edward Stafford, George M. C. Barnard. The delegates were empowered to fill any vacancy.

The ladies' society of Ware Center held their first social of the season with Frank Barnes. The game or play of "The Market Sale," taken from Mrs. Agasiz's book entitled "Journey in Brazil," was introduced to the great enjoyment of the company. The play consisted of the party representing statuary for sale, Mrs. E. S. Huntress acted as saleswoman and Elbridge Cummings as purchaser, and the descriptions of the fine points of the works of art were extremely amusing.

A ladies' musical society was organized at Miss Richardson's Tuesday evening, numbering fifty persons. The following officers were appointed: President, Mrs. William Hall; vice president, Mrs. J. H. G. Gilbert, secretary, Miss M. E. Sandford; treasurer, Mrs. F. D. Gilmore; directors, Mrs. W. B. Lawton, Mrs. George G. Hall, Miss E. V. Hall, Mrs. Dwight F. Marsh, Mrs. H. A. Smith. The next meeting is to be held at Miss Richardson's next Tuesday evening at quarter of five. All ladies interested in music are cordially invited to become members.

City Treasurer Axworthy of Cleveland, O., has gone to Canada, leaving the city some $400,000 poorer than it would be but for his rascality.

Republicans and Democrats alike express the utmost confidence that their party will win in the approaching election, but each side would give all its old boots to really know that its prophecies would come true.

---

October has sadly gone back on its reputation as one of the loveliest and most healthful months of the year, and instead of bright skies, with balmy and invigorating air, it has given us about as nasty and uncomfortable a month as could be devised. Just for an example of what might have been, we have had an occasional day when sun and earth have vied with each other to give beauty to the landscape and comfort to humanity, but it has been for a few hours only, and the skies soon resumed their lachrymose condition. On the whole it has been a month which should go far in teaching humanity not to depend too much upon the weather for its happiness.

JOTTINGS FROM THE HUB.

From our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, Oct. 24, 1888.

Breaking the force of the political current this week has occurred the council called by the Berkley Street Congregational church for the purpose of ordaining William H. Noyes for the mission work in Japan. He is one of the two young men whose cases have become famous in the Congregational denomination in consequence of the refusal of the prudential committee of the American Board to send them out because they believe that there may be a probation after death for those who have not heard the gospel in this life. For a year and a half he has been the assistant pastor at the Berkley Street church. The immediate cause of the movement to send him abroad, according to the statement read at the council by the chairman of the church committee, was the publication of a letter in the Missionary Herald for August from the deacons of a native church in Japan, asking for more help. As soon as this letter was known to the young people of the Berkley Street church they took steps to respond. They wished to send out Mr. Noyes as a missionary, and he himself was favorable to their desire. So the council was called. Not everything is as smooth as it appears to be on the surface. On the side of the conservatives there is a feeling that only a short time was given so that there might be no protest. The letter calling the council was dated last Thursday, and it had to be acted upon at once so that the churches might be represented at the council on Monday. Four of the churches invited were not represented. These were the Park Street of Boston, the Pilgrim of Cambridge, the Maverick of East Boston, and the Eliot of Boston. The Pilgrim sent a brief, but plain spoken letter, saying that it did not think that the cause of missions would be advanced by sending out a missionary independently of the American Board, and declining to attend on that account. In the nature of the case, since most of the churches near Boston sympathize with the new departure views, the council was composed of a majority of men who were in favor of the ordination of Mr. Noyes, and who would vote to send him out as a missionary independently of the Board.

Rev. W. S. Alexander of Cambridge tried to have the order of the exercises in the council laid on the table till they had passed upon the question whether it would be advisable to send out an independent missionary, but this motion was voted down by a vote of 16 to 9. Then the examination went on and the essential part of it, so far as public interest is concerned, was what he said about future probation. These were his words: "Those who do not hear the message in this life I trustfully leave with God. I do not claim to know God's method of dealing with them, but I do not refuse to think of them. I entertain in their behalf what I conceive to be a reasonable hope that somehow before their destinies are fixed there shall be revealed to them the love of God in Christ Jesus. In this . . . . I merely claim the liberty of the gospel."

Mr. Noyes was closely questioned by a few members of the council, especially by Rev. Dr. Dexter, the editor of the Congregationalist, and one of the leaders of the conservatives. To these questions Mr. Noyes replied that this was the most satisfactory expression of his views which he had ever made; that he did not hold the doctrine of future probation as an affirmative doctrine, but more as a hope from his heart than anything else, a hope which was not forbidden by his reason and was not precluded by scripture; that he did not hold it as a part of his working theology, and should not use it in his missionary labors; that he was willing to leave the fate of the heathen with God, for "shall not the judge of all the earth do right?" The council was in private session for over three hours, and several motions of the conservatives were voted down. Finally, by 25 to 1, the following compromise vote was adopted, after which Mr. Noyes was ordained: "Voted, that this council express its satisfaction with the examination of Mr. Noyes, and that we proceed to ordain him as a foreign missionary, and advise this church to secure an arrangement by which he can work under the same direction as the other missionaries of the Congregational churches; and that in case such an arrangement cannot be made, this church assume the responsibility of his direction and support." It is not likely that this effort to have the Board assume the direction of Mr. Noyes will amount to anything, for he said explicitly that his views had not changed, and as the whole fight at Springfield was over the approval of the course of the prudential committee in refusing to send out the two men, there is nothing for the committee to do, in loyalty to the Board, but to maintain its position and refuse to send him out. Then he will go as from this church. But the church is not self-supporting, but draws $2500 a year from the Massachusetts Home Missionary Society. It was stated at the council that the sum of $7000 had been pledged for the support of Mr. Noyes. This step is a serious one in the so-called Andover controversy.

One of the best things that has been written lately on the parochial school question is the little pamphlet of Edwin D. Mead. It criticizes the Protestants for their unfair attacks upon the Catholics, and makes a warm plea for fair play all around. Mr. Mead is himself a Protestant and defends Swinton's history, which the Boston school committee have removed from their schools, and condemns Anderson's, which has been introduced as a substitute. He is also a warm-hearted American patriot and believes in our public school system, but he finds much to criticize in the present popular agitation against the Catholics. A work by a new writer in the same circle in which Mr. Mead moves is "Great Thoughts for Little Thinkers." It is by Miss Lucia T. Ames of Boston, a sister of Mr. Charles H. Ames, who graduated from Amherst College in the class of 1870. In the preface the author thus states the purpose of her work: "With a profound appreciation of the difficulties involved, the attempt has been made to present in as simple language and as definite form as possible an outline of those fundamental truths in science, history, religion and morals, which shall be a basis for all later thought, with the hope that, however inadequate, it may at least serve as a stepping stone to something better than was taught to most of the children of the previous generation."

Political matters are getting livelier than ever as election approaches. Both sides are sending out vast quantities of campaign literature, and it almost all bears on the tariff. Whether the voter would have it so or not he can not help himself. The tariff is the one issue this year to the exclusion of all others, and the judgment of the people will be held to be expressed by their vote on the congressional elections. Should the present Democratic House be succeeded by a House with a larger proportion of Demcrats, then it is to be understood that the temper of the country is in favor of a revision of the tariff on lines somewhat the same as those proposed by the president and put into form by the Mills bill. But if the House should have a Republican majority, then it is to be understood that the country approves the high protective policy indorsed by the Chicago platform. We shall soon have the verdict of the nation. Several districts of this state are in much doubt, though the Republicans claim eleven.

How Repulsive

Is bad breath, and yet how many otherwise attractive, polite, and particular people afflict their friends with the foul odor of their breath. If there was no remedy for this, it might excite our sympathy, but as there is no need of a foul breath, it is an unpardonable breach of good manners to obtrude such an offense on good society.

Foul breath arises from disordered digestion which can be corrected by using Sulphur Bitters, and the result will be a pure, sweet breath.

After using Ely's Cream Balm two months I was surprised and delighted to find that the right nostril, which was closed up entirely for over twenty years, was open and free as the other, and can use it now as I could not do for many years. I feel very thankful.—R. H. CRESSENHAM, 275, 18th St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

My daughter and myself, great sufferers from catarrh, were cured by Ely's Cream Balm. My sense of smell is restored.—C. M. STANLEY, Shoe Dealer, Ithaca, N. Y.

Cure Yourself,

Don't pay large doctor's bills. The best medical book published, one hundred pages, elegant colored plates, will be sent on receipt of three two-cent stamps to pay postage. Address A. P. Ordway & Co., Boston, Mass.

To-Night and To-Morrow Night,

And each day and night during this week you can get at all druggists Kemp's Balsam for the throat and lungs, acknowledged to be the most successful remedy ever sold for the cure of coughs, croup, bronchitis, whooping cough, asthma and consumption. Get a bottle to-day and keep it always in the house, so you can check your cold at once. Price 50c and $1.00. Sample bottle free.

A Skin Without Blemish.

Secure it by sending ten cents in stamps to W. E. & W. P. Thayer, 231 Savin Hill, Boston, for sample box of Cream of Mecca and valuable book. Send address of four lady friends.

Interested People.

Advertising a patent medicine in the peculiar way in which the proprietor of Kemp's Balsam, for Coughs and Colds, does it is indeed wonderful. He authorizes all druggists to give to those who call for it a sample bottle free, that they may try it before purchasing. The large bottles are 50c. and $1.00. We certainly would advise a trial. It may save you from consumption.

Advice to Mothers.

Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of cutting teeth? If so, send at once and get a bottle of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures dysentery and diarrhœa, regulates the stomach and bowels, cures wind colic, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING is pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female nurses and physicians in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price 25 cents a bottle. 1y23

Some Things Learned by Experience.

That a tablespoonful of salt thrown on a coal fire that is low, will cause it to burn up quickly. That you can clean oil cloth with milk and water; while soap and brush will ruin it. That the skin of a boiled egg is the best remedy you can apply to a boil. That you can't cure Rheumatism or Neuralgia without taking Menard's Rheumatic Bullets. That you can buy them of LeGro & Lynde for $1.00 per bottle. eow7

THE VERDICT UNANIMOUS.

W. D. Sult, Druggist, Bippus, Ind., testifies: "I can recommend Electric Bitters as the very best remedy. Every bottle sold has given relief in every case. One man took six bottles, and was cured of Rheumatism of 10 years' standing." Abraham Hare, druggist, Bellville, Ohio, affirms: "The best selling medicine I have ever handled in my 20 years' experience, is Electric Bitters." Thousands of others have added their testimony, so that the verdict is unanimous that Electric Bitters do cure all diseases of the Liver, Kidneys or Blood. Only a half dollar a bottle at LeGro & Lynde's Drug Store. 2

A WOMAN'S DISCOVERY.

"Another wonderful discovery has been made, and that too by a lady in this county. Disease fastened its clutches upon her and for seven years she withstood its severest tests, but her vital organs were undermined and death seemed imminent. For three months she coughed incessantly, and could not sleep. She bought of us a bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption and was so much relieved on taking first dose that she slept all night and with one bottle has been miraculously cured. Her name is Mrs. Luther Lutz." Thus write W. C. Hamrich & Co., of Shelby, N. C.—Get a free trial bottle at LeGro & Lynde's Drug Store.

TOWN WARRANT.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS. HAMPDEN, SS.

To George W. Ely, constable of the town of Palmer, GREETING.

In the name of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, you are hereby directed to notify and warn all the inhabitants of the town of Palmer qualified to vote in elections and town affairs to meet at the Town House in said Palmer, on Tuesday, the sixth day of November, next, at ten o'clock a. m., to bring in their votes to the selectmen for Electors for President and Vice-President of the United States; Representative to Congress in District No. 12; Governor and Lieutenant-Governor of the Commonwealth, Councillor in District No. 8, Secretary of the Commonwealth; Treasurer and Receiver-General; Auditor, Attorney General; Register of Probate and Insolvency; Senator for First Hampden District; one County Commissioner for three years for Hampden County; Treasurer for Hampden County for three years. Register of Deeds for Hampden County for three years; Representative in the General Court from the Tenth Hampden District; all on one ballot. The polls will be opened at ten o'clock a. m. and will be closed at two o'clock p. m.

And you are hereby directed to serve this warrant by posting up attested copies thereof at the different public places designated by the vote of the town seven days, at least, before the holding of said meeting, and cause this warrant to be printed in the Palmer JOURNAL, at least two issues before the holding of said meeting.

Hereof fail not, and make due return of this warrant, with your doings theron, to the Town Clerk, on or before the holding of said meeting.

Given under our hands this twenty-third day of October, A. D. 1888.

D. F. HOLDEN, W. H. BRAINARD, } Selectmen of Palmer.

A copy. Attest: GEORGE W. ELY, Constable.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS. HAMPDEN, SS.

At a meeting of the County Commissioners of the county of Hampden, held at Springfield, in said county, on the fourth day of April, in the year of our Lord eighteen hundred and eighty-eight.

Whereas, upon the petition of Selectmen of Brimfield, heretofore presented, representing that the public convenience and necessity require the discontinuance of so much of the county highway in the towns of Brimfield and Palmer as lies between a point on the tower hill road, so-called, near the house of Theodore Farrell, in said Brimfield, to near a house formerly owned by Col. John Fenton, in said Palmer, and also the discontinuance of so much of the county highway in said towns as lies between a point on the Fenton Bridge road, so-called, near said house of Col. John Fenton and a point near the house occupied by Oscar D. Wells in Brimfield. And further representing the public convenience and necessity require that a new highway be laid out in said Brimfield commencing near the said house of Oscar D. Wells. And praying that said Commissioners would view the premises aforesaid and grant the prayers of said petition.

It is now thereupon ordered, that notice be given to all persons and corporations interested therein, that said Commissioners will meet at the station of the Boston & Albany Railroad Co. in Palmer, on Thursday, the fifteenth day of November, next, at 9.45 o'clock in the forenoon, for the purpose of locating and discontinuing said highways, by publishing an abstract of said petition and this order thereon, in the Palmer JOURNAL, a public newspaper printed in said county, seven days at least before the said fifteenth day of November, at which time the said Commissioners will proceed to locate and discontinue as aforesaid, and will hear all persons and corporations interested therein, who may then and there desire to be heard, and assess such damages as in their opinion may be just and proper, by reason of the location of said road.

ROBERT O. MORRIS, Clerk.

An abstract of the petition and order thereon.

Attest: ROBERT O. MORRIS, Clerk.

NOTICE is hereby given that the undersigned has been duly appointed assignee of the estate of Moses H. ## S. S. S. FOR THE BLOOD.

PEED'S MILL, TEXAS, June 20, 1888.—The Swift Specific Company, Atlanta, Ga.—Gentlemen: One of my children was troubled with rheumatism and boils for about two years. We gave her various kinds of medicine, but without profit, and began to despair of curing her at all. I was persuaded to try your Swift's Specific. After she had used several bottles the diseases all disappeared, and she is now a hale, hearty and healthy girl twelve years old. Another child has just become afflicted in the same way, and I am using the S. S. S. and anticipate a prompt and permanent cure.

N. C. WAGGONER.

RICH HILL, MO., July 7, 1888—The Swift Specific Co., Atlanta, Ga.—Gentlemen: Our little girl when but three weeks old broke out with eczema. We tried the prescriptions from several good doctors, but without any special benefit. We tried S. S. S., and by the time one bottle was gone her head began to heal, and by the time she had taken six bottles she was completely cured. Now she has a full and heavy head of hair—a robust, hearty child. I feel it but my duty to make this statement.

Respectfully, H. T. SHOBE.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., June 27, 1888—The Swift Specific Co., Atlanta, Ga.—Gentlemen: In 1886 I contracted blood poison, and at once sought a physician, who treated me for several months. By his advice I went to Crab Orchard Springs, Ky., where his course of treatment was carefully observed. I recovered, as I thought, but the next spring pimples began to appear on my face and body. These gradually increased to sores and running ulcers. I was advised to try S. S. S., and immediately after taking it I commenced to improve, slowly at first, but more rapidly afterwards, and soon nothing remained to tell of my trouble. My blood is now thoroughly cleansed, and my system free from taint, and I owe my present condition—a perfect cure—to your medicine. I cheerfully give this statement that others who have suffered as I have may reap the same benefit.

HARDY M. BURT, 24 West Ninth St.

HOMER, LA., May 25, 1888—The Swift Specific Co., Atlanta, Ga.—Gentlemen: About two years ago my general health gave way entirely. I was so debilitated that I almost despaired of ever feeling well again. All that the physicians did for me brought no permanent relief. Friends insisted that I should give S. S. S. a fair trial, although I thought it would be throwing away money. After taking a thorough course my health and strength returned, and I must say that S. S. S. alone cured me, as I discarded all others while using it. As a tonic I can most heartily recommend it; for general debility, it certainly is a specific.

The "Ad."

The ad., when first looked at, is not seen at all,
And again on the floor unnoticed will fall;
The third time it assumes a familiar face,
And the fourth time is seen in its own proper place;
The fifth time it's looked at, the looker half reads it,
The sixth time says, "Pshaw! why, nobody needs it."
The seventh the ad. is a source of great pain;
At the eighth he blurts out, "There's that darned thing again!"
The ninth time he wonders if there's "anything in it?"
The tenth time he reads it in less than a minute.
At the eleventh he says he will ask 'cross the way,
If he sees it a twelfth, how such stuff can pay?
Thirteen times makes him think it may be a good thing;
When a fourteenth perusal the longing doth bring.
Fifteen times he has read, and thinks he will try it;
His wife, on the sixteenth, entreats him to buy it.
The seventeenth day 'tis the theme of the home;
On the eighteenth he's told that pay-day has come.
The nineteenth comes round, it is ordered and paid for,
And this, gentle reader, is what ads. are made for.

"Miss Maud," he said, "I have come in this evening to ask you a question, and I have brought a ring with me. Now before you try it on I want to tell you that if you feel inclined to be a sister to me I will have to take it back, as my father objects to my sisters wearing such large diamonds." And Maud said she would keep the ring.—Jewelers' Weekly.

"Marriage a failure?" soliloquized the Rev. Mr. Joynum in the solitude of his study as he opened the modest little envelope the bridegroom had handed him a few hours before and found a $100 bill inclosed. "Marriage a failure?" he repeated with emphasis and independent fervor as he placed the bill in his pocket, "no! never! The idea is barbarous, infamous (let me look at that bill again; yes, it's genuine,) and strikes at the foundation of society itself!"—Chicago Tribune.

A FAIR TRIAL OF HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA for scrofula, salt rheum, or any affection caused by impure blood, is sufficient to convince any one of the superior and peculiar curative powers of this medicine. The following statement is right to the point.

"My daughter Mary was afflicted with scrofulous sore neck from the time she was 22 months old till she became 6 years of age. Lumps formed in her neck, causing great annoyance, and two of them, after growing to the size of a pigeon's egg, broke and discharged. One became a running sore for three years. We thought we would give Hood's Sarsaparilla a thorough trial. We began with it in January, and in a few months, after she had taken five bottles, all supperation had ceased. We then waited three months, when, as a new lump was beginning to form, we again gave her Hood's Sarsaparilla. After she had taken less than two bottles the lump and all indications of scrofula had entirely disappeared, and now she seems to be a healthy child."—J. S. Carlile, Nauright, N. J.

Cleveland's Superior Baking Powder

The Purest and Best.

Is made only of strictly pure grape cream of tartar, strictly pure bicarbonate of soda, and a small portion of flour as a preservative, nothing else whatever, and is warranted entirely free from alum, ammonia, phosphates, lime, and all other adulterations frequently found in baking powders. The character of materials used, their purity, and the nicety of their combination, render Cleveland's superior baking the most healthful and most economical in use, and it always affords wholesome, nutritious, and delicious food.

It is recommended for purity, healthfulness and efficiency by government and state chemists, chemists of boards of health, and professors in institutions of learning throughout the country.

Sold only in cans. Full weight.

MASON & HAMLIN.

The cabinet organ was introduced in its present form by Mason & Hamlin in 1861. Other makers followed in the manufacture of the instruments, but the Mason & Hamlin organs have always maintained their supremacy as the best in the world.

Mason & Hamlin offer, as demonstration of the unequalled excellence of their organs, the fact that at all of the great World's Exhibitions, since that of Paris, 1867, in competition with best makers of all countries, they have invariably taken the highest honors. Illustrated catalogues free.

ORGANS $22 to $900.

Mason & Hamlin do not hesitate to make extraordinary claim for their pianos, that they are superior to all others. They recognize the high excellence achieved by other leading makers in the art of piano making, but still claim superiority. This they attribute solely to the remarkable improvement introduced by them in the year 1882, and now known as the "Mason & Hamlin Piano Stringer," by the use of which is secured the greatest possible purity and refinement of tone, together with great increased capacity for standing in tune and other important advantages.

PIANOS Grand & Upright

A circular containing testimonials from three hundred purchasers, musicians, and tuners, sent, together with descriptive catalogue, to any applicant.

Papa's Letter.

I was sitting in my study
Writing letters, when I heard,
"Please, dear mamma, Mary told me
Mamma musn't be 'isturbed.

"But I's tired of the kitty;
Want some ozzer fing to do.
Writing letters, is 'ou, mamma?"
Tan't I write a letter, too?"

"Not now, darling, mamma's busy;
Run and play with kitty now."
"No, no, mamma, me write letters—
Tan if 'ou will thow me how."

I would paint my darling's portrait,
As his sweet eyes searched my face—
Hair of gold and eyes of azure,
Form of childish, witching grace.

But the eager face was clouded,
As I slowly shook my head,
Till I said, "I'll make a letter
Of you, darling boy, instead."

So I parted back the tresses
From his forehead high and white,
And a stamp of sport I pasted
'Mid it waves of golden light.

Then I said, "Now, little letter,
Go away and bear good news;"
And I smiled as down the staircase
Clattered loud the little shoes.

Leaving me, the darling hurried
Down to Mary in his glee;
"Mamma's writing lots of letters—
I's a letter, Mary—see!"

No one heard the little prattler
As once more he climbed the stair,
Reaching his little cap and tippet,
Standing on the entry stair.

No one heard the front door open,
No one saw the golden hair
As it floated o'er his shoulders
In the crisp October air.

Down the street the baby hastened,
Till he reached the office door;
"I's a letter, Mr. Postman;
Is there room for any more?

"'Cause dis letter's goin' to papa;
Papa lives with God, 'ou know,
Mamma sent me for a letter;
Does 'ou fink 'at I can go?"

But the clerk in wonder answered:
"Not to-day, my little man."
"Den I'll find anozzer office;
'Cause I must go if I tan."

Fain the clerk would have detained him,
But the pleading face was gone,
And the little feet were hastening,
By the busy crowd swept on."

Suddenly the crowd was parted,
People fled to the left and right,
As a pair of maddened horses
At that moment dashed in sight.

No one saw the baby figure—
No one saw the golden hair,
Till a voice of frightened sweetness
Rang out on the autumn air.

'Twas too late, a moment only
Stood the beauteous vision there;
Then the little face lay lifeless,
Covered o'er with golden hair.

Reverently they raised my darling,
Brushed away the curls of gold,
Saw the stamp upon the forehead
Growing now so icy cold.

Not a mark the face disfigured,
Showing where a foot had trod;
But the little life was ended—
"Papa's letter" was with God.
—Burlington Hawkeye.

"PER C."

"Mr. Bronson? Oh yes, you will find him in his private office, up three flights; turn to the right, No. 6."

"Thanks," and the compactly-built, stalwart man in brown linen ulster, thread gloves and Panama hat, ran, satchel and umbrella in hand, up the three flights of black, dusty stairs, up, up through the gloomy halls of the great business house, turned to the right down a narrow space lined with offices, with open doors to get the circulation from the stairways, and paused at "No. 6." A slight, graceful, pale-faced little woman glanced up from a pile of letters.

"Mr. Bronson? Oh, yes, sir. Walk in, please. Mr. Bronson, a gentleman."

Just a common-place, every-day meeting between two large-hearted men who had maintained business relations for years, entertaining the very highest regard for each other meanwhile, without having once met face to face.

"Mr. Sturtevant? Is it possible! I am glad to see you, sir." And the two sat down and fell into a chat, which settled the Western man in his half-formed opinion, that your genuine, substantial, out-and-out New Yorker is the representative man of America; and made the city man say to himself, "what a hearty frankness your real Western man brings into everything. Nothing dwarfed or contracted about him. His heart and his opinions are as broad and as breezy as his own rich prairies."

"Where do you stop?" as the visitor and long-time customer arose. "Don't know? Allow me to suggest that you go to the St. Nicholas with me, then. I'm there for a little, while my folks are out of town and the house is being brushed out. I will go with you. I was just going, in fact. Miss Clark, I will leave this last account for you to balance—Oh, I want you to see Miss Clark—this is Mr. Sturtevant from Chicago."

"Your name and your handwriting are entirely familiar, Mr. Sturtevant," said the pale-faced young woman, with whom the visitor had first spoken, leaving the desk by which she was standing and coming forward toward the inner office, which was formed by heavy jet green curtains, looped back across a windowed niche, making a pleasing delusion of seclusion and of shade.

"We learn to feel acquainted with people from their handwriting," remarked Mr. Bronson pleasantly, as he drew on his gloves. "On that principle, you two must know each other quite well by this time."

"And you are 'Per C.'?" queried Mr. Sturtevant, looking critically down into the young woman's delicate, finely-cut face. "Now I have a habit of conjuring people up from their handwriting, and the 'Per C.' I have kept in mind all this time was a methodical, clear-headed, old graybeard whom all the sharpers in Gotham couldn't get around, and I find the real 'Per C.' to be but a mere thistle down or frost flower! Well, well!"

"You were not very far astray in your character estimate, however," smiled Mr. Bronson, tipping his light hat down over his dusky black eyes.

"'Per C.' is the most efficient helper that a perplexed merchant was ever blessed with. The firm would have been bankrupt had it not been for her. Fact, sir. At my father's death things were in bad shape. The head bookkeeper, who was also a partner, had been making false entries, and the accounts were in the most inextricable tangle. They baffled me, and I employed an expert to straighten them, but he gave them up in dispair. Miss Clark, who was then in the lower office, volunteered her assistance. She went through them all at odd hours, and brought everything out straight. To prevent exposure the partner refunded what he had embezzled. I bought in all the stock, and kept on with the business."

Mr. Sturtevant looked at the quiet little woman with more admiration than if he had just heard that she had painted a picture, written a book, or awakened a slumbering goddess from a block of marble.

"It was not much to do," she said, in deprecatory tones. "I had had experience with my father's books—only, unhappily—the partner had not the embezzled funds in reserve, and the house went down."

"Good afternoon, Miss Clark," and the two handsome, healthy gentlemen started, full of life and spirits, to run down the stairs.

Mr. Bronson returned almost immediately to say: "Never mind about those last bills. I shall be in early in the morning," and finding the little gray dressed woman sitting at his desk in the shadow of the deep green curtains in a dejected attitude, looking so like a crushed, wilted flower that he could but wonder what had so quickly changed the bright, pleasant face that had just smiled back at him from the doorway.

"This hot wave is something fearful," said Mr. Sturtevant, as his companion regained his side. "I don't see how you can stand it here week after week."

"Oh, I run up the Hudson, where my mother and sisters are, whenever the whim seizes me, knowing the books will not get behindhand in my absence."

"So you are not a married man?"

"No. I have never had time nor inclination to think of matrimony; and I am very well off in my present home."

"Yet it is all wrong," replied the Western man, in a fatherly way he was apt to fall into toward any one to whom he took a fancy. "A man of your age ought to be settled in a home of his own. The mother will go to heaven some day, and the sisters will take unto themselves husbands, and then, my man, you will be left adrift."

Mr. Sturtevant flitted in and out of "No. 6, 3d floor," every day for a week, assiduously cultivating the acquaintance of Mr. Bronson and "Per C.," as he persisted in calling the fragile little accountant, in the intervals of business, of sight-seeing and of writing to his wife—this last being his favorite way of filling in odd moments.

While driving with Mr. Bronson late one sultry July afternoon in Central Park, he broke out abruptly, yet with a tone of peculiar earnestness, which the young man had learned to understand covered some deep feeling.

"Your eyes need opening, friend Bronson. Oh, not at all in regard to your horsemanship; you hold the reins like an expert. I beg your pardon, but I want to speak to you about your confidential clerk. You look surprised. I suppose I shall surprise you still more, my dear fellow, when I tell you that she is dying by inches there in that stiffling office, before your very eyes, and you are so accustomed to her clear, white rose of a face and her gentle ways that you can't understand that anything is wrong with her. Why, man! even I, with my broad chest and perfect health, almost lose my breath every time I run up those stairs. She has faded and wilted and lost vitality perceptibly in the week that I have been here. Her lovely face grows more and more transparent every day. Now Oliver Walker, my confidential clerk, is wild to come to New York. He's a cute, sharp fellow, conscientious and industrious, and being so well acquainted with my business he would work into yours with little difficulty. Now I want to propose to you that we change confidential clerks. The fresh Western air will brace that little woman right up. I know enough of woman-kind to know that it is a matter of life and death with her. The change, the journey, the meeting with new people will renew her personality; she won't know herself in a month's time. This great city broadens the lives of those who are in constant attrition with their kind, but is more contracting than the most isolated country life can be to a soul moving in a daily rut. I know she is valuable to you, but when the flower wilts utterly and falls to the ground you will be obliged to take some one to fill her place."

"I can't dispute your argument," replied the young man thoughtfully, bringing his high-stepping horses down to a walk. "I have no doubt she needs rest and change. The place is a responsible one, and there is a great deal put upon her, as there is apt to be upon a person so efficient and so obliging. I never saw her out of temper and never heard her complain of weariness. She has no relatives, and never seems to care about taking a vacation. She could never be persuaded to leave us," he continued presently, with a confident smile curling his tawny moustache. "We will, however, for the sake of justice, submit the proposition to her. I have no right to dismiss the subject until she has been consulted. I think you are needlessly alarmed in regard to her health, however. She has wonderful powers of endurance, although, it is true, she has looked as fragile as that day lily yonder all the ten years she has been with us."

"Ten years?"

"Ten years last autumn."

Mr. Sturtevant went back to his airy room at the St. Nicholas, and wrote a long letter to his wife, although he had already sent her a postal card and a telegram that day. He used to say that his pent-up enthusiasm would explode, had he not the safety valve of writing to Eliza always at hand.

The next morning Mr. Sturtevant appeared at the Bronson office just as the old black porter was taking down the shutters. He had not long to wait, however, and disclosed his plan to Miss Clark while she was removing her simple wrap and plain straw hat.

"You say Mr. Bronson is willing to make the exchange?" she queried with a faltering voice, seating herself at her desk and mechanically breaking the seal of the topmost letter of that morning's mail.

"Yes, for your good, remember."

"I will go."

That was all. Mr. Sturtevant, with a rare knowledge of woman gained from his long and felicitous union with Eliza, went over to a window and sat down to look at the morning papers, while she busied herself with the mail as usual; but with a faint glow on her cheeks, warning of an inward fire, like the reflection on the snowy petals of the gleam in the chalice of a cactus cup. An hour passed thus, and her employer entered, genial and gentlemanly as usual.

Mr. Sturtevant threw aside his paper and said breezily:

"It is all settled, my dear Bronson. This is Saturday. We shall start for Chicago Monday, on the 8 a. m. express. I shall telegraph for Oliver to meet us at Niagara, where we will stop over a train and take a look at the Falls. He is one of those alive, up and coming chaps that wouldn't ask for more than half an hour's notice to start on a voyage around the world."

Mr. Bronson gave his accountant a questioning look. She nodded. "Very well," he said coldly, yet with an effort to speak in his usual way. "You will need all the time there is, of course." He sat down in the shadow of the rich green curtains and wrote an order on the cashier. She put on her gray hat and gloves again, took the slip of paper in her trembling fingers and went down the dusty stairs without trusting herself to speak. I don't know as it occurred to either of them at the time, or for hours afterwards, that their parting, after their years of intimate business relationship was a very strange one, or that it would have been very strange for two men under the same circumstances.

"Women have not the hearts of men, although it is the fashion of the time to put them and keep them in places requiring a man's strength, judgment and imperturbability. I must put that in my next letter to Eliza," said Mr. Sturtevant to himself as he ran after the little accountant, overtook her on the second landing, made some necessary business arrangements, stood by when the cashier handed her her money and left her on the crowded sidewalk.

She did not go home at once, or rather to the boarding house which she called home, Instead, she walked across to Broadway and took a Central Park omnibus.

"I can be alone in the Park for a little while," she said to herself.

I don't know that she thought at all as the omnibus thundered and rattled and banged up Broadway; she was only realizing the fact that she was going away from him.

She strolled about the gravel walks of the Park, sat in the rustic arbors, lingered beside the fountain, ponds and flower beds, but she saw nothing of the beauties that were delighting thousands of souls famishing for a breath of country summer; she was only almost overpowered by a dragging pain at being torn away from the associations of years.

Alone in her own little room, packing her scanty possessions, she burst out bitterly to herself.

"Oh the wretchedness and wrong of shutting a young girl up in an office day after day for years with a young man no way her superior except in the matter of money, and expecting her to look upon him as indifferently as upon the 'improved type writer' at his elbow. Oh the cruelty and the pity of it. I have had my dreams. I will not call them foolish dreams; it was only the rose bush reaching toward the trellis. Every girl has dreams, and it is right that she should have. It makes no difference whether she be filling the position of a man or that of a woman—her heart is not changed by the work that her mind and body are engaged in.

"My beautiful visions have faded into air as I have faded from a plump, pretty girl to a thin, wan, colorless old maid, and all the time he has been growing manly and strong and handsome, year by year. Yet he has been kind to me, in a way, and although constantly in society, with elegant ladies, he has remained single, and my woman's heart has dared to hope that it might be for my sake. For the sake of me, his bookkeeper! How his proud mother and sisters would spurn the idea.

"I had better have been a kitchen girl in some good family, or a cook, or a farmer's wife with rosy children in my arms and about my knees, than to be what I am, a recluse, with no friends or associates. A disappointed woman, with her heart eaten out for love of a man who looks upon her only as a calculating machine!"

That night she rose from her bed and, throwing a shawl around her, looked out upon the tireless moon and stars and upon the sleepless streets of the great city whose life is so abundant that it must go on by night as by day; but this thought did not occur to her now; she was saying:—

"Had I been his wife he would not have allowed me to serve him as I have served him. To think of the nights that I have sat up over those books! I saved him from bankruptcy, and in his gratitude he promoted me to be his confidential clerk! He was very grateful, and am I to blame for having thought that my life might grow fresh and beautiful with love like the lives we read of in the books? What hours I have spent, which should have been passed in sleep, in reading and study that I might keep abreast with him in mental culture. He must remember me as one who has been a help to him. It is impossible that he should forget me. There is a modicum of comfort in that thought and in the fact that a young man is to take my place. I could not bear to think of him smiling over the top of his desk into the eyes of some other woman. If he marries, I hope I shall never know it.

"It is the nature of single women to love the unmarried men who treat them pleasantly and kindly, and with whom they are constantly associated. I wish it was in my power to put an end to every such unnatural relation. The people who are constantly crowding women into the places which should be filled only by men, wilfully misunderstand this matter. Every women who fills a man's position is keeping some man out of a place of employment—keeping him from marrying and so lessening her own chances of matrimony and of being a mistress of a home. When will this problem be set right? I have been guilty and must suffer; and yet should I dare speak these sentiments in public how I should be ridiculed by the so-called reformer; and should I weave that I know of these shop and office flirtations into a readable newspaper article, there is no editor who would give it a place because it would treat of an unpopular side of a subject, and because women can be hired for less than men."

The next morning she went early to church. There had been a funeral of one of the members, and they were bearing the coffin out as she entered.

"I wish it were me," she thought, looking at the mourners, headed by the stricken husband walking, sorrowing, with bowed head to the carriage.

As she sat in her accustomed seat that idea had such complete possession of her that she took no notice of the opening services; in fact, comprehended nothing only that she wished her life might go out then and there as a candle is blown out by the wind.

Then she heard the minister read, "For it is not a vain thing for you, because it is your life; and through this thing you shall prolong your days in the land."

The sermon which followed was practical as well as spiritual, growing out of some circumstances in the life just ended, and Miss Clark left the church, saying:—

"God has a right to my life, and therefore to serve him I must do my best with what he has given. I never looked at it in just that way before. I have seen my duty. I am glad I came. If, through this change which has been wrought for me, I can prolong my days in the land I will go away cheerfully. Since I have no right to trouble others with my trouble, I will take up my burden bravely, for I can never hope to leave it, and hide it away in my heart; and I will even call up a hope to take with me as I start out upon this new chapter of my history."

She told no one that she was going away. Indeed there was no one to tell, for aside from the minister, not more than half a dozen people had addressed her in all the years that she had regularly attended church there, and now they were all away on vacations, or summer journeys, a stranger to her filling the pulpit even.

She doubled her weekly offering to a poor old woman who always stood while the congregation was dispersing, at the opening of a little alleyway a short distance from the church, and said, "good-bye," as she put the scrip in the withered hand. She smiled rather bitterly as the thought asserted itself, "All my going to that church has formed that single easily-severed tie!" Then she cast about in her mind, trying to remember what had decided her to fix upon that particular church, and blushed when she had to confess that it was because he attended the church just below, and that she often caught a sight of him going in or out, and sometimes he gave her a smile or nod of recognition.

The thought that she might see him in this way to-day, for a last look, had been a comfort all the morning, but now, when it came up to her again like the last ray of sunshine in a clouded sky, she resolutely put it away and turned down another street.

At that very hour the object of this poor soul's conflict with self was swinging in a hammock suspended from the spreading branches of a giant oak, on the Highlands, above the Hudson. There were four of these swaying crimson and yellow cradles hanging in the balmy air from the huge limbs of this massive tree; and it was characteristic of these luxury-loving Bronsons that they had lounged here, looking up into its vast emerald dome, through the shining leaves of which flittered an occasional arrow of sunshine, while the clear-voiced church bell, only a few rods away, was summoning other people in carriages and on foot for miles from farm and hill and meadow.

The mother and three sisters, four stylish society women, were all beaming now upon this black-whiskered Adonis who was their idol.

"What should you have said," he asked indifferently, after lying for a long time with his eyes closed and his white hands clasped beneath his shapely head, "if I had married my accountant, the woman who has been for so long in our office, you know?"

There was a little rustle of drapery and flutter of fans, then Marie, the youngest sister, began an indignant protest, which her brother checked by saying:

"Don't excite yourself, Marie; the idea merely occurred to me as I was about to announce to you that she been called away."

"Is it possible!" exclaimed his mother, settling her gray frizzes and finger puffs which the fresh breeze had slightly disarranged. "What was her name? I never saw her, but remember of hearing her spoken of in the matter of settling your poor father's estate as a faithful creature—"

"I should think so," interrupted the young man; "she saved the estate from bankruptcy, and your daughters from going out into the world in some capacity to earn their own living, as she did when her father died insolvent, leaving her without relatives."

Mrs. Bronson ignored the point and went on in exactly the same key as before. "It is very unfortunate. What will you do, my son?"

"I have already hired a young man to fill the vacancy."

"Ten years?" said Adelaide, the oldest sister, "she has fairly grown gray in our service."

"Do you mean that white-faced girl in No. 6?" asked Sarah, and Marie, who was swinging in the same airy couch as the second sister, added, "I never noticed anything about her."

"I thought you looked worn out," said his mother, "and I heard you up in the night, walking about your room. When did it happen?"

"Yesterday."

"Suddenly?"

"Very." And the young man dismissed the subject by turning upon his side, crossing his elbow under one ear and reaching his long, slim fingers around the back of his head and covering the other ear with the ends of them; an old boyish habit of his when he wished to shut out the tiresome chat of mother and sisters. They exchanged glances and smils eand then let him alone while he was thinking. "I didn't say what had called her away, or where she had gone. Am I to blame that they think she is dead?"

Mr. Bronson took it upon himself all through the summer and early autumn to open the mail. As usual, there were plenty of business letters from Sturtevant & Co., but none "Per C." After a time he ventured an enquiry, in a postscript, and received in reply: "'Per C.' is recruiting."

After that the morning mail was left for the new clerk, who, happily, was all that had been represented. Yet Mr. Bronson found an unwonted wearisomeness about the business that seemed to him would wear his very life out. Night after night he lay in his luxurious rooms at the St. Nicholas, for he had entirely given up going up the Hudson now, and dreamed that he climbed the long, hard stairs up to No. 6 with a light, hopeful step, and sitting down by his desk looked up over the bisected back to meet the soft, blue, faithful eyes that had never failed him; and then the fair face and smooth brown hair turned into a white lily, or rose, or a frost flower, or snow wreath, and faded away.

"Always into some emblem of purity, and fitly, too," he cried one night, when these dream pictures continually haunted and deluded him, leaving him in an agony of remorseful sorrow. "What am I to do? The old times can never return."

Ripe summer wore into autumn, and as the golden days grew gray and chill, Mrs. Bronson and her daughters returned to the thoroughly renovated family mansion on Murray Hill. The four women were all shocked at the pale face and languid air of the son and brother.

"He must have a change. He must go a journey. Either one or all of the sisters would accompany and take care of him." But he refused to entertain their offer, and would "look out for himself," he said, should he decide upon any place to go.

Passing through No. 6 the next morning to his place in his own curtained niche, he chanced to glance over Mr. Walker's shoulder, and caught sight of an order from Sturtevant & Co., in "Per C.'s" well-known, clear-cut characters.

He took the bill and studied it, from the "Chicago, Oct. 18"—to the "Per C." in the lower right-hand corner.

The blood danced through his veins, his heart throbbed with an exultant joy, his very fingers tingled. He was stimulated out of his languor as he had sometimes been by the freshening breeze when sailing down the harbor on a sultry morning, or by finding himself in a cool, woodland dell, surrounded by the aromatic fragrance of wild azaleas after a brisk, warm walk.

"I have decided to start on the 8 p. m. express for Chicago," he announced, to the surprise of the household, after he had already surprised them by appearing at lunch, which they were enjoying with two or three lady friends.

After a rapid journey for a person in pursuit of rest and enjoyment, he found himself on a clear, crisp October morning in the vestibule of the business quarters of Sturtevant & Co.

"Mr. Sturtevant? One flight, No. 1, to the left."

The young New Yorker's heart beat as it had never before beaten at anticipation in any form. He thought, "I shall see her in her plain, gray dress, with her smooth brown hair, white cheeks and her thin, pliant hands busy over the morning mail. How her shy, blue eyes will light up at sight of me. I don't know what I shall say. Of course, I shall go through all the proper conventionalities. Ah me!"

He reached the door. His hand trembled on the knob. Just then it was turned from within, and he stood face to face with Mr. Sturtevant.

"Why, Bronson! my man; glad to see you. Been ill? You look like the ghost of your former self." But his quick eye did not lose his visitor's rapid glance about the office, nor the change of countenance when the accountant's desk was seen to be vacant; but he made him say, after a little common-place talk, making an effort to speak quite naturally:

"Miss Clark is not with you?"

"No, her place is at the house. My wife was an Eastern woman, and had relatives by the name of Clark. They have hunted up some kind of a relationship, and have struck up a great friendship over it. Kitty, as my wife calls her—'Per C.' she will always be to me—fits right into our household as if she belonged there. Wife needed a companion. The children needed a governess, and I needed some one at the house to straighten my books out for me, when I can think to take them up, and to write orders when I am in a hurry. I have never had a woman in my office, nor a Chinaman in my kitchen. I don't take kindly to the new order of things."

"'Per C.' and Eliza, the wife, are taking singing lessons and brushing up their German, and I don't know what all; but I do know that she more than earns her wages by the additional light and life and interest she brings into our home. She's a rare woman, Bronson, a rare woman, and there are plenty of people in Chicago who are finding it out. You must go home to dinner with me this evening and get acquainted with Eliza and the children, and see what the West has done for 'Per C.'"

He had planned to surprise her, but of course he could not make that admission, and had to accept the invitation to dinner like any other gentleman, and went about all day with an undefined pain in his heart, lest, just as he approached her, she would fade away like the flower maiden of his dreams.

Mrs. Sturtevant was never surprised to see a messenger coming with a billet from her husband. The one this morning, however, was of unusual interest.

"He's come!" it said, "I knew he would, and he looks as if he had been through a siege. You must tell her, for we won't allow her to be surprised. You ought to have seen the man, with his heart in his eyes, when I opened the door upon him just now, and the blank look that succeeded when he found me to be the only occupant of the office. I shall bring him up to dinner. Have the children down; we will receive him like a family friend. I want him to see that a man's best riches are in his home. And mind you, Eliza, we won't leave them alone for a moment. If he wants favors, he must ask for them."

I think Miss Clark cried a little for joy as she knelt beside the low white bed in her pretty room, and instead of uttering any spoken prayer, saying simply, in a prayerful spirit, "I shall see him again!" But experience had taught her better than to admit one stray gleam of hope into her yearning heart.

She was in the back parlor, telling the children a story, when Mr. Bronson entered the high, handsome rooms with his jolly, bustling host. Too much the man of society to fail of saying just the right thing when he was presented to Mrs. Sturtevant, he was still looking for the quiet maiden, whom he had almost begun to think of as a creature of fancy.

He had never seen her surrounded by children before, and thought at first, "She has caught a gleam of youth from them," and then the thought asserted itself, "Had I known my mind we might have been married these seven or eight years," and still approaching her through the long rooms, at the further end of which she had risen and remained standing in the center of the pretty group, he thought:

"This plump, girlish figure in blue silk and white lace and frizzes is not she at all." But Miss Clark smiled and blushed, and held out the small white hand which he took in his own for the first time in all those years of acquaintance, and as he held it fast said bravely before them all:

"I can't do without you, and have come to ask you to return with me as my wife."

"Ha, ha," laughed Mr. Sturtevant. "I wrote to Eliza the first day I was in your office, 'Bronson is in love with his confidential clerk, but he will never know it until something happens to remove her from her position.' Thank me for opening your eyes, my man."

"Per C." became Mrs. Bronson, but the wedding did not come off until the following spring. It was well that Oliver Walker was such a treasure of a bookkeeper, as business matters kept his employer in Chicago a great deal during the winter.

The mother and sisters of Bronson admired the wife of the head-of-the-family exceedingly. They like "Western women," they say, and they are glad to have Clarence married and settled in a home of his own.

One day not long ago, at a family dinner in the grand Murray Hill mansion, the older sister said: "It has always puzzled me who Kate resembled; now I know. It is Miss——,Miss——; I have forgotten her name, your old accountant, brother."

"Perhaps," replied the young man, smiling across the table at his wife; "yes, I can see the likeness myself, although it is a long time since she was 'called away.'"

"It is useless to struggle against fate, Iphigenia. Your own heart draws you to me irresistibly, my proud dearling." "What do you mean, sir?" exclaimed the highs-pirited Boston girl. "Have I ever given you the right to address me in this overbearingly familiar manner?" "For to speak of the ardent devotion I have long felt for you, Iphigenia Boehn," replied the young man with a tenderness not unmixed with sternness, "I am to umpire the next game between the Bostons and the Detroits." "Oh, George!" said she wildly, "yes! yes! yes! I am yours! And we'll win, won't we, George?"—Chicago Tribune.

POSSIBILITIES OF A PARLOR.

About a yard of wool carpeting, in yellow, pine and walnut, was laid down all around the room, and the rug was large enough to come well over the edge of this. It was only a Brussels carpet with a wide border; but it was so well made that close study was required to detect any seams. The ground was dark wine-color, and it was thinly covered with small Turkish figures, in yellow, pink, olive-green, cream-color and brown, with the faintest touch of blue. The effect of the whole floor was handsomer than of many which have cost double the amount.

The window had handsome Madras curtains in gold and cream color, and there was some stained glass in soft green and amber. The chimney piece, with its belongings, was the central point in the room, and first of all, it had an open fire of wood, that snapped and flashed and sparkled in the most cheery and seductive way imaginable, and the flames were reflected in the dazzling fender and andirons. The mantle was of cherry, beautifully polished, with a moderate-sized mirror in the center and smaller ones at the sides. There were numerous little shelves and corners well filled with ornamental objects that were not too numerous, but each one had at least beauty's excuse for being. Not last in decorative effect was a broad, low vase, with handles that contributed its lovely charm of Japanese light blue.

For the furniture, there was a low, broad sofa with upholstered back, but no sides, and a low broad arm-chair, both covered in wine color and gold, a rich striped material, with the stripes running from back to front. Two very odd-looking corner chairs with gilt frames had their seats covered with wine-colored plush, another chair was upholstered with a sort of raw silk material having palm leaves of all colors on a golden ground; a low book case filled with choice volumes had curtains of crimson Japanese silk, and a Shakespeare table at one side was polished cherry, with a scarf cover of plain gold velours edged with gold bullion fringe.—Town Topics.

"WILL YOU ROCK ME, FATHER."

"My little boy is dead," said a friend, as we met upon the street. "We have just been to bury him." Then with tender words which came so readily from the father's bleeding heart, he went on to speak of his darling boy, his opening mind and affectionate heart, his last painful sickness, the closing scene, and the vacancy of home, now he has gone. "But," he added, as he spoke his face lighted up with true submissive peace, "he taught me one lesson before he died." "And what was that?" I inquired. He replied, "As my boy grew very sick, the medicine was exceedingly disagreeable to him, so much so that he refused to take it. But I told him he must. Doctor had so ordered, and he must. Then lifting his eyes to mine, he said, 'If I drink it, will you rock me, father, and sing to me?' 'Yes, yes, my good boy; take it and I will.' With that assurance, summoning all his flagging powers, he drank the bitter draught. Then laying his burning cheek on mine, he said, 'Now, father, rock me, sing to me.'

"The lesson my dying boy taught me is this: When my Heavenly Father mingles a bitter cup, and pressing it to my lips says, 'Drink it,' I will obey. Then will he rock me in his strong arms of love, and sing to me the precious words of his promises. Oh, how sweet."

Afflicted one, is it not a truth, a great and blessed truth, declared in the Word of God and confirmed by Christian experience, that "Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him?" And when the humble disciple can follow the Master into the soul's Gethsemane, and there repeat his words, "Oh, my Father, if this cup may not pass from me except I drink it, thy will be done," then will he rock him in the tender arms of his love, and sing to him words of promise sweeter than ever fell on angel's ear.—Zion's Watchman.

There's Lots of Fun in Courting.

There's lots of fun in courting,
  If you know the way to do it;
It's the choicest kind of sporting
  Once you get accustomed to it.
Do your courting moderately,
  As a business, not a favor;
Make haste slowly, it adds greatly
  To the fun a piquant flavor.

CHORUS.
When you find a willing woman,
  Court her boldly, everywhere;
Girls love dearly by a true man
  To be courted on the square.

They may not be quickly won, sir,
  For by nature they're capricious;
And, besides, they think the fun, sir;
  Quite too utterly delicious
To be ended in a hurry;
  Though 'tis married life they sigh for,
Courting days have less to worry,
  Trouble, bother, and to cry for.

Court your sweetheart in the kitchen,
  In the parlor, in the park;
And you'll find the most bewitchin'
  Time for courting's after dark.
Court for love, most women like it.
  Nay! I'm certain they all do;
And the fellow who can strike it
  Once will hanker for it, too.

Court a woman for herself, sir,
  For the virtue that is in her;
Don't go courting her for pelf,
  You will rue it if you win her.
Court a woman, boldly, bravely;
  Never court her for a fool;
When you do, she'll teach you naively
  How a woman scorned can rule.

Court a woman for a wife, sir,
  For a mother good and true;
And my word you'll find this life, sir,
  Paradise enough for you.
And such courting beats strawberries,
  Peaches frozen in ice cream;
Champagne frappe, brandied cherries,
  'Tis a sunny, golden dream.

A BEAUTIFUL FATHER.

"Tell your mother you've been very good boys to-day," said a school teacher to two little new scholars. "O," replied Tommy, "we haven't any mother." "Who takes care of you?" she asked. "Father does. We've got a beautiful father; you ought to see him!" "Who takes care of you when he is at work?" "He takes all the care before he goes off in the morning and after he comes back at night. He's a house-painter, but there isn't any work this winter, so he's doing laboring till spring comes. He leaves us a warm breakfast when he goes off, and we have bread and milk for dinner, and a good supper when he comes home. Then he tells us stories and plays on the fife, and cuts out beautiful things with his jack-knife. You ought to see our father and home; they are both beautiful." Before long the teacher did see that home and that father. The room was a poor attic, graced with cheap pictures, autumn leaves, and other little trifles that cost nothing. The father, who was preparing the evening meal for his two motherless boys, was, at first glance, only a rough, begrimed laborer; but before the stranger had been in the place ten minutes the room became a palace and the man a magician. His children had no idea they were poor, nor were they so with such a hero as this to fight their battles for them. This man, whose grateful spirit lighted up the otherwise dark life of his children, was preaching to all about him more effectually than was many a man in sacerdotal robe in costly temple. He was a man of patience and submission to God's will, showing how to make home happy under the most unfavorable circumstances. He was rearing his boys to be high-minded citizens, to put their shoulders to burdens, rather than be burdens in society in the days that are coming. He was, as his children had said, "a beautiful father" in the highest sense of the word.—The Mother's Friend.

A WYOMING MARRIAGE CEREMONY.

The inhabitants of a frontier town in Wyoming recently elevated to the position of justice of the peace their worthy fellow citizen, Jonas Burton, and the squire had just been called upon to perform, for the first time, the marriage service. In anticipation of an aggreeable relief from the monotony of frontier life, the entire population attended the ceremony. When the adventurous couple had stationed themselves before him, the squire began: Feller citizens, this yar man an' this yar woman have appeared before the court to be hitched in the legal bonds of wedlock. If any galoot in the mob knows of anything that moot block the game ef took to a higher court, let him now toot his bazoo or else keep his jaw to himself now and forever. All in favor o' me perceedin' as authorized by law, say aye." Nobody who knew squire and bridgroom felt disposed to vote against the motion, which was unanimously carried. "Then," continued the squire, by the power in me vested as justice of the peace in a' fur this precinct, I pronounce you, Amos Peabody, husband, an' you, Mandy Thomas, wife, an' legalize ye to remain as such now an' furever more, an' you stand committed until the fees an costs in this case be paid in full: an' may God have mercy on your souls." An understanding was immediately reached in the matter of fees and costs, and Mr. and Mrs. Peabody departed for their cabin up the creek.

CALLING ON THE SICK.

Only call at the door unless you are sure your friend is able to see you without harm.

Enter and leave the house, and move about the room quietly.

Carry a cheerful face, and speak cheerful words.

In order to cheer you need not tell lies.

If your friend is very sick, do not fall into gay and careless talk in the attempt to be cheerful.

Don't ask questions and thus oblige your friend to talk.

Talk about something outside, and not about the disease and circumstances of the patient.

Tell the news, but not the list of the sick and dying.

If possible carry something with you to please the eye and relief the monotony of the sick room; a flower, or even a picture which you can loan for a few days.

If desirable, some little delicacy to tempt will be well bestowed.

The perfume of some flowers are poisonous, and they should never be carried into the sick room. Especially is this true of the tuberose, heliotrope, hyacinth, orange, syringa and lilies.

Stay only a moment, or a few moments at the longest, unless you can be of some help.

The Chemistry of Character.

John and Peter, Robert and Paul,
God in his wisdom created them all;
John was a statesman, and Peter a slave,
Robert a preacher, and Paul was a knave.
Evil or good, as the case might be,
White or colored, or bond or free,
John and Peter, Robert and Paul—
God in His wisdom created them all.

Out of earth's elements mingled with flame,
Out of life's compounds of glory and shame,
Fashioned and shaped by no will of their own,
And helplessly into life's history thrown;
Born by the law that compels men to be,
Born to conditions they could not foresee,
John and Peter, Robert and Paul—
God in His wisdom created them all.

John was the head and heart of his state,
Was trusted and honored, was noble and great.
Peter was made 'neath life's burdens to groan,
And never once dreamed that his soul was his own;
Robert great glory and honor received,
For zealously preaching what no one believed;
While Paul of the pleasures of sin took his fill,
And gave up his life to the service of ill.

It chanced that these men in their passing away
From earth and its conflicts, all died the same day.
John was mourned throughout the length and breadth of the land;
Peter fell 'neath the lash of a merciless hand;
Robert died with the praise of the Lord on his tongue,
While Paul was convicted of murder, and hung.
John and Peter, Robert and Paul—
God in His wisdom created them all.

Men said of the statesman, "How noble and brave;"
But of Peter, alas! "He was only a slave;"
Of Robert—"'Tis well with his soul, it is well."
While Paul they consigned to the torments of hell.
Born by one law, through all nature the same,
What made them differ, and who was to blame?
John and Peter, and Robert and Paul—
God in His wisdom created them all.

Out in that region of infinite light,
Where the soul of the black man is as pure as the white—
Out where the spirit, thro' sorrows made wise,
No longer resorts to deception and lies—
Out where the flesh can no longer control
The freedom and faith of the God-given soul,
Who shall determine what fate shall befall
John or Peter, Robert or Paul?

John may in wisdom and goodness increase,
Peter rejoice in infinite peace,
Robert may learn that the truths of the Lord
Are more in the spirit and less in the word,
And Paul may be blessed with a holier birth
Than the passion of men had allowed him on earth.
John and Peter, Robert and Paul—
God in his wisdom created them all.

A SILK DRESS.

"I must have it, Charles," said the handsome little wife of Mr. Whitman. "So don't put on a sober face."

"Did I put on a sober face?" asked the husband with an attempt to smile that was anything but a success.

"Yes, sober as a man on trial for his life. Why, it's as long as the moral law. There, dear, clear it up, and look as if you had at least one friend in the world. What money-lovers you men are!"

"How much will it cost?" inquired Mr. Whitman. There was another effort to look cheerful and acquiescent.

"About forty dollars," was answered with just a little faltering in the lady's voice, for she knew the sum would sound extravagant.

"Forty dollars! Why, Ada, do you think I am made of money?" Mr. Whitman's countenance underwent a remarkable change of expression.

"I declare, Charles," said his wife, a little impatiently, "you look at me as if I were an object of fear instead of affection. I don't think this is kind of you. I've only had three silk dresses since we were married, while Amy Blight has had six or seven during the same period, and every one of hers cost more than mine. I know you think me extravagant, but I wish you had a wife like some women I could name. I rather think you'd find out the difference before long."

"There, there, pet, don't talk to me after this fashion! I'll bring you the money at dinner time, that is, if—"

"No 'ifs' or 'buts,' if you please. The sentence is complete without them. Thank you, dear! I'll go this afternoon and buy the silk. So don't fail to bring the money. I was in at Silkskin's yesterday, and saw one of the sweetest patterns I ever laid my eyes on. Just suits my style and complexion. I shall be inconsolable if it's gone. You won't disappoint me?"

And Mrs. Whitman laid her soft white hand on the arm of her husband, and smiled with sweet persuasion in her face.

"Oh, no. You shall have the money," said Mr. Whitman, turning from his wife, as she thought, a little abruptly, and hurrying from her presence. In his precipitation, he had forgotten the usual parting kiss.

"That's the way it is always?" said Mrs. Whitman, her whole manner changing, as the sound of the closing street doors came jarring upon her ears. "Just say money to Charles, and at once there is a cloud in the sky."

"Forty dollars for a new dress!" mentally ejaculated the husband of vain, pretty, thoughtless Mrs. Whitman, as he shut the door after him. "I promised to settle Thompson's coal bill to-day—thirty-three dollars—but don't know where the money is to come from. The coal is burnt up, and more must be ordered. Oh, dear! I'm discouraged. Every year I fall behindband. This winter I did hope to get a little in advance, but if forty-dollar silk dresses are in order, there's an end to that devoutly-to-be-wished-for circumstance. Debt, debt! How I have always shrunk from it; but steadily, now, it is closing its Briærian arms around me, and my restricted chest labors in respiration. Oh, if I could but disentangle myself now, while I have the strength of early manhood, and the bonds that hold me are weak. If Ada could see as I see—if I could only make her understand my position rightly. Alas! that is hopeless, I fear."

And Mr. Whitman hurried his steps, because his heart beat quick, and his thought was unduly excited.

Not a long time after Mr. Whitman left the house, the postman delivered a letter to his address. His wife examined the writing on the envelope, which was in a bold, masculine hand, and said to herself, as she did so—"I wonder who this can be from?"

Something more than curiosity moved her. There intruded on her mind a vague feeling of disquiet, as if the missive bore unpleasant news for her husband. The stamp showed it to be a city letter. A few times, of late, such letters had come to his address, and she had noticed that he had read them hurriedly, thrust them without remark into his pocket, and become silent and sober-faced.

Mrs. Whitman turned the letter over in her hand, in a thoughtful way, and as she did so the image of her husband as he had become for the most of the time, of late, presented himself with unusual vividness Sympathy stole into her heart.

"Poor Charles!" she said, as the feeling increased; "I'm afraid something is going wrong with him."

Placing the letter on the mantel-piece, where he could see it when he came in, Mrs. Whitman entered upon some household duties; but a strange impression, as of weight, lay upon her heart—a sense of impending evil—a vague, troubled disturbance of her usual inward self-satisfaction.

If the thought of Mrs. Whitman recurred, as was natural, to the elegant silk dress of which she was to become the owner on that day, she did not feel that proud satisfaction her vain heart experienced a little while before. Something of its beauty had faded.

"If I only knew what that letter contained," she said, half an hour after it had come in, her mind still feeling the pressure which had come down upon it so strangely, as it seemed to her.

She went to the mantel-piece, took up the letter, and examined the superscription. It gave no light. Steadily it kept growing upon her that its contents were of a nature to trouble her husband.

"He's been a little mysterious of late," she said to herself. The idea affected her very unpleasantly. "He grows more silent and reserved," she added, as thought, under a kind of feverish excitement, became active in a new direction. "More indrawn, as it were, and less interested in what goes on around him. His coldness chills me at times, and his irritation hurts me.

She drew a long, deep sigh. Then, with an almost startling vividness, came before her mind, in contrast, her tender, loving, cheerful husband of three years before, and her quiet, sober-faced husband of to-day.

"Something had gone wrong with him," she said aloud, as the feeling grew stronger. "What can it be?"

The letter was in her hand.

"This may give me light." And with careful fingers she opened the envelope, not breaking the paper, so that she could seal it again if she desired so to do. There was a bill for sixty dollars, and a communication from the person sending the bill. He was a jeweler.

"If this is not settled at once, he wrote, "I shall put the account in suit. It has been standing for over a year, and I am tired of getting excuses instead of money."

The bill was for a lady's watch, which Mrs. Whitman had almost compelled her husband to purchase.

"Not paid for! Is it possible?" exclaimed the little woman, in blank astonishment, while the blood mounted to her forehead.

Then she sat down to think. Light began to come into her mind. As she sat thus thinking, a second letter came in for her husband from the penny-postman. She opened it without hesitation. Another bill and another dunning letter!

"Not paid! Is it possible?" She repeated the ejaculation. It was a bill of twenty-five dollars for gaiters and slippers, which had been standing for three or four months.

"This will never do?" said the awakening wife—"never—no, never!" And she thrust the two letters into her pocket in a resolute way. From that hour until the return of her husband at dinner time, Mrs. Whitman did an unusual amount of thinking for her little brain. She saw, the moment he entered, that the morning cloud had not passed from his brow.

"Here is the money for that new dress," he said, taking a small roll of bills from his vest pocket, and handing them to Ada, as he came in. He did not kiss her, nor smile in the old bright way. But his voice was calm if not cheerful. A kiss and a smile would have been more precious to the young wife than a hundred silk dresses. She took the money saying:

"Thank you, dear! It is kind of you to regard my wishes.

Something in Ada's voice and manner caused Mr. Whitman to lift his eyes, with a look of inquiry, to her face. But she turned aside, so that he could not read its expression.

He was graver and more silent than usual, and ate with scarcely an appearance of appetite.

"Come home early, dear," said Mrs. Whitman, as she walked to the door, with her husband, after dinner.

"Are you impatient to have me admire your new silk dress?" he replied, with a faint effort.

"Yes; it will be something splendid," she answered.

He turned off from her quickly, and left the house. A few moments she stood, with a thoughtful face, her mind indrawn, and her whole manner completely changed. Then she went to her room, and commenced dressing to go out.

Two hours later, and we find her in a jewelry store on Broadway.

"Can I say a word to you?" She addressed herself to the owner of the store, who knew her very well.

"Certainly," he replied, and they move to the lower end of the long showcases.

Mrs. Whitman drew from her pocket a lady's watch and chain, and laying them on the show-case, said, at the same time holding out the bill she had taken from the envelope addressed to her husband:

"I cannot afford to wear this watch; my husband's circumstances are too limited. I tell you so frankly. It should never have been purchased; but a too-indulgent husband yielded to the importunities of a foolish young wife. I say this to take blame from him. Now, sir, meet the case, if you can do so in fairness to yourself. Take back the watch, and say how much I shall pay you besides."

The jeweler dropped his eyes to think. The case took him a little by surprise. He stood for nearly a minute; then taking the bill and watch, he said: "Wait a moment," and went to a desk near by.

"Will that do?" He had come forward again, and now presented her with the receipted bill. His face wore a pleased expression.

"How much shall I pay you?" asked Mrs. Whitman, drawing out her pocket-book.

"Nothing. The watch is not defaced."

"You have done a kind act, sir," said Mrs. Whitman, with feeling trembling along her voice. "I hope you will not think unfavorably of my husband. It's no fault of his that the bill has not been paid. Good morning, sir."

Mrs. Whitman drew her veil over her face, and went with light steps and a light heart from the store. The pleasure she had experienced on receiving her watch was not to be compared with that now felt in parting with it. From the jeweler's she went to the boot-maker's and paid the bill of twenty-five dollars; from thence to her milliner's, and settled for her last bonnet.

"I know you're dying to see my new dress," said Mrs. Whitman, gaily, as she drew her arm within that of her husband, on his appearance that evening. "Come along over to our bedroom, and let me show it. Come along? Don't hang back, Charles, as if you were afraid."

Charles Whitman went with his wife passively, looking more like a man on his way to receive sentence, than in expectation of a pleasant sight. His thoughts were bitter.

"Shall my Ada become lost to me?" he said in his heart—"lost to me in a world of folly, fashion and extravagance?"

"Sit down, Charles." She led him to a large, cushioned chair. Her manner had undergone a change. The brightness of her countenance had departed. She took something, in a hurried way, from a drawer, and catching up a foot-stool, placed it on the floor near him, and looked tenderly and lovingly into his face. Then she handed him the jeweler's bill.

"It is receipted, you see." Her voice fluttered a little.

"Ada! how is this? What does it mean?" He flushed and grew eager.

"I returned the watch, and Mr. R— receipted the bill. I would have paid for damage, but he said it was uninjured and asked nothing."

"Oh, Ada!"

"And this is receipted also; and this;" handing him the other bills which she had paid. "And now, dear," she added, quickly, how do you like my dress? Isn't it beautiful?"

We leave the explanations and scene that followed to the reader's imagination. If any fair lady, however, who, like Ada, has been drawing too heavily upon her husband's slender income, for silks and jewels, is at a loss to realize the scene, let her try Ada's experiment. Our word for it, she will find a new and glad experience in life. Costly silks and jewels may be very pleasant things, but they are too dearly bought when they come at the price of a husband's embarrassment, mental disquietude, or alienation. Too often the gay young wife wears them as the sign of these unhappy conditions. Tranquil hearts and sunny homes are too precious to be burdened and clouded by weak vanity and love of show. Keep this in mind, oh ye fair ones, who have husbands in moderate circumstances. Do not let your pride and pleasure oppress them. Rich clothing, costly laces and gems, are poor substitutes for smiling peace and hearts overshadowed by care. Take the lesson and live by it, rather than offer another illustration, in your own experience, of the folly we have been trying to expose and rebuke.

LOOKING FOR LARGE PROFITS.—I hear you've had a windfall, Uncle Rastus.

Uncle Rastus—Yes, sah, my ole marster died de odder day an' lef' me fo' hundred dollahs.

Gentleman—I suppose you will open a small store of some kind with the money?

Uncle Rastus—No sah, I specs I'll open a offis.

Gentleman—Real estate office?

Uncle Rastus—No sah, a larwer's offis. I know several lawyers an' dey all 'pears to be doin' ver' well. Dere's mo' money in offis's, Mistah Smif, den dey is in sto's.

Miss Clara—"It distresses me greatly to cause you pain, Mr. Worcestershire, but I love another."

Mr. Worchestershire—"Ah, me!"

Miss Clara—"I have always supposed that you were interested in Ethel Simpson, Mr. Worchestershire; she is a noble girl."

Worchestershire—"Ah, yes, Miss Clara, but I had the same luck with her that I have had with you."

TAKING EVERY CHANCE.—Old Lady (to Harlem boy)—Is the game of ball over, sonny?

Sonny—No'm; it's only in de fif' innin'. De Goatwillians are over de fence changin' der clothes fer ter kill er hoodoo. It's gittin' wery late in de season, ma'am, an' ev'ry game frum now on is goin' ter be played fer blood.—New York Sun.

"Could you give me a bite to-day, ma'am?" asked a sturdy tramp, accosting the lady of the house, while she was shoveling off the snow.

"No; but I'vegot a dog in the yard that can. Come Tige."

"Thank you, ma'am, but I ain't so hungry as all that," and he fled.—Courier.

A Year Ago.

Just a little year ago
 You were all to me;
Even yet I scarcely know
 How such things can be.

Did you mean it all the time?
 Were you false or true?
Is it change of place or time
 That has altered you?

Do you think to love me still?
 Did your fancy stray?
Did you change against your will
 When you went away?

Do you still remember this,
 Many miles apart?
Ah! you left your careless kiss
 Printed on my heart.

Little did my soul divine
 That the year would see
Your dear heart, close knit to mine,
 Drift away from me.

Yet I dream you brave and true;
 Through the mists of pain
Still I stretch my hands to you
 Till we meet again.

Just a year ago!
 Ah! my eyes are wet!
Cruel love! do you not know
 I can ne'er forget?

LEMON JUICE AS A CURE FOR SMALL-POX.

Dr. James Moore, a surgeon of Ironton, Ohio, who has lately been suffering from small-pox, accidentally hit upon a simple remedy which in his case, at least, acted with marvelous celerity. This is the way the doctor tells the story: My nurse had retired and was sound asleep in bed behind me. My feet were so tender that I dare not let them touch the foot-board of the bed. My head I could not suffer to lie upon the pillow. I lay raised up on my elbow, my neck resting upon my hand. I had by this time become so nervous I dare not shut my eyes from fear of seeing unpleasant visions. Pulse about 90. I had upon the table at the bedside a pitcher of water and a drinking glass, a box of sedlitz powders, and one ounce of chlorate of potash in crystals. I had also at my bedside a paper of lemons and also one of oranges. These were all the agents within my reach.

I recollected that lemon juice in sufficient quantity was a sedative and would lower the heart's action, and by so doing might relieve me of those unpleasant visions. I therefore squeezed all the juice I possibly could out of one of the lemons into the glass, to which I added about two tablespoonfuls of water, and drank it. I then opened the rind and sucked the balance of the juice. In about twenty minutes I took another lemon, and used it in the same manner. In a short time I felt very cold, as if I were lying in proximity to a large mass of ice. My pulse had dropped to 60. I shut my eyes to see if the unpleasant visions were gone, but by placing my hand upon my head I found that the pox on my head had gone also. My head was bathed with gumous-like fluid, which had exuded from the pox. It stained the napkin I had applied to wipe it off. It seemed as if each had given up its contents, and wilted down to a level with the surface. The same had taken place with those upon my face. My beard was glued together with the same kind of fluid. Those upon my neck had not bursted, but had shrunk away and diminished in size considerably. I laid down and slept two hours comfortably. I awoke, I presume from cold, although I had plenty of cover upon me and the fire was still burning in the grate. I felt so well pleased that I took a little more lemon juice. I kept my pulse at from 60 to 67 for thirty-six hours, when all eruptions had disappeared from my skin. I then bid good-bye to the lemon juice and small-pox.

So strongly am I convinced of the power of lemon juice to abort any and every case of small-pox, if administered as I administered it to myself, that I look upon it as a specific of as much certainty and power in small-pox as quinine is in intermittent fever. I therefore publish my experiment, hoping every physician having a case of small-pox will give it a fair trial and report the result to me.

She (blushingly)—"Why do you say my teeth are like pearls?"

He (gallantly)—"Because they are. I can't compare them with anything else."

She (smiling)—"You are a flatterer, I am afraid, George."

He (gravely)—"Flatterer? No; I only speak the plain and simple truth."

She—"And are they really like pearls?"

He (emphatically)—"They are."

She (with an arched glance)—"Do you know what your reference to pearls reminds me of, George?"

He—"I can't say. What does it remind you of?"

She—"Oysters."—Boston Courier.

"I'm afraid that calico will fade," she observed, as she looked at it in a doubtful way.

"Oh, no, ma'am."

"Ever tried it?"

"Yes'm. A woman who had a dress of this pattern fell into the river and her body was not fished out for a week. The color hadn't started in the least, I assure you."—Detroit Free Press.

Dresses for girls over ten years of age are made with basques, which close under an elaborately braided, military-looking revers. The skirts may be plain, or draped precisely like the draperies of ladies' dresses, and furnished with steels.

Black furs will be most used for trimming winter cloaks, especially Persian lamb. In light furs the soft, fluffy, shaped gray fur introduced last year, and known by the name of mouflon, takes the lead, Borders of thick black or brown bear fur are also popular.

FASHION NOTES.

Many of the most dressy warps are still made of three materials.

Very large collars are a conspicuous feature of the winter wraps.

Dresses for little girls under six should reach to the top of the shoes.

But few of the corsages of the present season show a visible fastening.

Puffed sleeves in Queen Mary style are a feature of the new tea gowns.

Chatelaine watches with peculiar etched designs are the fancy of the hour.

Œil moiré, or eye-potted moire, is the newest variation of a popular fabric.

The newest umbrella handles are of oxidized silver in the form of a ram's horn.

Very dressy tea gowns are made to imitate the graceful, flowing costumes worn by East Indian princesses.

Handsome cloth costumes are made with a Directoire redingote of one color opening over a skirt of another.

It is notable that garnitures upon the present season's costumes are either very elaborate or entirely omitted.

Dressy bodices for very young ladies are laced or buttoned at the back, the fronts being elaborately trimmed.

Some of the newest cloth jackets have their fronts in long tabs, square or pointed, giving the effect of a mantle front.

Quaint sleeves, antique bodices, and unique draperies are the salient features of the newly-imported French gown.

The highest novelty in silk goods is the Persian cashmere silk with an imitation astrakhan border, which is also of silk.

An odd hairpin, which may be appropriately worn at the present season, has a chestnut burr of burnished gold for the head.

Cord passementeries are the accepted garnitures for black matelasse cloaks, with knotted cords in loops for epaulettes and fringes.

Black woolens with fancy borders are considered very stylish. The body fabric is in fancy satin chevron weaves or featherbone stripes.

Bourette woollens are popular for traveling costumes. These are shown in self-colors, and also with stripes or figures of a contrasting color.

Feather-stitched tucks and plaits are the favorite decoration for cashmere dresses for little girls. The stitching is usually in a contrasting color or white.

Gretchen cloaks for little girls and Newmarkets for misses will be the rule the coming winter. Plush, astrakhan, and beaver are the materials promised.

Leaves in conventionally arranged designs are the favorite designs in the new brocades, and every possible leaf shape, from the locust to the lotos, is seen.

The Killarney cloak, made of dove-gray silk serge, with silk-embroidered collar and clasps of oxidized silver, is said to be the favorite traveling cloak abroad.

Epaulettes still appear upon promenade and dressy costumes. It is possible, however, to trim the shoulders of dresses so elaborately as to be really disfiguring.

Many of the gold and silver gimps now so popular are apt to tarnish after a little wear. The new basket-patterned galloons are said to be more durable, but the prices are prohibitive.

Many of the winter cloaks combine two materials in their manufacture, such as cloth for the body of the garment, and velvet or plush for the large sleeves and down the fronts.

Girls from six to ten years of age wear single-piece dresses, entirely without drapery. These are trimmed with black braided passementerie, and with fancy jacket in Spanish style.

Dainty little caps of embroidered silk are taking the place of the lawn caps worn by the babies during the summer. Wide strings of hemmed and embroidered surah replace those of lawn.

Pinking is used to a considerable extent upon silk costumes. The pinked-out froufrous, or panels of flouncing or ruching, set in at the sides of skirts, are very popular, and also very dressy in effect.

French modistes are making an effort to restore the fashion of extreme flatness at the back of the dress. This is quite as ridiculous as the opposite extereme, and American ladies will be slow to adopt it.

Dresses in Gretchen style are favored for the smallest girls. These have a full gathered or plaited skirt and short waist, the latter laid in fine tucks or trimmed with a V-shaped piece of velvet to match.

Turn-over collars are seen on most of the new coats. As these are attached to a straight collar, they may easily be added to a last year's garment by using velvet, fur or braided cloth of a contrasting shade.

Toques made of cloth matching the dress or wrap are worn by misses this season. This toque has a rim like a Tam o' Shanter, the soft crown being pulled forward to the left in a manner which is generally becoming.

Cashmeres, light-weight serges, and flannels are chosen material for school and street frocks for little girls and misses. Havana browns, moss green, terra-cotta, strawberry, deep red, garnet, and navy blue are the favorite colors.

A stylish coat now very popular is in plain, close-fitting jacket-shape, and is made of black sicilenne, or dark green or black velvet, opening over a vest of white corded silk when of black, or of ecru ottoman when of green.

The most elegant winter cloaks are very long, and are made of the new cloths, matelasse, velvet, or plush. The designs are very graceful, the principal features being clinging backs, easy-fitting fronts and long, flowing sleeves.

Among the numerous shades of gray which are being continually brought out we recognize the old-time zinc gray. This is a most popular shade, notwithstanding it is exceedingly trying, only the fairest of women looking even passable in it.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 2, 1888.

DON'T forget to vote next Tuesday.

HARRISON AND MORTON will be elected next week,—at least, we hope so.

THURSDAY, November 29, has been designated as Thanksgiving Day by President Cleveland.

THE United States supreme court decide that a state tax on commercial travelers from another state is unconstitutional.

NOVEMBER came in yesterday in a remarkably lamb-like manner, giving us an Indian-summer day of rare beauty. May many more follow.

PLEASANT weather will be worth thousands of votes to the Republicans next Tuesday. Let all pray for it, though none should stay away from the polls if it does happen to storm.

SPRINGFIELD had a big Republican parade Wednesday evening, with over 2300 men in line, and the torches, fire-works and illuminations made a very brilliant and attractive spectacle.

H. C. JOYNER of Great Barrington, a leading lawyer, prominent politician and a lifelong Democrat, has caused a sensation in Berkshire county by coming out for Harrison and Morton.

MR. POWDERLY declares himself a protectionist, and so much of one that he will not use an article made abroad. He says he is neutral in this campaign, and intends to remain so until election day.

THERE is quite a Republican revolt against the candidacy of Councilor Elijah A. Morse for Congress in the second district, now represented by ex-Gov. Long, and if half the stories about his use of money to secure the nomination and votes are true he ought to be overwhelmingly defeated.

REMEMBER that the next Legislature will decide the question of submitting a prohibitory constitutional amendment to the people. Every Democrat will vote against it, while nearly every Republican will vote for it. Prohibitionists who vote for a third candidate under these circumstances are certainly helping to put off the day when the people can vote on the question.

THE great parade of Cleveland business men, which the president went to New York to review last Saturday, wasn't such a phenomenal success as had been predicted. The weather was nasty to begin with, and instead of the 60,000 men talked of there were less than 15,000 in line. But they "whooped 'er up" for all they were worth, and the president appeared satisfied.

JAMES KIRKHAM of Springfield having declined the Democratic nomination for senator, Ethan C. Robinson of that city has been selected to fill the gap. The Republicans of the district ought to see to it that Col. Metcalf is elected by a good rousing majority. He will be an honor to the office, and is a man for whom every respectable and patriotic man can vote with pleasure and satisfaction.

SPEAKER NOYES failed of a renomination in the caucus in ward 14, Boston, Wednesday evening, by a large vote. This means a new occupant of the speaker's chair, of course, and it is understood that Theodore C. Bates of North Brookfield, who has accepted a nomination as representative, will be a candidate for the position. Mr. Bates has done good service in both branches of the Legislature, and his candidacy for the speakership would be received with considerable favor.

REV. HUGH MONTGOMERY, who has been sounding candidates and prominent men right and left as to their views on temperance matters, gets this solid chunk of sense from Rev. Dr. Steele of Wilbraham Academy, who says he expects to vote the Republican ticket, state and national, for the most part, and adds:—

> I know of nothing so harmful to the cause of prohibition and so apt to give the impression of hypocrisy concerning its supporters, as sticking to the third party candidate when one of the two leading party candidates is a pronounced prohibitionist, and the other is a liquor man, and the latter is likely to be elected because the temperance vote is divided.

THAT euphonious ticket, Lockwood and Love, is shattered by the withdrawal of Mr. Love, who finds that as a man of peace, and president of the American branch of the Universal Peace Union, he could not hold office under a constitution which recognizes war and bloodshed. It is extremely fortunate that he discovered this before it was too late, for it would have been embarrassing, you know, for him to have been elected next week and then plunge the country into distress by refusing to serve.

LORD SACKVILLE, the British minister to this country, has put himself in a box by allowing himself to advise an inquirer how to vote in the coming election. One Charles F. Murchison of Pomona, Cal., a voter of British descent, asked the minister's advice as to which party would be likely to be most friendly to England, and the minister answered, practically recommending him to vote for President Cleveland. The correspondence of course got into print, and has made quite a rumpus. It was evident that the president must take prompt action to avert the danger to his reëlection sure to follow such a recommendation of his friendship for English interests, and consequently Lord Sackville was notified Tuesday that his continuance in his present official position was no longer acceptable to this government. The Democrats charge that the letter was not from an honest inquirer, but was simply a trick of the wicked Republicans. This may or may not be so, but if so the British minister was trapped with surprising ease. At any rate, he undoubtedly expressed his honest convictions.

Dr. McGlynn told his audience Sunday that he would very much like to be back in the church again, but he never would go back on the old conditions.

The grand jury at Provo, Utah, has been discharged after finding over 200 indictments against polygamists.

LOCAL NOTICES.

Elegant white grapes at Sears & Cook's.

Wanted, a few bushels of butternuts. Inquire at JOURNAL office.

Machine needles, oils, belts and sewing machine supplies for sale at F. M. Eager's.

Sears & Cook have some fine Edam and pineapple cheeses. Delicious. Try them.

A. E. Park's Old Crockery Store is literally running over with new lamps, staple and fancy crockery, and everything in his line.

Attention, registered voters, and everybody else. The fall campaign has fully opened at Milligan's shoe store, and if you want to see a well selected stock of boots, shoes and rubbers, call around either before or after election, as the result of that or the question of tariff will not affect in any way Milligan's low prices for boots and shoes.

PALMER AND VICINITY.

To-morrow is civil entry day at the district court.

The residences of Walter Winter and Austin J. Hawkes have been brightened by the painters.

"Prisoners' Sunday" was observed in an appropriate manner at the Second Congregational church.

The Ladies' Society of St. Paul's Universalist church held a social at the parlors Wednesday evening.

The prosecuting committee was seen on the streets of the village Tuesday, evidently "looking for blood."

The children of the Second Congregational church will hold their annual harvest concert Sunday evening.

W. H. Hitchcock has secured the contract for heating the old high school building, and will put in two Economy combination heaters.

L. E. Ferry will sell five horses, a number of carriages, sleighs, robes, etc., at auction on Park street, near the engine house, next Thursday at 11 a. m.

The trains leaving Palmer at 11.45 a. m. and Thorndike at 1.15 p. m., will stop at the town house next Tuesday for the accommodation of voters.

A match game of pool, between C. W. Handy and an unknown amateur, will be played next week at the Nassowanno House billiard hall for a purse of $10.

It now turns out that the colt belonging to Charles Upham, which he thought had been stolen from the pasture, got cast in the field and died of starvation.

H. C. Strong made a campaign speech at Thorndike last night, and will speak at New Britain, Conn., to-morrow, and at Dalton, Mass., next Monday evening.

The selectmen will hold their regular monthly meeting, for the transaction of routine business, at the office of Chairman Holden in this village Monday afternoon.

The pool tournament, which begins Monday morning in the Brunswick Billiard Parlors, will be open to all amateurs residing in the towns of Palmer, Monson, Ware and Warren.

Deputy Sheriff Putnam of Warren thinks he has obtained a clue which will lead to the arrest and conviction of the parties who recently burglarized the stores on Central street.

The Daughters of Rebekah, together with the members of Palmer Lodge, I. O. O. F., were entertained at the residence of R. J. Henry, on Thorndike street, Wednesday evening.

Mrs. Dwight Moon was taken suddenly ill last Saturday night while on her way homeward after doing some errands about the village, and died the following morning of apoplexy.

Mass was celebrated at St. Thomas's Catholic church yesterday at 8 a. m., in recognition of "All Saint's Day." "All Soul's Day" has also been appropriately observed to-day.

Section Master R. A. McQuaid has received a prize of $150 from the Boston & Albany Railroad Company, for the high grade of excellence maintained on his section the past year.

Arrangements have already been made whereby the election returns will be received at the Western Union and United Lines telegraph offices, and also at the telephone exchange, next Tuesday evening.

A large number of Palmer people attended the rally at Springfield Wednesday evening, going in by special train. Upon the return trip a fight occurred upon the platform of the station between out-of-town parties.

The funeral of Mrs. Polly Taft, who died of typhoid fever at her late residence on Pine street Wednesday afternoon, was held at 2 o'clock this afternoon. The deceased was 75 years of age, and leaves two daughters and one son.

The new guide-boards at the junction of the different roads in town are now in position, the work having been finished last week. The new street signs for the different villages of the town will also be in position by next Wednesday.

An unknown team was found by the roadside near Shearer's corner Monday night, without an occupant or claimant. The vehicle was somewhat smashed, while the animal, which was found to be all right, was properly cared for.

About 275 feet of sewer is being laid on Pleasant street, between Church and Central streets. Four licenses have been granted to enter this sewer, and the license fees pay the cost of construction, thus making no outlay for the town.

An elocutionary and literary entertainment will be given at the Baptist church next Wednesday evening under the auspices of the Auxiliary Workers. Miss E. Bertha Cheney will read, and Palmer M. Taylor of Springfield will have the direction of the musical features.

A meeting to make the preliminary arrangements for the proposed annual hunt will be held in the district court room next Monday evening at 7.30. All who are interested in the sport, however, are requested to be present and take an active part in the meeting.

St. Thomas' Catholic church will be rededicated Christmas, when a fine programme will probably be carried out. The inclement weather has greatly hindered work upon the structure, although the carpenters expect to complete their labors there some time the latter part of this month.

Registration closed Wednesday night, and at the evening session at the court room the board was kept quite busy in attending to the wants of voters. Altogether about 125 new names have been added since registration began, which is a much better showing than was made last year.

Palmer Steamer Company No. 1 elected the following officers Wednesday evening: Foreman, W. A. Weld; first assistant foreman, M. J. Dawson; second assistant foreman, H. T. Huntington; clerk and treasurer, Wallace Shaw; standing committee, F. N. Aiken, John Lyman and J. T. Donovan.

The room in Strong's block, recently occupied by Conner's barber shop, has been leased by A. E. Ayer & Company of Boston, stock brokers, who will have direct communication with the New York Stock Exchange. The new office will be in charge of A. L. Edgecomb of Boston. The barber shop has been removed to the room on Main street, recently occupied by the Diamond Candy store.

The funeral of Mrs. William Gates, who died of consumption Saturday at the age of 49, was held at her late residence on Park street Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock, Rev. F. W. Betts of St. Paul's Universalist church conducting the service. The deceased had long been a sufferer, and was well known in this community for her hospitality and kindness. Her remains were conveyed to Barre the following day for interment.

Now that the base ball season has ended the property of the Palmer Base Ball Association should be cared for, in order that it may be in condition for use when another season arrives, and all who now have any of the club's paraphernalia, or can furnish any information concerning the same, will confer a favor by leaving such at the office of D. F. Holden, where it will be stored and properly cared for. Five uniforms have been returned, but there are five others missing, and every one of them should be returned immediately, as they are the property of a number of contributors to the base ball fund, and no individual can claim them.

State Primary School Notes.

The teachers will have a week's vacation, commencing to-morrow.

Wm. Ayles, a faithful employe who has had charge of the stock in the barn for 20 years, has recently died.

A. W. Mansur, first supervisor, has resigned, and E. G. Ward, a former teacher in the schools at Three Rivers, takes his place. Mrs. Ward also takes the position of assistant matron.

Mr. Barnes, the farmer at the school, has returned to Petersham, and is succeeded by Charles Allen from Connecticut. Mr. Blenus, also employed on the farm, has also left, and Mr. Casey of Brimfield takes his place.

The state primary school received an addition of five from Great Barrington Wednesday, children of the family which Agent Anderson, of the long named society, found in a much worse condition than an abused horse that he went to look after. Another lot of 17 was received from Tewksbury yesterday.

The Prohibitory Convention.

The third party delegates assembled at the district court room last Saturday afternoon and held a quiet convention. The assembly organized by choosing Charles F. Gegenheimer of Three Rivers chairman and John S. Henry of Ludlow secretary. After a committee had been appointed to collect and examine the credentials, it was reported that there were only fifteen delegates in attendance, Palmer having 7, Ludlow 4, Brimfield 4, Holland 0. An informal ballot was then taken, and resulted as follows:

|---|---|
| O. A. Parent, Bondsville | 11. |
| W. W. Leach, Palmer | 3. |
| H. Lawrence, Palmer | 1. |

E. J. Wood then moved that the informal ballot be declared formal, which was done, after which the nominee thanked the convention for the nomination, and stated briefly his political views, believing it "always advisable to vote for the man of principle, whether he be a Republican, Democrat or Prohibitionist, than to vote for the interests of a party." James D. Brown of Brimfield moved that the chairman of the different town committees constitute the district committee for the ensuing year, and the motion was carried.

Personal.

D. W. Taft of Boston is home on a visit.

A. E. Barlow of Holyoke was in town over Sunday.

Dr. Marshall, who is at the Nassowanno House, will remain until Nov. 8.

W. B. Ham and wife have returned from an extended trip to New Hampshire.

Miss Effie Shaw returned Wednesday, after a four-months visit in the West.

Frank L. Eager and wife of Meriden, Ct., were in town visiting relatives over Sunday.

Miss L. Belle Baker is now employed in the salesroom of Cobb's bakery on Church street.

Dr. G. H. Wilkins was called to New Hampshire by the sudden death of his sister this week.

D. H. Splain, night clerk at the Nassowanno House, has discontinued his duties there and returned to North Brookfield.

Misses Annie and Effie Shaw gave a very pleasant Hallowe'en party to a number of young people at their home Wednesday evening.

W. W. Leach, the Republican candidate for representative in the 10th Hampden district, addressed a rally of Republicans at Ludlow Tuesday evening.

Hon. Henry W. Ely of Westfield, Democratic candidate for congress in the 12th district, was the guest of H. C. Strong at the Nassowanno House Monday night.

Landlord Haradon of the Nassowanno House, who intends to have some notable "spreads" during the coming winter, has secured E. A. Wallace of Bacon's Oyster House, Boston, in view of that fact.

The Democratic Convention.

The Democrats of the 10th Hampden representative district held their convention at the court room here Monday afternoon, and the business was practically the same as that transacted one year ago by nearly the same body of delegates. Chairman Moran of the district committee read the call, H. E. Huntley of this place was chosen chairman and John Shanly of Brimfield secretary. Michael J. Dillon of Palmer and Samuel W. Brown of Brimfield were appointed a committee to collect and examine the credentials, and they reported thirteen delegates present, Palmer being represented by 6, while Ludlow had 2, Brimfield 4 and Holland 1. An informal ballot was taken on motion of M. J. Dillon, with the following result:

|---|---|
| S. W. Brown, Brimfield | 9 |
| J. W. Hannum, Ludlow | 2 |
| H. H. Sanders, Palmer | 1 |
| A. C. Grove, Ludlow | 1 |

It was stated that Dr. J. W. Hannum would not accept the nomination of the convention if tendered him, and the informal ballot was made formal, and Mr. Brown declared the unanimous choice of the convention. The nominee arose and said that he was aware of the fact that it is an impossibility to elect a Democratic representative to the general court with the votes of his own party, still, he declared it his duty to be the candidate of his party if it desired his service in that capacity, and said in conclusion that he had been whipped from boyhood up, and had become used to it, so that his defeat on the 6th day of November next would not seem so hard. The convention adjourned after appointing a district committee and hearing addresses from H. C. Strong of Palmer, A. C. Grove and W. S. Alden of Ludlow.

BRIMFIELD.

The farm of Moses H. Baker will be sold at auction to-morrow at 11 o'clock a. m.

WALES.

Sixteen new names added to the voters' list this year, 13 Republicans and 3 Democrats.

Hon. C. R. Ladd of Boston and Col S. C. Warriner of Springfield will speak at a Republican rally this evening at the Baptist vestry.

H. A. McFarland has purchased from the stock farm of W. Andrews in Connecticut the registered Devon bull, "Blaine." He has taken several premiums at the fairs.

THREE RIVERS.

Miss Grace Weiser, an evangelist of York, Pa., who has been holding meetings in the Methodist church for the past two weeks, closed her engagement here last evening. During her stay she has every reason to feel proud over the good work she has accomplished, and it is with great regret she had to close her engagement here so soon. The revival services will be continued this week and possibly longer.

The crystal wedding of Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Lull occurred Tuesday evening, for the success of which thanks are due to Mrs. Oliver Bliss, Mrs. Justin G. Carew and Miss Hannah Bliss. Two of the most elegant easy chairs to be found were presented by M. Bradway in the name of the company. Several pieces of crystal ware were among the presents, as well as an elaborate paper holder. The usual collation, games and social chat were enjoyed by the sixty or more guests.

Hon. David A. Wells, in his speech at Tremont Temple, Boston, Tuesday evening, had this to say about Monson's bankrupt straw firm:

> One of the largest firms manufacturing straw goods in Western Massachusetts, Hodges, Hersey & Co., of Monson, Mass., and New York, went before the tariff commission in 1882, and stated that if the duties on the import of the raw materials that entered into their manufacture continued to be levied, and they were compelled to depend for their trade on an overcrowded home market, they would be unable to continue manfacturing; but if they could be relieved from unnecessary and burdensome taxes, or even have the duties reduced from 30 to 10 per cent, they would excel all other nations in the quality, style and cheapness of their finished goods, and greatly extend their markets and give employment to a greatly increased number of operatives. But New England and New York senators and representatives were too busy to occupy themselves with such a small matter. The firm got no relief, with a surplus of $125,000,000 that very year in the national treasury, and two years subsequently they failed and closed the doors of their large manufactory. Subsequently the firm reorganized and resumed business; but this year they have again suspended, and will probably never again renew manufacturing operations.

Academy News.

Mrs. Pease of Somers, mother of the preceptress, Miss Pease, visited the academy last week.

The question for debate in the Linophilian society this evening is "Resolved that Monson Academy should support a school paper."

A goodly number of students and former students attended the sociable held at the academy Friday evening. The time was passed in the usual pleasant manner, and was thoroughly enjoyed by all. Hereafter sociables will be held more frequently and close at earlier hours.

The Republicans Nominate L. J. Potter for Representative.

The ninth Hampden representative convention at the town hall, last Friday afternoon, was without incident. Chairman T. F. Cortiss of the district committee opened the meeting by reading the call, and Dr. George T. Ballard of Hampden was chosen chairman and H. A. McFarland of Wales clerk. A committee was then appointed to collect and examine credentials, which reported the whole number of delegates as 23, Monson being represented by 8, Wales 3, Longmeadow 4, Hampden 3, and Wilbraham 5. James Bliss of Longmeadow presented the name of Lurin J. Potter for representative, and he was unanimously nominated. The following town committee was then chosen: Monson, C. M. Gage; Wilbraham, Dr. S. Foskett; Longmeadow, T. F. Cortiss; Hampden, Dr. George T. Ballard; Wales, H. A. McFarland.

The Late Mrs. Samantha White.

Editor of the Journal:—The death of Mrs. Samantha Walker White deserves more than a passing notice, and I ask a place for it in the JOURNAL in behalf of the friends. She was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Deacon Anson Walker of Brimfield, and was born in Chicopee in 1832. In her childhood she was remarkable for her love of learning and doing something useful rather than play. Her parents removed from Chicopee to Hartford, where she received a good English education and graduated at the high school with much praise. The principal discovered that she was developing the elements of a teacher, and gave her a trial by letting her bear the recitations of some of the classes. At the age of fifteen years, having pious parents, she became interested in religion and joined the Baptist church, in harmony with the faith of her parents. Subsequently her parents removed to Brimfield and attended the Baptist church in Wales, till the church in Palmer was established, which she and her parents joined, and her father became one of the deacons. She became a district school teacher and was sought after as far as her good qualifications and reputation were known. She was an able and zealous teacher in the Sunday-school, and had the love of all she taught in such schools as well as in the districts. She felt her responsibility and was a fruitful worker in her profession as a Christian and teacher. She engaged at one time to teach a common school in the south part of the village of Monson, where a love union was contracted and a subsequent marriage to Erastus B. White. The best qualities of a true woman and wife shone out in her conjugal life, in making herself a blessing to her husband, and conducting all her domestic affairs so that her home should be a happy one and the most attractive spot to herself and husband. In this she well succeeded, and became a model wife, and was beloved by her husband and all who knew her. Her funeral was largely attended, and fitting words were spoken by her pastor and the Methodist minister of Monson in eulogy of her Christian character.

The Democratic Rally.

The Democratic rally at the town hall Monday evening was largely attended. Previous to the rally there was a parade by about fifty of the Old Roman Battalion of Palmer, headed by the Bondsville brass band. One business block and one residence were illuminated for the occasion. At the hall some of the prominent Democrats of the place occupied seats on the stage with the speakers, among them being Michael O'Brien, David Maney, F. D. Beach and Nelson A. Bugbee, chairman of the Democratic town committee, who introduced as the first speaker Homer C. Strong of Palmer. He was followed by James B. Carroll of Springfield, who spoke for over an hour, his principal theme being the tariff. Henry W. Ely of Westfield, the Democratic candidate for congress, was, the next speaker. Mr. Ely made a capital speech from his party's standpoint, and kept the audience in close attention for three-quarters of an hour. He occupied most of his time in reviewing the tariff, and said the object of the tariff was to raise the price of domestic goods and tried to show how, if the tariff were cut down, it would reduce the price of domestic goods and the necessaries of life. Mr. Ely said the benefit the Republican party claimed was derived from the tariff was higher wages for the laboring man. He said labor was governed by the demand and supply, and endeavored to show that the passage of the Mills bill would not lower the wages. He ventured to say, "There is not a Republican in this audience who knows thoroughly what the tariff means." He said the Republicans to win their case must prove that the best wages are paid in the protected industries. He claimed that only capitalists and those who owned mills were protected, and that seven-tenths in this country were absolutely without protection. He said to the woolen manufacturers, "The market of the world is open to you; why don't you put your goods into other countries? The reason is you can't compete with other countries because the price of wool is not fixed in this country." In closing he eulogized President Cleveland, and the meeting broke up with cheers for Ely and the national ticket.

WARE AND VICINITY.

The Ware Drum Corps was out for practice last evening.

The street sprinkler was out Thursday for the first time, it is said, for over a month.

The M. E. V. society held a pleasant sociable at the Methodist vestry last Monday evening.

A lot of personal property is to be sold at auction at the Daniel S. Collins place next Wednesday.

The electric light plant has commenced running mornings, beginning at 5 o'clock this morning.

John F. Robinson is refitting his store with shelf-drawers, to hold builders' hardware and tools.

Rev. G. F. Eaton, D. D., of Springfield, will preach at the Methodist church next Sunday at 10.30 a. m.

W. V. Howard is painting the East Congregational church a deep straw color. The vane has been replaced.

One hundred and fifty-five tickets sold at Ware for Springfield Wednesday evening, to the Republican rally there.

Quite a number from Ware attended the the fellowship meeting of Congregational churches at Warren Tuesday.

A movement is being made toward holding a series of religious meetings in the town hall on Sunday evenings.

Another freight engine has been put on the Central Massachusetts railroad, to meet the demand made by the increasing freight business.

John Eddy, in the town of Woodland, Maine, a former resident of Ware, raised 1750 bushels of potatoes this year from 6¾ acres of land.

F. Bombard will arrive Friday or Saturday of this week with a car-load of horses. This will be the twelfth car-load brought to Ware by him this year.

The electric lights were out three nights during the past week, and it made one think of the old proverb "We never miss the water till the well runs dry."

The Hardwick Republican Club will hold a grand rally at Union Hall, Gilbertville, this evening, with B. W. Potter and A. M. Taft of Worcester for speakers.

Geo. G. Morse of this place and Emma G. Blackwood of Arlington Heights were united in marriage at the latter place yesterday. They will reside in Ware.

The Hampshire Gazette intimates that Henry Bassett will no doubt vote for Cleveland. When interviewed he says "Not till I am grayer than I am now.

Philip L. Keefe of Ware received the nomination of the fifth Hampshire representative convention at Ware last Saturday, and will get lots of votes next Tuesday.

Charles Cregan, for several years in the counting room of the Otis Company, has taken a position in the office of the Thomson–Houston electric light company at Lynn.

Rev. E. S. Huntress of Ware Center will speak to young men next Sunday morning. Subject, "A question which you have asked yourself but never answered." Every one invited.

Services at the Unitarian church next Sunday morning at 10 30, preaching by Rev. B. W. Pennock from the text found in Matthew xx–20, subject: "The modern Zebedees." All are invited.

William Skinner of Holyoke, candidate for congressman, was in town Tuesday, and took dinner at the Hampshire House with Dr. D. M. Ryan, Dr. W. W. Miner, Postmaster Byrns and Eigin R. Foster.

Geo. E. Ballard had his hand severely cut while working at the electric light station a few days since. It is supposed it was done by a loose end on some part of the machine that was running at high speed.

The front window of Trench's ten-cent store was broken last Sunday night and a lot of pipes stolen. A stormy night and no electric light is probably the reason the thieves were not discovered by the police.

The sermon by A. E. P. Perkins, D. D., in memory of the late William Hyde, has been published with a photo-print of Mr. Hyde as a frontispiece, and a limited number of copies are for sale by C. W. Eddy, the printer.

The Ware Center Grange is expecting to increase its membership nearly one-third at the meeting to-night. The membership has been 34, and 13 new members are expected to be taken in, working the first and second degrees.

The Democrats are to hold a grand rally at the town hall next Monday evening, with William Cushing of Boston and F. H. Pope of the Boston Globe as speakers. It is not expected they will have any parade or demonstration outside the hall.

Station Agent Knox got left at Northampton on the night of the grand Republican rally, and started to walk home, but was overtaken by the first morning train from Northampton at Belchertown, walking the fifteen miles in about five hours.

C. H. Trench has leased a piece of land between the Unitarian church and F. P. Clark's store on Main street, and will build a business block 35 by 90 feet, two stories and a basement. The lower part will be stone and brick, and the upper part wood.

A committee of fifteen, composed of the officials and leading men of Winchendon, were in Ware Tuesday to inspect our water works and electric light plant. Civil Engineer Fuller of Boston, who superintended the putting in of the water works here, was with them.

Miss Ella M. Bonney, a recent graduate of the Ware high school, daughter of Stephen C. Bonney, formerly of Ware, was married recently to Maj. M. H. Pride, a real estate agent at Mount Holly, N. C. The newly-married couple are expected north on their wedding tour.

There are now 956 names upon the list of voters. At the final meeting of the registrars Wednesday evening there were 52 names added to the list and 5 removed. It is expected by those who ought to know that the Republicans will carry the town by over 100 majority.

The Harrison and Morton battalion has had numerous invitations to attend rallies this week, including those from Boston and Holyoke, but have declined them all except the one at Springfield Wednesday evening, which they attended, accompanied by the Cadet Band, and report an enjoyable time.

Miss Hattie Brown, who has been employed at A. Bryson's the longest of any of his salesladies, is to return to her old position, and her many friends will welcome her back. Miss Smith, an experienced saleslady from Enfield, and Miss Florence Needham from Coldbrook Springs, also have positions here.

The ladies' society of the Unitarian church held a pleasant sociable at their vestry last Thursday evening; and also elected the following officers for the year: President, Miss J. M. Stevens; vice presidents, Mrs. E. D. Howard and Mrs. B. W. Pennock; secretary and treasurer, Miss Eliza Robinson: executive committee, Mrs. A. H. Cummings, Miss Julia Newland, Mrs. Jaquith, Mrs. Allen.

The controversy over which party should have the town hall for a rally the night before the election has caused considerable excitement and some hard feelings. The Cleveland and Thurman Club claim that in an open meeting sometime previous to Oct. 1st they voted to have a rally, and P. L. Keefe, chairman of the selectmen, being in the chair, told the club they could have it.

Harry Prendiville's Military Band has been engaged for the Democratic rally Monday night. This is a new band, and this their first appearance in public. Mr. Prendiville is well known as the founder, and for over four years leader, of the Cadet Band. With the appearance of the new band we hope to hear more saxophone solos, such as no one in this part of the country can give as can Mr. Prendiville.

Ordination at Gilbertville.

The council called to ordain Arthur Titcomb at Gilbertville Wednesday was organized by the choice of Rev. Joseph Gaylord as moderator and Rev. A. T. Perry as scribe. After the examination it was "Resolved, That this council heartily approves the examination of Mr. Arthur Titcomb, and that we cordially comply with the request in the letter missive to proceed to ordain him, at the same time expressing our regret that there is to be no installation, according to that which we regard as the wisest usage." At the exercises of ordination the following was the gramme:

A CARD.—I desire hereby to express m gratitude to all those, my neighbors and friends, who have so kindly assisted me during the time of my late trouble and bereavement. W. A. GATES.

Palmer, Mass., Nov. 1, 1888.

There is a fair worth seeing in New York at the American Institute building, on 3d and 63d St. When it is remembered that the present exhibition is the 57th given under the auspices of the Institute, it will be seen that the encouragement given to American enterprise and industry through this medium can hardly be overestimated. Since October 3d the fair has been open, and will be until December 15th. The departments are all in complete order, and there is no vacant space in the building. The exhibition comprises about everything in the way of novelty and importance in mechanics, art, food products, household goods and a variety of smaller exhibits, which show how labor can be saved and results accomplished under the new order of things, and how living is made easier. The admission is 25 cents, a small amount for so good a show, and the exhibitors, under certain regulations, have the privilege of selling and delivering goods in the building. The exhibits are arranged conveniently for inspection, and exhibitors are willing to explain them. A feature of the afternoon and evening is a concert by a fine band.

JOTTINGS FROM THE HUB.

From our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, Oct. 31, 1888.

It is the last week of the campaign, and politics takes more time and thought of the average man than any other thing, except the ever-recurring question of food and raiment, and, at this time of the year, taxes. The approach of election day finds more popular interest than was supposed a few weeks ago. In the cities of the state, except Boston, registration closed last Saturday night, and the reports from them show that more names have been put on the list this year than ever before. In Boston the increase is numbered by thousands, and in the other cities the gain has been substantial. Yet it has not been a campaign of nearly as much hurrah as some we can remember. The appeal has been to the sober mass of the people, and it will be as interesting for ourselves as for the lookers-on at our system of government to see how our constitution stands this new sort of strain which has been put upon it. Unless I am much mistaken, the returns will show that we believe in a policy which will be for the good of the whole nation, and which will tend to put us upon a solid basis of prosperity in accord with the laws of nature, which are as inflexible and immutable in the world of finance and business as they are in the world of material things.

State committee meetings have been held to-day by both Republicans and Democrats, and each of them finds, or says that it finds, much satisfaction from the reports which are brought in from the widely separated portions of the state. The sum of it doubtless is that each side will poll a large vote. On each side the regular managers are awake and are sending in their reports to the party headquarters, and that makes it seem as if people generally were awake to the gravity of the situation. On the part of the Republicans, Dr. Burden repeats to-day what he has said to me several times before, that they will carry eleven of the congressional districts, and Secretary Southworth adds as his joke that now they are doing all they can to elect "Pete" Morrison in the fourth. It should be said in explanation that the fourth is the district which the Republicans made strongly Democratic when they redistricted the state in 1882, and they have about as much hope of carrying it as they have of carrying Texas for Harrison. "Pete" is the Republican nominee, and the honor of standing was not furiously sought, for it is the emptiest of this year's honors.

If Dr. Burden were to admit that there is any anxiety about any congressional district it would be about the fifth, where Gen. Banks is running against Col. Higginson. But he says surely that they will pull Banks through, and the Republican managers give him information to that effect. Another district which he does not feel quite as sure of as he wishes he did is the third, where Treasurer Beard is running against John F. Andrew. Each side is making a very close and careful fight, and there is any amount of quiet work being done, besides the numerous rallies which each side is holding every night. The district is very small territorially, and could be set down in a corner of either the eleventh or twelfth without taking up any apparently of their expansive surface. But it is chock full of politics, and will fairly echo with eloquence from now till election. The Republicans profess to have no doubts about the seventh, ninth and tenth districts. Perhaps they are right about the tenth, but the seventh and ninth will have to be watched very carefully if they are to be kept in the Republican column and restored to it respectively.

No big rally will be held by the Republicans here just before the election, as is often the case, but they will have a grand torchlight parade on Monday night, and it is expected that some ten thousand torches will be in line. It was hoped to have Blaine here on one of the closing days of the campaign, but he is wanted more urgently elsewhere, and of course nobody thinks that there is any real need of getting him here. So the managers are willing to let him stay where it is believed by the national committee that he can do the most good.

Within twenty-four hours there has come to the surface what may prove to be an important element in state politics for the next few years. That is the nomination of Theodore C. Bates for the House of Representatives in our state Legislature by his representative district. With this statement is the other that he intends to be a candidate for speaker. This will bring him into rivalry with Speaker Noyes, and both of them are sharp politicians enough to have a wholesome respect for each other. Bates has the stronger will and the more force when it comes to a trial of political strength, but Noyes has the more delicate hand in politics, and he would be like Cardinal Richelieu in the famous play of Bulwer, who plays the fox when he finds that all other resources have failed him. It would be a hot fight, if both of them should be elected to the House, and each of them is a candidate. Noyes wants the speakership as a stepping-stone to the governorship next year, and what Bates wants it for perhaps he only knows at present. Senator Hoar will be up for reëlection next winter, and it will rest very much in Bates's hands to say whether or not he shall be given another term. Hoar was one of those who actively prevented Bates from getting the nomination for Congress two years ago, and it might suit him to defeat him. But it would probably be more to his purpose to help elect Hoar and put him under heavy obligations to him in his future political career, for with Bates in the Legislature, it will be certain that he will be a forceful figure and will have a hand in the senatorial fight, if there is to be one, and that he can defeat or elect Hoar, just as he chooses.

But little is said in the papers here, or in conversation, as far as I have observed, regarding the election of members of the Senate and House of Representatives, yet the prohibitory constitutional amendment will come up on its second stage, when it will be passed or will be kept from going to the people. The oleo bill will certainly make its appearance again; the Boston gas fight will occur on the petition of the Bay State Gas Company for leave to advance its capital to $5,000,000, for it does not propose to avail itself of its act last winter by which it can have a capital of $2,500,000. Then there will be other schemes of magnitude, all of which need sharp sense in the members not to be the tools of cunning men.

The business event of the week has been the putting into insolvency of the long-established business house of the Rand-Avery Company, as it had come to be called in its latest form, though it has been better known to the public as Rand, Avery & Co. It has been embarrassed for a long time, and it is within a short time that its former leading members have withdrawn from it, and it was, when it failed, in the hands of its new manager, Thomas Lawson, the inventor of a valuable machine, which he put into the concern. But the new management could not save it, and a committee of the creditors has recommended insolvency as the best way to close up the business.

New Magazines.

The Century has completed eighteen years of growing popularity. The November number, opening one of the new volumes, is noticeable in its new features, prominent among which is the first installment of the Century Gallery of Old Masters, engraved by T. Cole, and described by himself and W. J. Stillman. Mrs. Catherwood, a new author, takes the reader into Canada in its most romantic epoch in the opening chapters of "The Romance of Dollard," which will be completed in four numbers. Mr. Cable gives "The Young Aunt with White Hair," the beginning of a series of "Strange True Stories in Louisianna." There are also interesting installments in the life of Lincoln, and important papers on the Siberian exile system. Many other fine papers will be found, excellent illustrations and good poetry.

The first number in November Harper's is "The Lower St. Lawrence," which gives the reader quite an idea of the wild region of America. Then follows "A Museum of the History of Paris," by Theodore Child, who thoroughly knows Paris. Elk-Hunting in the Rocky Mountains" and "Boats on the Tagus" are well written and illustrated. The number brings the pleasant ending of the serials, "In the Far Lochaber" and "Annie Kilburn," and gives us one of the best of Miss Woolson's short stories, "The Pink Villa." "Our Journey to the Hebrides" is finished, and there is an abundance of interesting reading, both in prose and poetry.

November brings the opening number of the sixteenth volume of St. Nicholas with so many good things folks that only a few can be mentioned individually—let them read for themselves. Quite timely is the story of "Ann Mary's Two Thanksgiving Days," and "The Loaf of Peace" shows how small a thing will break or make a friendship. The British navy and its maneuvers during the Queen's jubilee are fully illustrated in "The Queen's Navy." There is also a practical paper on "Wood Carving," and an illustrated one on the "Western Meadow Lark."

Good Housekeeping for October 27 has many good things, as usual. "The Philosophy of Living" is closed and the reader will miss its excellent thought. Dr. J. W. French gives some wise exhortations on "How to Live to a Good Old Age;" there is a third paper on the "Story of a Household Lamp," and another on "Decorating One's Own China;" also "Every-day Desserts" timely for November. The award of prizes for the best remedy for household pests is announced in this number.

CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA.

Colonel Clark,

U. S. A., writes: For the last two years my health has been excellent. This, I think, is due to my using Sulphur Bitters, as formerly my health was miserable, owing to the frequent changes in climate, etc., so incident to a soldier's life.

The Father

Of all diseases is impure blood, when loaded with foul humor. How important then that the blood should be pure, rich and strong, without which there can be no health. To purify the blood Sulphur Bitters is incomparably the best medicine that it is possible to obtain.—THE EDITOR.

CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA.

I have been a sufferer from catarrh for the past eight years. Having tried a number of remedies advertised as "sure cures" without obtaining any relief, I had resolved never to take any other patent medicines, when a friend advised me to try Ely's Cream Balm. I did so with great reluctance, but can testify with pleasure that after using it for six weeks I believe myself cured. It is a most agreeable remedy—an invaluable balm.—JOSEPH STEWART, 224 Grand avenue, Brooklyn.

Mothers.

Remember that Castoria does not contain Morphine, Opium, or any other narcotic substance, in any quantity, shape or form. It is entirely vegetable, pleasant to take, positively effective, and perfectly harmless. It is not a secret remedy; the formula is printed on the wrapper. Your physician will recommend it. Paregoric, Bateman's Drops, and many so called Soothing Syrups, are composed principally of Opium or Morphine; in any quantity they stupify, and in large quantities are deadly poisons. Castoria assimilates the food and regulates the bowels, cures diarrhœa, allays feverishness and fretfulness, soothes the pains in teething, relieves constipation and kills worms. It brings refreshing and natural sleep to the child, and gives rest to the mother.

"Castoria is so well adapted to infants and children, that I recommend it as superior to any other known remedy." DR. H. A. ARCHER,
111 South street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

March 8, 1888.

"From personal knowledge and observation I can say that Castoria is an excellent medicine for children, acting as a laxative and relieving the pent up bowels and general system very much. Many mothers have told me of its excellent effect upon their children. DR. G. C. OSGOOD.

To-Night and To-Morrow Night,

And each day and night during this week you can get at all druggists Kemp's Balsam for the throat and lungs, acknowledged to be the most successful remedy ever sold for the cure of coughs, croup, bronchitis, whooping cough, asthma and consumption. Get a bottle to-day and keep it always in the house, so you can check your cold at once. Price 50c and $1.00. Sample bottle free.

Interested People.

Advertising a patent medicine in the peculiar way in which the proprietor of Kemp's Balsam, for Coughs and Colds, does it is indeed wonderful. He authorizes all druggists to give to those who call for it a sample bottle free, that they may try it before purchasing. The large bottles are 50c. and $1.00. We certainly would advise a trial. It may save you from consumption.

Advice to Mothers.

Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of cutting teeth? If so, send at once and get a bottle of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures dysentery and diarrhœa, regulates the stomach and bowels, cures wind colic, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING is pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female nurses and physicians in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price 25 cents a bottle. 1y23

S. S. S. FOR THE BLOOD.

PEED'S MILL, TEXAS, June 20, 1888.—The Swift Specific Company, Atlanta, Ga.—Gentlemen: One of my children was troubled with rheumatism and boils for about two years. We gave her various kinds of medicine, but without profit, and began to despair of curing her at all. I was persuaded to try your Swift's Specific. After she had used several bottles the diseases all disappeared, and she is now a hale, hearty and healthy girl twelve years old. Another child has just become afflicted in the same way, and I am using the S. S. S. and anticipate a prompt and permanent cure.
N. C. WAGGONER.

RICH HILL, MO., July 7, 1888—The Swift Specific Co., Atlanta, Ga.—Gentlemen: Our little girl when but three weeks old broke out with eczema. We tried the prescriptions from several good doctors, but without any special benefit. We tried S. S. S., and by the time one bottle was gone her head began to heal, and by the time she had taken six bottles she was completely cured. Now she has a full and heavy head of hair—a robust, hearty child. I feel it but my duty to make this statement.
Respectfully, H. T. SHOBE.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., June 27, 1888—The Swift Specific Co., Atlanta, Ga.—Gentlemen: In 1886 I contracted blood poison, and at once sought a physician, who treated me for several months. By his advice I went to Crab Orchard Springs, Ky., where his course of treatment was carefully observed. I recovered, as I thought, but the next spring pimples began to appear on my face and body. These gradually increased to sores and running ulcers. I was advised to try S. S. S., and immediately after taking it I commenced to improve, slowly at first, but more rapidly afterwards, and soon nothing remained to tell of my trouble. My blood is now thoroughly cleansed, and my system free from taint, and I owe my present condition—a perfect cure—to your medicine. I cheerfully give this statement that others who have suffered as I have may reap the same benefit.
HARDY M. BURT, 24 West Ninth St.

HOMER, LA., May 25, 1888—The Swift Specific Co., Atlanta, Ga.—Gentlemen: About two years ago my general health gave way entirely. I was so debilitated that I almost despaired of ever feeling well again. All that the physicians did for me brought no permanent relief. Friends insisted that I should give S. S. S. a fair trial, although I thought it would be throwing away money. After taking a thorough course my health and strength returned, and I must say that S. S. S. alone cured me, as I discarded all others while using it. As a tonic I can most heartily recommend it; for general debility, it certainly is a specific.

SULPHUR BITTERS.

THE BEST AND PUREST MEDICINE EVER MADE.

It will drive the Humor from your system, and make your skin clean and smooth. Those pimples and blotches which mar your beauty and caused by impure blood, can be removed in a short time, if you are wise and use the great blood purifier, SULPHUR BITTERS.

DON'T GIVE UP!

What makes you tremble so? Your nerves are all unstrung, and need a gentle, soothing tonic to assist nature to repair the damage which your excesses have caused. SULPHUR BITTERS is NOT a cheap rum or poor whisky drink, to be taken by the glass, like other preparations, which stimulate only to destroy. Why suffer with Boils? Why rave with that terrible headache? Why lay and toss on the that bed of pain with Rheumatism?

If you have failed to receive any benefit from other medicines or doctors, do not despair Use SULPHUR BITTERS. They will cure you where all others fail. No person can remain long sick who uses SULPHUR BITTERS.

The dose is small—only a teaspoonful. It is the best and cheapest medicine. Try it, and you will be satisfied. Get it of your druggist. Don't wait, get it at once. If you are suffering from Kidney Disease, and wish to live to old age, use SULPHUR BITTERS. They never fail to cure.

WHAT MADE THE BOY MAD.

Hardly closer their heads could be bent if 'twere tried;
"Pweep! Pweep! Pweep!"
The dickey bird sat in the window outside:
"Pweep! Pweep! Pweep!"
And the small boy in hiding the sofa beneath,
Clenched his fists in his anger and gritted his teeth,
For he couldn't determine if lovers or bird
Were making the comical sound that he heard:
"Pweep! Pweep! Pweep!"
—Chicago Mail.

WHAT MADE THE BOY MADDER.

Soon they snatched the young wretch from his cosy retreat;
"Swipe! Swash! Swank!"
He got about ten on his upholstered seat:
"Swipe! Swash! Swank!"
And the small boy soon learned to his infinite woe,
That his big sister had a most muscular beau,
And he felt quite assured 'twas a man, not a bird,
Was making the terrible sound that he heard:
"Swipe! Swash! Swank!"

Cleveland's Superior Baking Powder

The Purest and Best.

Is made only of strictly pure grape cream of tartar, strictly pure bicarbonate of soda, and a small portion of flour as a preservative, nothing else whatever, and is warranted entirely free from alum, ammonia, phosphates, lime, and all other adulterations frequently found in baking powders. The character of materials used, their purity, and the nicety of their combination, render Cleveland's superior baking the most healthful and most economical in use, and it always affords wholesome, nutritious, and delicious food.

It is recommended for purity, healthfulness and efficiency by government and state chemists, chemists of boards of health, and professors in institutions of learning throughout the country.

IN AN ENGLISH HOTEL.

The style of charging dinners is to submit to you a printed blank upon which what you have ordered is written, and just before rising from the table you are desired to approve it by signature before the waiter carries it to the cashier to be charged to your account, and if staying at the hotel for a few days you are only permitted to pay for what you order on leaving, or, if remaining more than a week, at the end of each week, when the huge bill of items is handed in. It is of course impossible to tell then if the charges for the various meals, etc., have all been made correctly unless one is blest with a memory not vouchsafed to ordinary mortals, or does as a friend of the author did who was staying there with his family, making daily record of everything they ordered in his pocket memoranda by which he discovered an error of account.

"In future," said he to the bookkeeper, "I will pay the waiter for each meal as I finish."

"Quite impossible, I assure yah, sir."

"Why so? I observe people do it every day."

"Er—yes, beg your pardon, but those are transients, sir."

"Well, consider me a transient and I'll pay as they do."

"Really! We couldn't—we—ah—have to have a system—our enormous business, doncher know."

"Enormous business! What do you call an enormous business?" said the now irate American.

"Why, immense dinner trade; why, we often have to dine two hundred and fifty persons a day hyar!" and the young man leaned back as if half expecting the American would reel under his announcement.

"How many?" said the latter.

"Two hundred and fifty a day!"

"Now, look here, young man, don't ever tell that to any other American; if you do he will laugh in your face for calling it a big business. Why, I am from a second-rate city where at one of our regular hotels from five to six hundred are dined daily, while three or four clubs of thirty to forty members each are having dinners in different parts of the house at the same time."

"Really—most extwardinary."

"Extraordinary! No, sir; I have sat down in a dining-room at Saratoga Springs where over a thousand were dined at once, with not half the trouble of getting served that there is in this country.—Boston Commercial Bulletin.

Dumley (overtaking Brown on his way home to dinner)—Aren't you rather late to-night, Brown?

Brown—Yes—washerwoman—washerwoman. I've had a hard day's work—washerwoman—washerwoman.

Dumley—What are you mumbling "washerwoman" for?

Brown—So that I wouldn't forget to advertise for a washerwoman in this afternoon's paper. My wife told me to keep repeating washerwoman, and I've kept it up all day, and (suddenly) by thunder if I didn't forget it after all. Washerwoman—blank washerwoman.—New York Sun.

"Five cents fare for that child madam," said a Pawtucket street car driver as he opened the door and put his head in car. "Very well," she replied, feeling in her pocket, "this is an orphan child and I am its guardian. I must have a receipt for all the money paid out and as soon as you write one I'll drop a nickel in the box." He shut the door and leaned over the brake like a man in deep thought.

Professor Cramwell—So your son goes back to college, to-morrow. What is his class this year?

Mrs. Adley—I've really forgotten. Edmund, what's your class this year?

Edmund (proudly)—Two pounds more and I'll be a middle-weight.—Time.

"Are you ticklish?" inquired young Featherly who had Bobby on his knee.

"A little," responded Bobby, "but not so much as you are."

"Why do you think I'm ticklish, Bobby?"

"Pa says so."—Epoch.

Actor (to friend)—Didn't it strike you, Charley, that a large number of the audience were considerably moved over my soliloquy in the second act?

Friend—Oh, yes; I noticed quite a number got up and moved out.—Epoch.

Little Waldo—Mamma, which is it proper to say—eat soup or drink it?

Mamma—You should say sip it, my dear. It is only people who have never lived in Boston who say otherwise.—Life.

TRUE ECONOMY. — It is true economy to buy Hood's Sarsaparilla, for 100 Doses for One Dollar," is original with and true only of this popular medicine. If you wish to prove this, buy a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla and measure its contents. You will find it to hold 100 teaspoonfuls. Now read the directions, and you will find that the average dose for persons of different ages is less than one teaspoonful. This is certainly conclusive and unanswerable evidence of the peculiar strength and economy of Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"I took Hood's Sarsaparilla for loss of appetite, dyspepsia, and general languor. It did me a vast amount of good, and I have no hesitancy in recommending it."—J. W. Willeford, Quincy, Ill.

"I have been troubled by scrofulous affection all my life. It is one of the marked recollections of my boyhood days, and for several years has rendered me unable to labor much. I think Hood's Sarsaparilla, which I have been using at intervals for ten years, is the best thing I have ever taken. I am now 60, and my general health seems better than ever.—H. D. Abbott, Warren, N. H.

FOR CHRISTMAS.

JOHNSON'S UNIVERSAL CYCLOPÆDIA (Revised edition) is a whole library of universal knowledge from the pens of the ablest scholars in America and Europe. It is accepted as high authority in our leading colleges and institutions of learning. It is not for the few, like Appleton's, the Britanica, or the International, BUT FOR ALL. It has just been thoroughly revised at a cost of over $60,000 and three years' labor by forty editors and over 2000 renowned contributors. It is in eight convenient sized volumes. No father can give to his child at school or his son or daughter just entering the arena of life anything that will be of more permanent benefit. It is an education supplementary to that of the schools.

Address for particulars and terms,

CLOTHIERS AND HATTERS.

Every conceivable kind of a Suit or Overcoat is now ready for sale or inspection. We have so many things to talk about hardly know where to begin.

This week's sales have been of such a character to warrant our speaking of our better grades of garments. You can scarcely realize the quality of fine merchandise which we now offer. Being connected with one of the largest manufacturers in New England we are enabled to produce the very best Ready Made Clothing manufactured, and at prices which cannot fail of being popular.

Suits from $5 to $35.

Overcoats from $1.50 to $40.

HATS.

Yes, we deal very largely in Hats and Caps for Men, Boys and Children. We begin with headgear for the very smallest boy and have a stock which for quantity, quality and variety, is unsurpassed for both young men and old men. Our hats are all sold regardless of ordinary "hatters' prices." Yes, we can and do retail them much less than most people. Why, you say, because they come direct to us from the largest manufacturer in this country, and you buyers get the benefit from such purchases.

CLOTHIERS AND FURNISHERS.

We have so many specialties of Suits for this Fall and Winter for men and young men, goods of which we control, because made by ourselves. We have been making a bid for the Stout Men for the past few years, and this season continue to make as a special attraction a complete line of Suits, Trousers and Overcoats, in sizes from 36 to 48; surely most every "fat man" can be fitted.

Boys' and Children's Garments.

We offer these days marvelous inducements for the little boys and big boys.

BARGAIN ONE. SUITS $5, made from finest Union Cassimere Long Pants, sizes 10 to 18 years.

BARGAIN TWO. SUITS $1. Short pants, sizes 4 to 12 years, worth $2.

BARGAIN THREE. Short Pant Suits, worth $4 and $4 50, now $3.

BARGAIN FOUR. This is the most popular price for a Boys Suit for School or dress wear, $5. We include in this lot the famous "Rough and Tumble" Suits with caps to match, all for $5.

Mothers, Fathers, Guardians, you can find a stock which for variety is unexcelled in this section of New England.

CLOTHIERS AND OUTFITTERS.

We commence to-day a special sale of pantaloons for $2.50. Included in this great assortment of all-wool goods at this popular price are the McMillan Pantaloon, manufactured in Malone, New York. Every gentleman who has worn a pair of these famous pants will testify to their worth and durability. Call for these $2.50 pantaloons.

We wish we had more space to speak of our stock of Overcoats, Ulsters and Reefers.

We offer a great assortment, never so large before. We have young men's sizes, men's sizes, stout sizes, extra sizes and long sizes, We solicit an inspection now while the stock is complete. You can have them laid aside if you wish until needed.

Furnishings and Fixings

of the very choicest makes of fine goods. These days Underwear, Hosiery, Cardigans, and Gloves receive a great deal of attention, the season demands it. Our sale of these goods is large, continues to increase every season. We have the sanitary Underwear and Hosiery of different makes; for gloves we continue to sell those advertised last week for 98c, made by Foster, Rand & Co. These usually retail for $1.50, you can have them as long as they last for 98c.

MASON & HAMLIN.

The cabinet organ was introduced in its present form by Mason & Hamlin in 1861. Other makers followed in the manufacture of the instruments, but the Mason & Hamlin organs have always maintained their supremacy as the best in the world.

Mason & Hamlin offer, as demonstration of the unequalled excellence of their organs, the fact that at all of the great World's Exhibitions, since that of Paris, 1867, in competition with best makers of all countries, they have invariably taken the highest honors. Illustrated catalogues free.

ORGANS $22 to $900.

Mason & Hamlin do not hesitate to make extraordinary claim for their pianos, that they are superior to all others. They recognize the high excellence achieved by other leading makers in the art of piano making, but still claim superiority. This they attribute solely to the remarkable improvement introduced by them in the year 1882, and now known as the "Mason & Hamlin Piano Stringer," by the use of which is secured the greatest possible purity and refinement of tone, together with great increased capacity for standing in tune and other important advantages.

PIANOS Grand & Upright

A circular containing testimonials from three hundred purchasers, musicians, and tuners, sent, together with descriptive catalogue, to any applicant.

Pianos and organs sold for cash or easy payments; also rented.

Alone at Eighty.

What did you say, dear—breakfast?
Somehow I've slept too late;
You are very kind, dear Effie,
Go tell them not to wait.
I'll dress as quick as I ever can—
My old hands tremble sore,
And Polly who used to help, dear heart,
Lies t'other side o' the door.

Put up the old pipe, deary—
I couldn't smoke to-day,
I'm sort o' dazed and frightened,
And don't know what to say.
It's lonesome in the house here,
And lonesome out o' door—
I never knew what lonesome meant,
In all my life before.

The bees go humming the whole day long,
The first June rose has blown,
And I am eighty, dear Lord, to-day—
Too old to be left alone!
O, heart of love, so still and cold!
O, precious lips so white—
For the first sad hours in sixty years
You were out of reach last night.

You've cut the flower. You're very kind,
She rooted it last May;
It was only a slip; I pulled the rose
And threw the stem away;
But she, sweet thrifty soul, bent down
And planted it where she stood.
"Dear, may be the flowers are living," she said,
"Asleep in this dead wood."

I can't rest, deary—I cannot rest;
Let the old man have his will,
And wander from porch to garden post—
The house is so dreadful still;
Wander, and long for a sight at the gate
She has left ajar for me—
We have got so used to each other, dear,
So used to each other, you see.

Sixty years, and so wise and good,
She made me a better man
From the time I kissed her fair young face,
And our lovers' life began,
And seven fine boys she has given me,
And out of the seven not one
But the noblest father in the land
Would be proud to call his son.

Oh, well, dear Lord, I'll be patient,
But I feel so broken up,
At eighty years it's an awesome thing
To drain such a bitter cup.
I know there's Joseph, and John, and Hal,
And four good men beside,
But a hundred sons couldn't be to me
Like the woman I made my bride.

My little Polly so bright and fair,
So winsome and good and sweet,
She had roses twined in her sunny hair,
With shoes on her dainty feet.
And I held her hand—was it yesterday
That we stood up to be wed!
And—No, I remember; I'm eighty to-day,
And my dear wife, Polly, is dead.

BILL JENKS' STORY.

It was late in October, and the mountain air was chilly, but the fire which we had built, and which reached up with its long tongues of flame half way to the dark pine top above, made the camp comfortable. We had stopped for the night just off the great Deadwood trail, a dozen miles from that place—that great wagon road which leads from the gold mines to civilization, over 200 miles among mountains and across plains, over government land and through Indian reservations.

"I'm goin' to bed an' to sleep to-night," said Gene Brooks, a freighter, with three great freight wagons and twelve mules, which he drove alone, as is customary; "I set up all last night tellin' you fellers stories, but you can't rope me in that way to-night." We had fallen in with Gene on the trail the day before. We looked at the fire, now burning lower, as we listened to the night wind, unfelt below, singing through the pine tops the same low, sad refrain which the wind and the pines ever sing.

"Hanged if there ain't a stray mule," said Gene, as he strained his eyes through the darkness toward the trail. "Looks some like one of Bill Jenks' leaders, too, but Bill don't let none of his mules get away. 'Sides, he's gone to Sundance this trip, though it must be 'bout time for him to get back—he hurries 'long kinder fast now—he gets lonesome, I reckon. I b'lieve I must tell you 'bout Bill 'fore I forget it," and Gene cut off a chew of tobacco with a pocketknife and rolled over and kicked his toes into the ground as he gazed at the fire, while the pines ceased their complaining song for a moment, and the murmuring of Bear Butte creek came to our ears as it bubbled along over the rocks a few yards away, all grayish, milky white, muddled by the silver mining along its head waters in the Galena district—all the streams in the Black Hills run either the same grayish, milk white or blood red—silver or gold mining.

"You heard me mention Bill last night," went on Gene. "He's a good one—ain't 'fraid of nothing that walks. Been freightin' ever since I have—nine year. Got a twelve mule outfit—three wagons. Bill ain't exactly quarrelsome, but if he has got anything agin' anybody he don't go round tryin' to forget it. More likely he jumps the feller an' cleans him out. Bill ain't never been licked on the trail. Carries a gun in the wagon to use in cases of necessity. Good feller if you know how to take him—I never had no trouble with him—but a little queer an' not a man to monkey with 'less you're lookin' for mighty lively exercise."

Gene meditatively took off his hat and blew the dust from the wide brim—the red, powdery dust of the trail, the dust that is blown hither and thither, on everything, through everything; that is stirred by the treasure coach and passenger coach, mule trian and bull train, by the passing breeze and the gale as it sweeps down out of the canyon and whirls it along in great clouds that shut from sight coach and wagon train, dusty passenger and dustier driver. Then he began again:

"Well, 'bout two year ago we was all freightin' from Pierre—nearest railroad town then, you know. Them was lively times at Pierre. Killed a man every night, buried him the nex' mornin', or mebby the day after, 'cordin' to how busy they was.

"There was a girl at Pierre named Pearl Queen. Least that's what the bills said her name was, though I al'ays thought it was a little mixed 'bout it bein' right. She acted at the Alhambra theater, you see. Danced on her toes remarkably pretty like. She'd been there some time, and we all knowed her more or less. She was a little thing, midlin' young, I jedged, though I al'ays calculated she looked a little sort o' faded. She was kinder quiet, though she had a pretty peart look, too. They said she shot a feller at Sidney, but Pete Ferris said it wa'n't her a tall, so I don't know nothing 'bout it.

"Anyhow, Bill Jenks got a'quainted with her one trip, and they jess seemed to muchu'ly fall in love with each other at first sight. Well, we didn't pay no attention to this, but we wa'n't quite ready for what follered. Bill got a load of merch'ndise for Lead City, an' the nex' mornin' pulled out, an' the p'int is right here: Settin' up on the saddle on the near white mule was Pearl Queen, jes' 'sif she'd al'ays been there; an' Bill was walkin' 'longside, mebby a little closer'n gen'ral, swearin' at the mules jes' 'sif he never pulled out no other way.

"Well, we all looked an' that's 'bout all we did do when we see 'em comin'—there happened to be quite a lot of us in camp there an' we was jes' hookin' up—Bill had camped down by the freight house. Pearl had on a new caliker dress, mostly red and pretty like, an' I noticed she 'peared rather better lookin' than gen'ral, I thought. Big Smith was camped with us; he's one o' these 'ere smart Alecs, an' a fightin' man, an' didn't like Bill none too well, nohow. He steps up when they comes along, an' says he: 'Mornin', Bill.' 'Mornin', Big Smith,' says Bill, and stops his team. 'I see you got Pearl Queen with you,' says Big Smith. 'It does 'pear that way,' says Bill. 'I b'lieve I'm somewhat a'quainted with Pearl myself,' says Big Smith, kinder smart like. 'I 'low you don't know anything bad 'bout her,' says Bill, bitin' his teeth together hard. 'Well, I'— Crack! an' Bill hit him one on the jaw so we could all hear it, sayin' at the same time: 'What is it you know?' Big Smith fell like a log an' lay there for 'most a minute, Bill all the time waitin' for an answer. Pretty soon Big Smith got so he could kinder roll a little, an' then said: 'Bill it ain't worth mentionin'!' Then Bill whistled to his mules and went on.

"Nothing but fights for Bill Jenks after that. He had to stop an' lick the man that kep' the Red Corral 'fore he got out 'o town, and he pounded two freighters at Willow Creek, an' at Bad River he an' the man that run the road ranch there fit twenty minutes, an' Bill finally got him up on the bank of the stream an' shoved him in an' that settled him. He would meet a man, the man would say something about Pearl or go to grinnin', an' Bill would stop an' step up an' whale him, come back, kinder mop off the thickest of the blood with his sleeve, swear at the mules an' go on, while Pearl reached down an' patted him on the shoulder an' cheered him up.

"Pearl stayed with him right along. She didn't ride on the mule so much after the first trip 'cept when they were goin' inter town, when Bill always had her ride it, so that if there was anybody 'round wanted to make any remarks, that she would 'tract their 'tention an' they would make 'em, an' Bill would stop an' have it out with 'em. But it wasn't long 'fore folks got over sayin' much in Bill's hearin'—awful unhealthy practice. One day when they was pullin' into Rapid City one of these pictur' men tried to take their pictur' with Pearl on the mule, but Bill caught him at it an' went over an' kicked one o' the legs off his outfit, an' as that only left two on it, it didn't stand very steady, an' the cuss looked kinder sheepish, put it under his arm an' made a sneak.

"Bill al'ays fixed her up a nice place to ride in the trail wagon, an' when she wasn't there or on the mule she would walk 'long by his side. I s'pose it was very pleasant for her to hear Bill swearin' at the mules all day, 'cause she thought a heap of him. When one o' the rest of us camps, of course we al'ays have to rustle 'round an' cook our own bacon, but she done his cookin' right along, an' good cookin' it was too, 'cause Bill asked me to eat with them sev'ral times. Biscuits! w'y she used to make biscuits that tasted, w'y, durn it all, they tasted 'most like they used to at home! Bill an' Pearl al'ays got along powerful fine together. They wasn't married reg'lar, you know. Bill said he didn't believe in any such monkey business, an' I reckon she didn't neither, but Bill told me it was going to be a steady thing; an' it was.

"Well, it was a hard life for the girl, al'ays on the road—cold an' stormy through the winter an' hot and dusty when summer come—never sleepin' in a house an' not hardly ever being in one at all, 'cept occasionally mebby a store, or freight depot, or something. But she seemed to stand it first rate an' not want nothin' else. Bill was mighty careful 'bout her stayin' in the wagon an' keepin' warm in cold or rainy weather, so I dunno, mebby the life was 'bout as easy as any she was used to. Her'n' Bill was al'ays happy anyhow, an' I s'pose that's a better record than some folks that live finer an' are more solidder married can show.

"Well, I reckon there ain't so very much more to tell, though it's kinder hard work to tell it a tall. One night, 'way 'long this summer I camped back here, near Sturgis. I got up early and pulled out for Deadwood, not thinkin' 'bout anything. I'd gone six or seven mile an' was gittin' 'long fine, when I come 'round a bend in the road right 'mong the biggest of the mountains, when what should I see but Bill Jenks' outfit camped ahead a ways. It wa'n't no reg'lar campin' place, an' I couldn't make it out at first, but then I see Bill a-walkin' back'ards an' for'ards side o' the wagon with something white in his arms, an' then, says I, 'I know what's up. Git, you mules!' An' I clim' on the near one an' hit each of 'em a crack with the whip, an' I'll be hanged if I didn't come up to where he was on the trot! I stopped an' was goin' to yell, an' then I thought I hadn't better 'cause it might not be the thing for such an occasion. Then I was glad I didn't, 'cause as Bill come over, I saw tears in his eyes. First I thought he felt bad, then I 'lowed he was glad, then I didn't know; but Bill steps up side the mule an' I'll be teetotally blanked—yes, sir, I will—if he didn't turn back some sort o' soft cloth on the bundle an' showed me the all-firedest, blankest, smallest, little cuss—baby, you know—that you ever seen! That's what he done, an' my eyes stuck out a foot, though I knowed, soon as I seen Bill walkin' what was comin', too. Then says Bill: ''Gene, that's my boy. Don't he look jes' like me?' I was stuck for a minute 'cause I couldn't see's it looked like anything 'cept jes' baby, but I braced up, an' says I: 'Bill, he's the pictur' of you 'cept his eyes—he's got his mother's eyes.' Then I started to say something, but Bill stopped me, an' says he: 'Pearl is awful sick, an' I want you to get onto one o' my mules an' ride on to Deadwood an' git a doctor to come down.'

"So I done so, goin' 'bout as quick as anybody ever did with a mule that was kinder set ag'in goin' anyhow, an' got back 'way ahead o' the doctor. When I come up there was nobody in sight. I waited a minute an' didn't hear nothin'. Then I tapped a little on the trail wagon an' Bill said, 'Come in,' sorter choked like, an' I put my head under the canvas at the back end.

"There sat Bill on the bottom of the wagon box with the baby on one arm, while he was a-lookin' down at Pearl—her head was a-layin' in his lap an' her face was so white that it scart me. Then she opened her eyes, an' at first they was big an' wild like, but they got softer an' she looked at me an' said awful weak, so I could jes' hear it: 'Gene,' says she, 'look after Bill a little an' cheer him up when I'm gone.' An' then she looked at the baby with her big eyes an' up at Bill, and tried to raise her hands, an' Bill saw what she wanted an' put one of her arms 'round the baby an' the other up 'round his own neck an' leaned over, an' I come away quick's I could an' went 'round to the mules an' tried to make b'lieve I was fixin' the harness or something. A mule is very cheerin' on such a 'casion. An' after a few minutes Bill come out with the baby still on his arm—the little feller never whimpered—an' he set down on the wagon tongue an' his head kinder dropped in his hand, an' says he: 'Gene, there ain't nobody to take care o' me 'n' the boy now!'

"We waited a while an' then I got a feller that came along to drive my outfit an' I took Bill's, an' he got in the wagon an' we went to Deadwood. The next day was Sunday an' we had a funeral. Ev'ry freighter that could be was there, an' lots of other folks that knowed Bill come down where we held it. I had a preacher, too; Bill was doubtful, but I told him it 'u'd be better. When he come Bill took him to one side, an' says he, 'I want to tell you 'fore you begin. You know who I am an' who she was—my wife—you've heard our story. Now I don't want you to preach no sermon, 'cause you might say something ag'in her when you didn't mean to an' it would be bad for you, an', of course, me, too; so jes' read a little out o' your Bible—I reckon that's all straight talk—an' if you must say something jes' say she was squar' an' never went back on Bill Jenks!'

"So that's about the way it was; the preacher read some an' then he sung a song I heard at church when I was a boy, an' some of us j'ined in a little, an' Big Smith whistled the tune kinder soft like, an' looked at the ground; an' then the peacher said that her that was gone must have been a good woman or the husband she left would not mourn her so much an' so deep, an' then he put on: 'She was always true to Bill Jenks,' an' that was all.

"We buried her down the gulch, a bit off from the trail in a little park 'mong some pines—Bill wouldn't have nothing to do with the reg'lar graveyards—he said folks might not want her there, an' they needn't have her. He dug the grave himself, so it would be right, he said. He sent clear to Omaha after a headstone an' it's a beauty—nicer 'n any they got in the buryin' ground.

"The baby, hey? You bet he's all right—the preacher's wife took him for a while an' then Bill got her an' her husband to go with him an' take the baby down to his folks in Iowa—all Bill's fam'ly down there are a good deal more on style an' all that sort o' thing than he is, an' they got lots o' money an' were tickled to death with the little cuss, an' are takin' the best kind o' care of him an' when he gits big are goin' to send him to school, an' give him an edication an' a big start in life. The old folks wanted Bill to stay home too, but he said the life would kill him it was so reg'lar, so he's goin' down to see the little feller once a year. I wonder when he grows up an' gits to wearin' fine clothes an' one thing 'n' another if he'll ever know anything 'bout the start he had way out here by the trail in the big freight wagon all covered with dust? Oh, 'nother thing, Bill named him William Queen Eugene Jenks—nothing ornery 'bout that name, is there?—Frederick H. Carruth in New York Tribune.

GREASED THE PROFESSOR.—Here is a case that happened out West a few years since. The graduating class in one of our medical colleges was advised at the last by the old professor never to acknowledge ignorance, but always, when called, to give some treatment. One of the class settled in a Western town, and after some years the old professor, in traveling, got a piece of bone in his throat in the same town, and the young doctor being called failed in every means in his power to dislodge the obstruction, and then having recognized the old professor, striped him and rubbed him with lard. This so amused the old professor that he could not restrain a hearty laugh, which dislodged the bone, and he asked the doctor: "Why in thunder did you grease me?" The reply was: "You told me when I was about to graduate always to do something, so I greased you, not knowing what else to do."—Williamsport Sun and Banner.

The Sweetest Name.

The name of mother! sweetest name
That ever fell on mortal ear!
The love of mother! mightiest love
Which heaven permits to flourish here.
Dissect a mother's heart and see
The properties that it doth contain—
What pearls of love, what gems of hope—
A mother's heart beats not in vain.

The words of mother! when they flow
In love's true rhetoric from her lips,
The meteor star of sin and shame
Are lost amid a bright eclipse;
And when we walk the glittering path
Wherein temptations oft we see,
O, then we realize how strong
The power of mother's love can be.

A mother's love! it never wanes;
What if her boy an ingrate seems?
The beauty of that wondrous love
Around the thankless offspring beams;
Though in the path of shame he walks,
Though crime had driven him to the bowl,
A mother's care can yet avail—
A mother's prayers may win his soul.

What heart like mother's can forgive
The peccadilloes of our youth?
What hand like hers can lead us back
From sin to innocence and truth?
O, name of mother! sweetest name
That ever fell on mortal ear;
O, love of mother! mightiest love
That Heaven allows to flourish here.

FACTS ABOUT OYSTERS NOT GENERALLY KNOWN.

Every oyster has a mouth, a heart, a liver, a stomach, cunningly devised intestines, and other necessary organs, just as all living, moving and intelligent creatures have. And all these things are covered from man's inquisitive gaze by the mantle of pearly gauze, whose woof and warp put to shame the frost-lace on your windows in the winter. The mouth is at the smaller end of the oyster, adjoining the hinge. It is of oval shape, and though not readily seen by an unpracticed eye, its location and size can be easily discovered by gently pushing a blunt bodkin, or similar instrument along the surface of the locality mentioned. When the spot is found, your bodkin can be thrust directly between the delicate lips and a considerable distance down toward the stomach without causing the oyster to yell with pain. From this mouth is of course a sort of a canal to convey food to the stomach whence it passes into the intestines. With an exceedingly delicate and sharp knife you can take off the mantle of the oyster, when there will be disclosed to you a half-moon shaped space just above the muscles of the so-called "heart." This space is the oyster's pericardium, and within it is the real heart, the pulsuations of which are readily seen. The heart is made up of two parts, just as the human heart is, one of which receives the blood from the gills through a net work of blood-vessels, and the other drives the blood out through the arteries. In this important matter the oyster differs in no respect from other warm or cold-blooded animals. And no one need laugh incredulously at the assertion that oysters have blood. It is not ruddy, according to the accepted notion about blood, but it is nevertheless blood to all oyster intents and purposes. In the same vicinity, and in marvelously proper positions, will be found all the other organs mentioned. But it is very proper to be incredulous about the mouth and organs. At first glance it would seem that they are utterly useless, for the mouth cannot snap round for food, and the oyster has no arms wherewith to grab its dinner or lunch. True, apparently, but only apparently, for each oyster has more than a thousand arms, tiny, delicate, almost invisible. And each one of them is incessantly at work gathering up food and gently pushing it into the lazy mouth of the indolently comfortably creature. The gills are the thin flaps so notably perceptible around the front face of the undressed oyster, below the muscle. Each of these gills is covered with minute hair-like arms very close together, and perpetually in motion to and fro in the same unwearied direction. They catch food from the water, strain it carefully of improper substances, and waft it upward over the mantle's smooth surface to the gaping mouth, which placidly gobbles it up until hunger is appeased, and then the body goes to sleep without turning over. Any one can observe this singular process of feeding by placing a minute quantity of some harmless coloring matter on the gills. If it will not offend the oyster's delicate palate, the coloring matter will be seen at once propelled by invisible hands toward the mouth, and thence slowly down into the stomach. And this is all I know about the oyster anatomy, except that the liver almost entirely surrounds the stomach, and is of a dark green color. It may be new, however, to many to know that oysters are born in precisely the same way that shad and other fish come into the world. A well educated lady oyster will lay about 125,000,000 eggs—so it is said; I have not counted enough of them to stike such a large average—and every one of these eggs will ultimately become fit for stew or fry if they escape the multitude of perils that do environ the infant oyster.—Baltimore Gazette.

WHISKY DID IT.—"The war of the rebellion," said Gen. Sickles the other evening, "was really a whisky war. Yes, whisky caused the rebellion! I was in the congress preceding the war. It was whisky in the morning—the morning cocktail—a congress of whisky-drinkers. Then whisky all day; whisky and gambling all night. Drinks before congress opened its morning seesion, drinks before it adjourned. Scarcely a committee-room without its demijohn, and the clink of the glasses could be heard in the capitol corridors. The fights—the angry speeches, were whisky. The atmosphere was redolent with whisky—nervous excitement seeking relief in whisky, and whisky adding to nervous excitement. Yes, the rebellion was launched in whisky. If the French assembly were to drink some morning one-half the whisky consumed in any one day by that congress, France would declare war against Germany in 20 minutes."

Mary had a little lamb
Its fleece was white as snow,
And everywhere that Mary went
That lamb was sure to go.

A little lamb had Mary, sweet,
With fleece that shamed the driven snow,
Not alone Mary went when she moved her feet,
For a little lamb had Mary, sweet,
And it tagged her 'round with a pensive bleat,
And wherever she went it wanted to go—
A little lamb had Mary, sweet,
With a fleece that shamed the driven snow.

As Mr. Browning Has It.

You knew her?—Mary the small,
How of a summer—or, no, was it fall?
The latter, I think—a lamb she received?
You'd never have thought it—never believed,
But the girl owned a lamb last fall.

Its wool was subtly, silky white,
Color of lucent obliteration of night—
Like the shimmering snow—or of Clothild's arm!—
You've seen her arm—her right I mean—
The other she scalded a-washing, I wean—
How white it is, and soft and warm!

Ah, there was soul's heart love, deep, true and tender.
Wherever went Mary, the maiden so slender,
There followed, his all-absorbed passion inciting,
That passionate lambkin—her soul's heart delighting—
Ay, every place that Mary was sought in
That lamb was sure to soon be caught in.

As Longfellow Might Have Done It.

Fair the daughter known as Mary,
Fair and full of fun and laughter,
Owned a lamb, a little he-goat,
Owned him all herself and solely,
White the lamb's wool as the Gotchi—
The great Gotchi, driving snow storm.
Hither Mary went and thither,
But went with her to all places,
Sure as brook to running river,
Her pet lambkin following with her.

How Andrew Lang Sings It.
[Rondeau.]

A wonderful lass was Marie, petite;
And she looked full fair and passing sweet—
And, oh, she owned—but cannot you guess
What pet can a maiden so love and caress
As a tiny lamb with a plaintive bleat
And mud upon his dainty feet,
And a gentle veally odor of meat!
And a fleece to finger and kiss and press—
White as snow?

Wherever she wandered—in lane or street—
As she sauntered on, there at her feet
She would find her lambkin—bless
The dear!—treading on her dainty dress,
Her dainty dress fresh and neat—
White as snow.

Walt Whitman's Way.

The little girl, bright eyed, fair Mary named, making me think of the fresh fields, the flowers and spring.
Possessed, solely, by herself in her own right, a blithe, frisk, rejoicing little he-goat.
White was its hide, white as snow or as sunshine, or my fair girl's arms, white as the sea foam when the wind churns it uglily.
And to whatsoever of the corners of infinitely far-spreading, all covering universe Mary adjourned her fair, long, straight lower legs,
There followed the little flea-bitten, snow-white
he-goat, omnipresent, ubquitous,
Infinite in everywhereness.

Mr. Algerton C. Swinburne's Idea.
[Villanelle.]

Dewey-eyed, with shimmering hair,
Maiden and lamb were a sight to see,
For her pet was as white as she was fair.

And its lovely fleece was beyond compare,
And dearly it loved its mistress Marie.
Dewey-eyed, with shimmering hair.

Its warped wool was an inwove snare
To tangle her fingers in, where they could be
(For her pet was as white as she was fair.)

Lost from sight, both so snow white were,
And the lambkin adored the maiden wee—
Dewey-eyed with shimmering hair.
Th' impassioned incarnation of rare,
Of limpet-eyed, luscious-lipped, loved beauty,
And her pet was white as she was fair.

Wherever she wandered, hither and there,
Wildly that lampet sought with her to be—
With the dewey-eyed, with shimmering hair,
And pet as white as its mistress was fair.
—Chicago News.

ONE AFTERNOON.

Prout's is an old-fashioned farmhouse which stands with its orchards and fields between a wide tidal river and the sea. Summer boarders have brought the usual changes to it—tennis courts, colored waiters, and an annex of a row of new chambers filled with the inevitable ash furniture from Grand Rapids.

Old Israel Prout is not quite awake to the change yet, nor satisfied to reap a larger harvest from these frivolous college boys and pretty girls then he ever did from his meadows or salt hay. He sits about uncomfortably, and talks to the older men among the boarders. He especially affected the company, last summer, of an old, shabby fellow named McCann, who had as he told Israel, but two weeks' holiday in his yearly grind, and had come to spend it in deep-sea fishing.

One day twinges of rheumatism kept him from going out to the Banks, and he sat with Israel, smoking, on the shore of the inlet, watching the young men racing in their sailboats.

"Who is that?" he asked, nodding toward a young fellow who sat apart on the bank. "I have not seen him before."

"No? He's a neighbor's son. Widow Riddell. She's had hard luck. Only had this boy, John, an' he took to books from a baby. Could do nothin' at farmin'. Shrewd, sensible boy, too. Worked his way through college, and went abroad as a tutor for some rich man's sons. Got a place after that in a big insurance house in Philadelphia, an' then took typhoid, an' lost it. He's been laid on the shelf for nigh a year. You see he looks poorly yit. But he's ready for work, if he could get it. He's been trying right an' left. Got no inflooence. When you get out of the procession, I s'pose 'tain't easy to catch step ag'in."

"No, I suppose not," said McCann. "What did he do in that house?"

"Talked to the furriners that hed business. Them queer lingos come nateral to John. Ef he'd taken as much interest in farmin' as in French, it 'ud have served his turn better."

A year ago John would have been in one of these boats, shouting, laughing and cheering. Now, he thought, how could any grown man care for such folly? Life was such a breathless tragedy? Why! look at him, shelved at 21! For six months he has been scheming, struggling, begging for work! An able-bodied man, no fool; educated, on fire with eagerness to use his knowledge and help the world—yet not even allowed to earn his living! There was no chance in this country for a young man without capital or influence—none! Men who owed him kindnesses had turned a cold shoulder on him when he asked for work. It was a cold, selfish world, and the true secret was to care only for yourself in it!

The fact was that the lad had made his first plunge into disappointment so common in life, and the chill of it struck to his heart. He had received a lot of letters that morning, all refusals. His mother had coaxed him to go over to Prout's and see the race, hoping to cheer him up.

"You must see something of folk, John, Bessie may be there by this time."

What was the little artist to him? What home had he to offer her? Two years ago he had planned—

But he had come to please his mother. How dull the sky was! The marshes were flat and hideous in the leaden light, the creeks black and sluggish. The very tiger lilies and marsh mellows by the path wearied his eye.

As he sat on the bank groups of girls in their airy gowns fluttered through the trees; on the pier were two or three portly old gentlemen, judges, bank presidents, millionaires, no doubt purse-proud and miserly. He hated them all. "Every man for himself!" he muttered, stretching out his legs, as an Italian organ grinder tried to pass him. John would not budge.

The man was ridiculous enough. On his heels were steel spurs, with which, when he ground the organ, he struck a brass kettle, and on his head a high triangular cap edged with bells. He sat down the organ and began to turn it, executing a sort of frenzied dance, kicking the kettle and wagging his head. A little girl stood motionless beside him. John burst into a laugh. He was but a boy after all in the depths of his despair.

Even the organ-grinder was an event at Prout's. The girls came chattering up from the woods, the portly old gentlemen sauntered across the beach. Mr. McCann and Israel lounged down the bank toward him.

"Hyar, you tramp, be off."

John jumped up.

"Let the man alone, Uncle Israel. It's a hard way to earn a living, heaven knows. Give him a chance."

Israel laughed. The Italian nodded to John, and fell to work with frantic energy. The organ shrieked, the kettle rang, the bells jingled. He stopped breathless and nodded again to Riddell.

"You are from Piedmont?" said John.

The man's yellow, dirty face glowed at the sound of his own patois.

"Si, signor. Carema. Si, Si?"

"What does he say?" cried the old ladies and the girls, crowding closer. Even the solid bankers, who in town would not have seen the Italian though he had crossed their path a dozen times a day, in this idle hour looked at him with a feeble interest.

"He says he is from a village in the lower Alps," said John. "I was there once." On the instant the low cottages, the brown vineyards, the sharp range of peaks in the background, and the half-ruined castle to the right rose before them. "I know Carema," he said. "Pedro Nossi was my good friend there."

"Ah, Pedro is my uncle!" the Italian fairly screamed. "I am Seppi. Have you not heard of Seppi? And did the signor see the church at Carema? And the picture? Ah, there is no picture like that in the world!"

"What does he say?" came the chorus again.

To their surprise it was the old fisherman, McCann, who answered them, interpreting for John and Seppi, who were too eager to hear him, as they discussed the beauty of the poor little village and of Seppi's house, which was on the edge of the road to Ivria.

The Italian caught the little girl who was with him by the shoulder.

"Anita! The signor has walked by our house! He has, perhaps, broken a bunch of grapes from the old vine, and rested on the big stone where your blessed mother used to sit evenings! She may be there now looking down the road for Seppi and her baby girl?"

The tears stood in his beardy black eyes. The child, who was as solid and square as if cut out of a log, quietly put up one fat hand and wiped them away.

"Some time, my father," she said.

"Why did you leave Carema, Seppi?"

"Signor, I came with a great padrome from Aosta. He said: 'If you will come Anita, and play and dance in America for two years, you shall come home rich—rich.' I wanted to be rich," said Seppi, gravely shaking his head.

The bell jingled merrily, in odd contrast to the miserable face below.

"And then?"

"Sandro, that was his name, took us to the far West, and parted me from Anita. I was driven and starved, but that did not matter. Look here!"

He pulled down her gown from the child's back and showed it scarred and black. A cry of pity came from every women there. Seppi's big hands shook as he buttoned the little dress again, but the child stood passive.

"I ran away. I found my girl, and we are on our way home. We shall see Maria and my boy and the old house again!"

"How soon, Seppi?"

The poor organ-grinder shrugged his shoulders.

"It takes much time to make little money—yes! We have walked from Chicago. We have saved every penny. We do not eat much, Anita and I! It will take $40 to take us home, and we have saved this in two years."

He pulled from his breast a leather bag, and, throwing his coat on the grass, poured out on it a little heap of silver. The crowd pressed close. John kneeled and began to count it. He was so eager that he could scarcely get his breath. He was a warm-hearted, impetuous boy, and he had forgotten all his own trouble in Seppi's.

The girl watched him. She wanted to explain matters to him. Pointing to the money, she stammered, in English, "Some time—Carema! patience! patience!

"Yes, it does need patience," said John, excitedly, springing to his feet. "There are not sixteen dollars, and they have cost two years' work! Gentlemen"—he held out his cap—"it will be so little to you—these twenty-four dollars that are needed—but it means home, and wife, and mother to these poor souls."

The cap passed from hand to hand. The men laughed, and some of the women cried, and the crisp notes and coins dropped in fast. When it came back to Seppi it weighed heavy in his hands.

The excitable Italian showed by his sudden gravity how deeply he was moved. He glanced around the circle of kind faces and bowed low.

"It is much," he said at last. "We will go to New York to-day and sail to-morrow. There will be money left for Maria. I thank you."

Then he stood quiet, looking at the ground, the tears making clean paths down his cheeks. It did not need the ship or the voyage. He was already with Maria at home.

Anita seemed to wake as from a stupor. She touched John's elbow.

"Signor, we are going home! I am going to mother!" she said, timidly; and then, like a true Piedmontese, began to dance. She was a homely child, but it was the happiness in her that danced, and that was beautiful to see. Seppi, in a sudden frenzy of joy, ground his organ, beat the kettle, rang the bells.

John stood laughing with the others, but he was more touched than they. Poor and idle as he was, he had been able to do something yet in life.

Some of the ladies had disappeared, and came back now with a valise packed with pretty little gowns for Anita, bright-colored ribbons, and toys. There was even a present for Maria and the bambino at home. The child, flushed and sparkling, bowed low to them all as she bade them farewell. But she ran up to John, and falling on one knee she kissed his hand.

"I will pray for you, signor," she said.

As Seppi and the child disappeared the boarders at Prout's sauntered up to the house to supper. Mr. McCann walked with Israel.

"That is a good fellow," he said. "And he speaks Italian well. We—McCann & Shippen—have one of the largest houses in New York. We want a secretary who is master of French, Italian and German. I'll write for the lad's references, and if they are satisfactory he shall have the place at once."

"They'll be all right," said Israel.

But he was dismayed. The senior partner in McCann & Shippen! And he had taken him for a mechanic out on his holiday!

That pretty little artist, Bessy Henry, had watched the whole scene from her hammock, herself unseen. She, too, looked after John as he walked home across the marshes.

"How good he is," she thought, her eyes growing soft and tender. "There is nobody like him. But he has forgotten—"

John, crossing the marshes, hummed a tune to himself. How fine were those gray tints in the sky, and the soft browns and crimsons in the swamps—could anything be more delicate! The minnows and crabs shooting through the coffee-colored water of the creek, the blue dragon flies—how happy they all were! He wished he could have shaken hands with every one of those men and women who had made Seppi and the child so glad for life. The world was so good, and so full of generous and friendly souls. It was enough to be alive. —Rebecca Harding Davis in Congregationalist.

BULLS.

A "bull" may be said to be a gross contradiction, or blunder in speech. It was derived from one Obadiah Bull, a lawyer in the time of Henry VIII, who was celebrated, rather than famous, for the blunders which he pleaded before the judges.

A witty Irishman, upon being asked for the definition of a bull, said: "If you see two cows lying down alone in the meadow, the one standing up is invariably a bull."

Miss Edgeworth, in her essay on "Irish bulls," gives the following: "When I first saw you, I thought it was you, and now I see it is your brother." "I met you this morning, and you did not come; I'll meet you to-morrow morning, whether you come or not." "Oh, if had stayed in that climate until now I'd have been dead two years."

During the Irish rebellion, an Irish paper published this item: "A man named McCarthy was run over by a passenger train and killed on Wednesday. He was injured in a similar way two years ago."

In 1784 the Irish house of commons issued an order to this effect: Any member unable to write may get another member to frank his letter for him, but only on condition that he certifies with his own handwriting his inability on the back of it."

A well known English epitaph commences as follows:

"Reader, if thou canst read." This is somewhat akin to the hand board which read: "The ford is dangerous when this board is covered by water."—Frank H. Stauffer in the Epoch.

WHERE TO FIND HEAVEN.—There was a Methodist minister who preached one day on heaven. The next morning he was going down town, and he met one of his old wealthy members. This old friend said: "Pastor, you preached a good sermon about heaven. You told all about heaven, but you never told me where heaven is."

"Ah!" said the pastor, "I am glad of the opportunity this morning. I have just come from the hill-top yonder. In that cottage there is a member of your church. She is sick in bed with fever; her two little children are sick in the other bed, and she has not got a bit of coal, or a stick of wood, or flour, or sugar, or any bread. If you will go down town and buy fifty dollars' worth of things, nice provisions, and send them up to her, and then go up there and say, 'My sister, I have brought you these nice provisions in the name of our Lord and Savior.' You ask for a Bible, and you read the twenty-third psalm, and then you get down on your knees and pray. If you don't see heaven before you get all through, I'll pay the bill."

The next morning he said: "Pastor, I saw heaven; and I spent fifteen minutes in heaven as certainly as you are listening."

"O my friends, there are some spectacles that a person never forgets!" said a lecturer, after a graphic description of a terrible accident that he had witnessed. "I'd like to know where they sell 'em," remarked an old lady in the audience who is always mislaying her glasses.—Exchange.

The Dying Son of Erin.

[The following lines were written a number of years ago by a bright, but unfortunate, poet named Dennis O. Sullivan.]

O, Saggarth Aroon, sure I know life is fleeting,
Soon, soon, in the strange earth my poor bones shall lie;
I have said my last prayer, received my last blessing,
And if the Lord's willing I'm ready to die.
But, Saggarth Aroon, can I never again see
The valleys and hills of my dear native land?
When my soul takes its flight from this dark world of sorrow
Will it pass through old Ireland to join the blest band?

O, Saggarth Aroon, sure I know that in heaven
The loved ones are waiting and watching for me;
The Lord knows how anxious I am to be with them,
In those realms of joy, 'mid souls pure and free.
Yet, Saggarth, I pray ere you leave me forever
Relieve the last doubt of a poor, dying soul,
Whose hope, next to God, is to know that when leaving
Will pass through old Ireland on its way to its goal.

Saggarth Aroon, I have kept through all changes
The thrice blessed shamrock to lay on my clay;
And, oh, it has minded me often and often
Of that bright smiling valley, so far, far away.
Then tell me, I pray you, will I ever again see
The place where it grew on my own native sod?
When my body lies cold in the land of the stranger
Will my soul pass through Erin on its way to our God?

Arrah, bless you, my child; sure I thought it was heaven
You wanted to go to the moment you died;
And such is the place on the ticket I'm giving,
But a coupon for Ireland I'll stick to its side.
Your soul shall be free as the wind on the prairies,
And will land you at Cork on the banks of the sea;
And two little angels I'll give you like fairies
To guide you aright o'er mountain and lea.

Arrah, Saggarth Aroon, can't you do any better?
I know that my feelings may peril your grace,
But if you allow me a voice in the matter,
I won't make a landing at any such place.
The spot I long for is sweet Enniskillen,
Among its fair people was I born and bred;
And Corkies I never much fancied while living,
And I don't want to visit them after I'm dead.

Let me fly to the hills where my soul can make merry,
In the North where the shamrock more plentiful grows;
In the counties of Cavan, Formanaugh and Derry
I'll linger till called to a better repose.
And the angels you give me will find it inviting
To visit the shrines in the island of saints;
If they bring from Saint Patrick a small bit of writing
They'll never have reason for any compaints.

A soul, my dear child, that has pinions upon it
Need not be confined to a province so small;
Through Ulster and Munster, and Leinster and Connaught,
In less than a jiffy you're over it all.
Then visit sweet Cork, where your Saggarth was born,
No doubt many new things have come into vogue,
But one thing you'll find, night, noon and morn,
As for centuries back, there's no change in the brogue.

Good mother, assist me in this my last hour,
And, Saggarth Aroon, lay you hand on my head;
Shine your Saggarth for all, and for all you have power,
And I take it for penance for what I have said.
And now since you tell me through Ireland I am passing,
And finding the place so remarkably small,
I'll never let on to the angels in crossing
That we know a distinction in counties at all.

SILAS WEST'S STORY.

It was nine o'clock in the morning, and the yards and offices surrounding the Morley mills presented a spectacle of almost turbulent activity.

A thousand operatives were at work inside the mills, and outside an orderly mob of clerks, truckmen and laborers surged to and fro busily engaged in their various tasks.

The private office of Mr. John Morley, the millionaire owner of this vast establishment, was unoccupied. It was too early for Mr. Morley to make his appearance, but the janitor had carefully dusted the handsome desks and chairs, and arranged everything in perfect order.

From time to time a clerk or an errand boy entered the office and deposited a letter or a parcel on the great man's desk, and then retired with business-like celerity.

Taking advantage of a moment when the office was deserted, a swarthy little man with restless black eyes and a stern, strongly marked face, slipped into the room.

The visitor was Silas West, one of the operatives, but his movements would have made it apparent, if there had been any one to watch him, that he was not in search of his employer.

"Aha!" chuckled Silas, "I am just in time, and I had better not tarry."

He drew from his pocket a small square parcel wrapped in white paper and laid it on the desk by the ink-stand.

The parcel was addressed to "John Morley, Esq.," and was marked "Personal."

Silas West quietly left the place, and after a furtive glance to assure himself that he was not observed, he took a quick turn down a narrow street where there was not a living thing in sight.

"Old Morley didn't know that he had an anarchist among his men," he muttered. "Well, he will never know it now. There is enough dynamite in that thing to kill a dozen men!"

A troubled look came over his face as he talked to himself.

"It is a bad thing to do," he said; "but, curse him, why did he suspend me? An honest workman has a right to take his little spree now and then without having the bread taken out of his mouth. Morley treated me like a dog, and he deserves what he is going to get."

The man walked along with his head down, evidently struggling with unpleasant thoughts.

"Confound it!" he broke out, "I am forgetting the sublime principles of my creed. It has been held by wise and good men that it is right to assassinate a tyrant. These bloated capitalists are in the same box. Whenever one is killed his wealth goes into different hands and is distributed. If we can't have communism we can at least kill off the men with big fortunes, and their money will be scattered by their numerous heirs. Morley's death will be a benefit to mankind."

Still, Silas West did not linger anywhere in the neighborhood of the mills. He knew that the expected explosion might occur at any moment, but a nervous dread took possession of him, and he was seized with a desire to reach his cottage and shut himself up.

"Good news," exclaimed Mrs. West when Silas extered the door.

"How? What is it? I can't understand," stammered her husband, turning his careworn face upon her.

"It is almost too good to be true," replied Mrs. West, half laughing and half crying. "Who would have thought that a millionaire like your Mr. Morley would take the trouble to think of us?"

"Woman! What do you mean?"

"Oh, Silas, how can you look so? Mr. Morley is our friend. He sent his secretary here this morning to request you to return to work, and, Silas, he says that if you will let liquor alone he will promote you, and that this suspension was only for your own good. It was to give you time to think. Now, my dear, don't you agree with me that Mr. Morley is a good man, and won't you promise to turn over a new leaf, and quit that secret society which takes up so much of your time?—for I am sure that half of your trouble comes from going with those strange, repulsive looking men."

Silas West had turned as white as a sheet, and he raised his hand to his head with a groan.

"Husband, are you sick?"

"Where is little Mary?" he asked with a vacant stare.

"Oh, yes; I'll tell you about that, too," said Mrs. West. "Mary, dear little thing, was so delighted over the news that she couldn't rest until she fixed up a pretty bouquet to place on Mr. Morley's desk so that he would find it when he came down."

"My God!" screamed Silas. "Do you mean that—"

"Yes; she went to the mills half an hour ago, and will be here in a few minutes."

With a wild shriek of more than mortal agony, Silas West staggered forward and fell senseless to the floor, just as the muffled sound of an explosion a mile away rattled the windows of the cottage.

* * * * * * * *

It was a long time before Silas West recovered from his attack of brain fever, and when at last he was strong enough in mind and body to listen to the sorrow-stricken woman by his bedside, he silently prayed for death.

"It was so horrible, Silas," said his weeping wife, to have our little golden-haired darling killed in that manner. She was mangled beyond recognition, and the horror of it nearly killed me. But, Silas, there was one bright gleam in the midst of all our trouble. Mr. Morley and his wife came here. They had the funeral arrangements made, and during all the weeks that you have been ill Mr. Morley has footed all the bills and saved us from starvation. We owe him a debt of gratitude that we can never repay."

She paused in her task. Her husband had fainted.

The tragedy caused by the explosion of the dynamite bomb in Mr. Morley's office had been driven out of the public mind by other matters of sensational interest before Silas West was able to return to his work. Some of his fellow operatives told the wretched father that the affair was supposed to be the work of the anarchists, but that no clew had ever been obtained. It was believed that the little girl had waited in the office for Mr. Morley, and the queer looking package had attracted her attention. She had probably handled it, and an unfortunate touch had caused it to explode.

Mr. Morley told his wife that Silas West was the most tender-hearted man he had ever known. He went back to work a changed man. His face wore a look of hopeless sorrow, but he seemed to be entirely devoted to three things—his wife, his work and Mr. Morley.

"No," said Mr. Morley one day; "I am not afraid of anarchist in my mills. I treat my workmen like men, and they appreciate it. But if there is any danger that man, Silas West, will warn me in time. For some reason he has an intense hatred of anything like anarchy. If you mention the name of an anarchist in his hearing he turns white and red and grits his teeth. I tell you, West has a heart of gold! There will be no anarchists around as long as he stays with me."

The patient, pale-faced worker in the Morley mills will doubtless go to his grave and make no sign. His wife wonders sometimes at his tenderness, and his employer thinks him a little cranky in his rigid sense of duty.

Silas West alone knows the cause of his regeneration and reformation, and his secret has made him a feeble old man, although he is still in his thirties.—Atlanta Constitution.

Mr. Froude, in his "Oceana," a record of his late journey around the world, states that in sailing away from New Zealand he went on board an American vessel. He noticed that the crew were of a very motley character, and he said to the American captain: "None of your crew appear to be English-speaking people." The captain answered: "No; I make it an absolute rule never to take in my ship an American, or Englishman, or Irishman, or Scotchman; all my crew are composed of Swedes, Norwegians and Germans, because they do not drink when they go on shore, or if they do, they do it in such moderation that they give me, at any rate, no trouble." Strong drink adds greatly to the difficulties and perils of ocean voyaging.—Advocate.

WHAT A WOMAN CAN DO.

The Philadelphia Call enumerates a few things which a woman can do, and among them the following:

She can say "No" and stick to it for a time.

She can say "No" in such a low, soft voice that it means "Yes."

She can sharpen a lead pencil if you give her plenty of time and plenty of pencils.

She can dance all night in a pair of shoes two sizes too small for her and enjoy every minute of the time.

She can pass a display window of a dry goods store without stopping—if she is running to catch a train.

She can walk half the night with a colicky baby in her arms without once expressing a desire to murder the infant.

She can appreciate a kiss from her husband 75 years after the marriage ceremony has taken place.

She can suffer abuse and neglect for years which one touch of kindness or consideration will drive from her recollection.

She can go to the theater every evening and the matinee on Wednesday and Saturday, and still possess sufficient strength to attend a Sunday night sacred concert.

She can go to church and afterwards tell you what every women in the congregation had on, and in some rare instances can give a faint idea what the text was.

She can look her husband square in the eye when he tells her some cock-and-bull story about being "detained at the office," without betraying in the least that she knows him to be a collossal liar.

She can rumple up $17,000 worth of dress goods and buy a spool of thread, with an order to have it delivered four miles away, in a style that will transfix the proprietor of the establishment with admiration.

She can—but what's the use? A woman can do anything or everything, and do it well. She can do more in a minute than a man can do in an hour, and do it better. She can make the alleged lords of creation bow down to her own sweet will, and they will never know it. Yes, a woman can do everything, with but one exception; she cannot climb a tree.

THE INVENTOR OF THE CIRCULAR SAW.

In a lonely, secluded spot in the northwest corner of the cemetery, near the ever-beautiful little village of Richmond, Kalamazoo county, Mich., the reader can find on a pure white marble slab nearly concealed from view by a large cluster of lilac bushes, engraved the simple inscription, "Benjamin Cummings, born 1772, died A. D. 1843." And who was Benjamin Cummings? He was the inventor of the circular saw now in use in this country and in Europe. Nearly sixty years ago, at Burtonville, New York and Amsterdam, this man hammered out, at his own blacksmith's anvil, the first circular saw known to mankind. He was a noted pioneer in Richmond; a first cousin to one of the Presidents of the United States, a slave owner in New York state; a leading Mason in the days of Morgan, at whose table the very elect of the great state of New York feasted and drank freely of his choice liquors and wines; a vessel owner on the North river before the days of steamboats; a captain in the war of 1812, where, after having three horses shot under him, with one stroke of his sword he brought his superior officer to the ground for insult, and because he was a traitor and a coward; and after having been court-martialed, instead of being shot, he was appointed colonel in his place. In this lonely grave are the ashes of the man who nearly seventy years ago, at Albany, N. Y., took up and moved bodily large brick buildings, and, to the wonder and astonishment of the world, constructed a mile and a half of the Erie Canal through a bed of rock, and, who also built, on contract, those first low bridges over the same. He also aided in the construction of the first ten miles of railroad built in the United States, and founded both the villages of Esperence and Bostonville on the Schoharie, near Amsterdam. The study and aim of this man's life appeared to be to do that which none other could accomplish, and when the object sought was secured he passed it as quietly by as he would the pebbles of the seashore.—California Architect.

WASN'T IN THE COMMANDMENTS.

The other noon as a Michigan-avenue grocer was carefully sorting over a lot of apples to hide the soft spots from the public, a man with a pencil in one hand and a piece of paper in the other hurriedly entered, and said:—

"Say! you know the old saying about a bird in the hand being worth two in the bush?"

"Yes."

"Well, whereabouts in the Scriptures is it? Feller down here wants to bet me it is in Genesis and I'm dead certain it's in Luke. Say! help me out and I'll whack up with you!"

"Well, now," slowly answered the grocer, "I've read it a hundred times, but just where it is I can't say."

"Try and think."

He puckered his mouth, drew down his left eye and carefully passed an apple from one hand to the other, but he couldn't get there.

"I know it isn't in the ten commandments," he mused, "but I'll be hanged if I can locate it."

"Sorry, very sorry," said the other. "I'll have to take the bluff and let the fellow pass on."

He went off and had been gone about ten minutes when the grocer discovered that two smoked hams which had been hanging near the alley door were missing. It was plain enough that he had been "worked" to keep his attention attracted, and when he realized this the way he began at chapter first of the good book and banged things clear down to the last page was so awful to hear that a policeman had to disperse the crowd which gathered.—Detroit Free Press.

Better Things.

Better to smell the violet cool than sip the glowing wine;
Better to hark a hidden brook than watch a diamond shine.

Better the love of a gentle heart than beauty's favor proud;
Better the rose's living seed than roses in a crowd.

Better to love in loneliness than to bask in love all day;
Better the fountain in the heart than the fountain by the way.

Better be fed by a mother's hand than eat alone at will;
Better to trust in God than say, "My goods my storehouse fill."

Better to be a little wise than in knowledge to abound;
Better to teach a child than toil to fill perfection's round.

Better to sit at a master's feet than thrill a listening state;
Better to suspect that thou art proud than be sure that thou art great.

Better to walk the real unseen than watch the hour's event;
Better the "well done" at the last, than the air with shouting rent.

Better to have a quiet grief than a hurrying delight;
Better the twilight of the dawn than the noonday bright.

Better a death, when work is done than earth's most favored birth;
Better a child in God's great house than the king of all the earth.

—George Macdonald.

GEORGE'S LAST REQUEST.

"George Ferguson, you have gone a little too far."

Pale with indignation and outraged pride, the young woman looked him sternly in the face.

"Why, Laura," he stammered, in helpless confusion. "I—I—er—ah—I didn't think you would care."

"Didn't think I would care?" she echoed, with freezing mockery. "Did you think, sir, that an acquaintience of ten or twelve months entitled you to a privilege, unasked, that my most intimate friends of many years' standing would not have dared to claim? Have you no conception, sir, of the meaning of the word presumption?"

What has this young man done?

Intoxicated by her beauty, and fancying he saw in her glorous dark eyes a challenge, half coy, half saucy, he had rapturously kissed her.

Dumb with astonishment, George Ferguson now quailed before the lightning-like indignation of the high-spirited girl. He saw he had made a fatal mistake.

"This must end our acquaintance, Mr. Ferguson," she said. "In many respects it has been a pleasant one. I had come to esteem you highly—to regard you as a young man of high and noble impulses, free the from trivialties, the weakness, the inordinate self-conceit, and assurance that the spirit of the age seems to infuse into mental constitutions of the young man of modern society. You have thrown yourself from the pedestal upon which I had mistakenly placed you. Mr. Ferguson," she continued, sadly, "hereafter we meet as strangers."

"Be it so, Laura Kajones," replied he, with recovered self-possession. "I shall not presume to question your right to dismiss me thus summarily, however strongly I might feel inclined to protest against the injustice of your act in so doing. I bow to your mandate. Henceforth we are strangers. But before I take my last farewell of you, as I am now about to do, and go out into the world to struggle with it as only a sorrowing, lonely man, deprived of his last earthly hope, must struggle to keep bitter despair from gnawing his heart strings asunder—before I leave forever the presence of one with whom I have passed so many happy hours, whose memory will cling to me through all the cheerless years that may yet drag their weary length over my head, I have one last request to make of you."

"What is it, sir?"

"Please get up off my lap."—Chicago Tribune.

A WISE WASP.

While sitting, one summer day, at the side of the house, on a platform which served as a piazza, but was roofed only by the branches of two large trees, something dropped upon my head and rolled into my lap, when I saw a large, white-bodied spider in the clutches of a small wasp. Hastily brushing these unceremonious visitors on to the floor, I watched to see if the wasp would succeed in flying away with his huge enemy. After a struggle the spider lay quiet, and the wasp ran around, seizing first one part, then another, but finally went away, as I supposed, for help. In about a quarter of an hour he returned, still alone, and began trying again, as I thought to find some place where he could seize the round body and carry it away. Again he departed without his spider. This time I watched him and saw him disappear at the edge of the lawn, under a pear tree, and, following, found him, after searching, diligently at work with another wasp enlarging a hole in the ground, having already thrown out quite a little mound of earth. I was surprised, for I did not then know that any kind of wasp lived in the ground.

I returned to the piazza, and soon, when the wasp came back, I was convinced, by more careful watching, that he was measuring each part of the spider's body instead of trying to get hold of it. The antennæ seemed to be the organs, mostly employed in this operation. When he went home again, I was before him and saw him him meet his co-worker, put his head close to his, and evidently informed him that the doorway was not yet big enough, for they fell busily at work enlarging it. Then more measuring, more digging, until, after three long hours, he returned this time with his friend, and they carried away their prey and bestowed it in their underground home.—The Owl.

A fisherman will always be found reeling a good deal when the fishing is good, and the Boston Post thinks perhaps it may be the bait.

SETTLED THE BILL.

A circuit rider, in a neighborhood with which he was unacquainted, stopped a man in the road and asked:

"My friend can you tell me of a place where a preacher can stay all night without money and without price?"

"Yes, in the woods."

"Of course, but can't you tell me of some house?"

"Yas (pointing), that one up on the hill up yonder."

"Will it cost me anything?"

"Not a cent."

"Who lives there?"

"Nobody."

"I don't want to stay in a vacant house. Come, now, my good man, tell me of a place."

"Wall, I will. Go about two miles down. The first house you strike will be old Sam Potter's. He'll take you in."

"But, will he charge anything?"

"Not a cent."

"Treat me well, of course."

"Like er judge—give you the best he has in his house."

"Will he feed my horse?"

"He'll founder him, if you say so."

"I am a thousand times obliged to you."

"Say," the man called after the preacher started off, "he's a sorter curious fellow an' if you ask him how much he charges he'll git mad. Jest act like you was at home, an' it'll be all right with him."

"Thank you, I'll do so."

The preacher found old Potter to be a tall, gaunt man, with a harsh voice and grizzled beard. Just before bed time the minister asked Mr. Potter if he would join him in prayer.

"Not jest yit," Potter replied. "Jest git down an' pray when you feel like it. Don't wait on me, fur I've got to feed the dogs afore I go to bed."

After breakfast the next morning, when the preacher's horse had been saddled, the reverend gentleman turned to Potter and said:

"When I leave a place I always feel that I am forgetting something."

"Wall, ain't yer?"

"No, I think not," the preacher replied, as he began to fumble in his saddle-bags. "No, I haven't forgotten anything."

"I'm purty certain that you have. You've forgotten to pay me."

"What? I didn't know you charged anything."

"You know it now."

"But, my dear sir, I am a poor preacher."

"Never hearn you preach, but jedgin' by the way you talk, I reckin you air er very po' preacher."

"I mean that I haven't any money."

"Not my fault."

"That's all very well, but I can't pay you anything."

"Then I'll have to take it outen your hide."

"Look here, my friend———"

"Oh, I'm lookin'. Goin' to keep my eyes on you."

"I say a man told me that I could stay here without charge."

"Yas, but I wasn't the man."

"This is surely a very awkward position. I really do not not know what to do."

"Settle up, is the best advice I can offer to you."

"But I really can't."

"Then some of your hide must come off."

"I wish you had more soul."

"Yas, an' I wish you had more money."

"You certainly would not commit an act of violence merely for a few dimes?"

"Yas, b'lieve I would."

"If you'll let me off I'll send you the money."

"No, I'm erfeered that after you begin to feed your flock you won't think of a sinner like me."

"Well, I declare I'm in a very awkward position."

"Yes, so I've hearn."

"Is there no way by which we can settle this little affair?"

"Oh, yes; pay up.

"But I tell you I have no money."

"Yes, so I've hearn."

"Well, as you have driven me to the wall I suppose I must fight you."

"That's my ticket. Skin yourself."

The preacher took of his alpacca coat, folded it and put it on the bench, then after rolling up his shirt sleeves, he said:—

"Just step this way, please."

Mr. Potter stepped that way and was promptly knocked down. He got up just in time to be knocked down again. The next time he got up cautiously and tried to seize the preacher, but was knocked flat on his back.

"Well, parson," he said, getting up, "I'm well-paid. Look here," he continued, brushing himself, "you've got to eat dinner with me before you go. At first I didn't think you had much religion, but now I know that you are one of the elect. John, take the parson's horse back to the stable, kan't afford to let you go, sir. It was old Bill Simons that told you to come over here, an' he has been dodgin' round all the mornin' to see you whipped. Say, what business was you in before you 'gunter preaching?"

"I was a prize fighter," the preacher replied, as he seated himself and smoothed his hair.—Arkansas Traveller.

A PRECAUTIONARY MEASURE.—"Hasn't the baker sent any bread for supper, Elfleda?" inquired Mr. Magruder, as he surveyed the table. "I told him not to bring any this evening, Callithumpian," responded the young wife, sweetly. "I have baked a loaf myself. It will be brought on in a moment—what are you doing, Callithumpian?" "I am putting a prop under the table leaf," said the young husband, with forced calmness.—Chicago Tribune.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 9, 1888.

"HOORAY!"

HARRISON AND MORTON ELECTED.

LET THE EAGLE SCREAM!

A REPUBLICAN FIELD DAY.

PROTECTION VINDICATED.

CLEVELAND REJECTED BY HIS OWN STATE.

IT IS A BIG VICTORY,

AND DON'T YOU FORGET IT!

The battle has been fought, and victory perches upon the Republican banner. Benjamin Harrison and Levi P. Morton have been elected president and vice president of the United States for the next four years. Every Northern state, except Connecticut and New Jersey, has been swept by the Republicans by increased majorities. All the states carried by Blaine four years ago were carried by the Republicans on Tuesday, with the addition of New York, Indiana, and also West Virginia, it is believed. The vote was an unprecedentedly large one, and not only is the national ticket elected, but there will be a Republican majority of 10 or 12 in the House of Representatives.

Connecticut gives Cleveland a plurality of only 334, as against 1200 in 1884. There is no election of governor by the people, but the Legislature is Republican and will elect their state ticket.

New York gives Harrison a plurality of nearly 12,000, but reëlects Gov. Hill by a small majority. In New York city Grant, the Tammany candidate for mayor, defeats Mayor Hewitt.

Indiana gives Harrison a plurality of about 2000 votes.

Speaker Carlise is reëlected by a good majority, but he won't be speaker again all the same.

Delaware astonishes the nation by choosing a Legislature which will send a Republican to the United States Senate, for the first time in the history of the state.

West Virginia is conceded to the Republicans by a plurality of 400 to 700. This would elect Harrison without New York.

IN MASSACHUSETTS.

The Bay State voters came out in unwonted forces Tuesday, the whole number of votes cast, with two towns to hear from, being 344,082, against 295,309 in 1884. The presidential vote stands: Harrison, 183,474; Cleveland, 151,990; Fisk, 8636; plurality for Harrison, 31,484. Four years ago the vote stood: Blaine, 142,699; Cleveland, 118,623; Butler, 23,813; St. John 10,174. The vote for governor is: Ames, 180,724; Russell, 152,942; Earle, 9170; plurality for Ames, 27,782.

The Congressional delegation will stand as at present, Republicans 10, Democrats 2. Mr. Beard is defeated in the 3d district by John F. Andrew, but Walker is elected in the 10th district by a good majority.

The Legislature is strongly Republican as usual, and is reported to have a goodly majority opposed to oleomorgarine. Mr. Bates of North Brookfield is defeated in his candidacy for the Honse, and his boom for the speakership suffers a sudden collapse.

PALMER AND VICINITY.

Rev. F. W. Betts talked to the children at the state primary school last Sunday morning.

The W. C. T. U. will hold a meeting in the parlors of the Congregational church next Tuesday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

The Christian Endeavor Society of this place will visit Warren this evening, by invitation of the society of that place.

A large number of the Democratic citizens of this place attended the last rally of the campaign at Ware Monday evening.

C. E. Park, wife and daughter of Brattleboro were guests of Mr. and Mrs. C. P. Stone at the Converse House over Sunday.

The Patterson Club held its second social gathering of the season at the residence of Mrs. S. S. Taft on Central street Wednesday evening.

About 40 uniforms, belonging to the Old Roman Battalion, were loaned to the Democrats of Ware Monday evening for the parade at that place.

An informal social gathering and dance occurred at the Weeks House Monday evening, in which a few of the young people of the village participated.

The aggregate passenger and freight receipts of the New London Northern Railroad at this station for the past month amounted to about $8000.

Locomotive "W. H. Barnes" of the New London Northern Railroad broke a cylinder-head near Brattleboro last Saturday, and has been sent into the repair shops.

A campaign contribution of some very nice fried pies from L. A. Royce's restaurant was appreciated by the employes of the JOURNAL work rooms Tuesday.

R. Lindley, late of Lindley & Co., woolen manufacturers of North Monson, has bought a woolen mill at Westerly, R. I., and will move his family there at once.

George W. Lyman has closed a contract with Stillman Ellis for the erection of a large two-story tenement house, on the corner of Walnut street and Converse avenue.

S. C. Hatch, a former resident and well known here, was killed by the cars at South Framingham last Saturday evening, on the line of the Boston & Albany Railroad.

Charles E. Fuller has bought "Midgit," a well known Millers Falls stepper, to match his trotting mare "Pede." He expects to have some lively "brushes" this winter with his new pair.

Electrician Geer, who so ably manages the affairs of the Thomson–Houston Electric Company at this place, has returned from a wedding trip and taken rooms at the Converse House.

A male chorus choir, composed of about 20 voices, will render a sacred concert, under the direction of Wilbur F. Miller, at the Second Congregational church some time during the month.

One of the new guide-boards recently erected was torn down last week by some malevolent persons and placed in the Catholic cemetery on the road to Thorndike. As a rule they are put up too near the ground.

Complaint has been made to the selectmen that an unknown dog has of late occupied his time in frightening horses in the vicinity of Thorndike, and Patrick Hurley claims that the recent death of his horse was due to its having been frightened by this same canine.

John Slattery, employed in the New London Northern rail shop, had his leg badly lacerated while unloading rails from a car last Saturday. The injured man had his wound dressed by Dr. Holbrook, and is doing well at present.

Some fun is announced for to-morrow evening at 7.30, when an election bet is to be settled by the Republican being given a wheelbarrow ride by the Democrat, the journey being from a point on Main street, near Knox, to the bank and return.

There were three of them, the one in the center was "completely gone," while the others were in pretty bad shape, and as they staggered up the street singing "We'll Rally Round the Flag," they created considerable amusement for the crowd.

The reading at the Baptist church Wednesday evening by Eliza Bertha Cheney was much enjoyed by all who were present. The singing by Palmer M. Taylor of Springfield was very good, and the Auxiliary Workers will net a small sum from the entertainment.

The Christian Endeavor Society of the Congregational church has arranged for a lecture, Nov. 27th, by Rev. W. W. Sleeper, the title being "A Musical Journey from Vienna to Constantinople." He will be assisted by Miss Mary E. Sleeper, a noted contralto of Worcester.

The Republicans are preparing for a celebration of their victory to-morrow evening, with a parade, fireworks, etc. All Republicans are requested to illuminate their houses and places of business, and a meeting will be held at the court room this evening at 7.30 to perfect plans.

The Second Congregational church was crowded to its utmost capacity last Sunday evening, the occasion being the annual harvest concert, which was carried out by the children in a very creditable manner. The autumnal decorations around the platform were very attractive and well arranged.

C. J. Fisher & Company of Boston, who established a branch stock brokers' office in Strong's block some time ago, are doing a very flourishing business, and as increased facilities are demanded, the room formerly occupied by Conner, the barber, has been leased by this firm and will be used as a private office.

Active measures are being taken toward the formation of a brass sextette for concert work, and the proposed organization will hold its first rehearsal some time this month. It will be composed of all good musicians, and as soon as they become accustomed to each other some good music will undoubtedly be heard.

The statement in a recent issue of this paper that Elmer G. Moulton of Wales had been arrested for larceny of a horse appears to have had no foundation. He was arrested for liquor selling, and for this offense was tried in the district court last Saturday. The evidence wholly failed to support the charge and he was acquitted.

The concert at Willimantic next Tuesday evening by the Levy concert and opera company will no doubt attract quite a number from this vicinity, especially as round-trip tickets, including reserved seats in good location, are only $2. Levy is the greatest cornetist on earth, and the concert company is composed of first-class artists. It will be necessary to take the 2.05 p. m. train from this place in order to hear the whole performance, and a special train will return after the opera.

At a probate court held in Springfield Wednesday the will of Samuel S. Livermore, late of Brimfield, Mary Livermore executrix, was probated. Guardians appointed—Charles A. Rich of Frederick E. and John W. Reid of Ludlow, minors; Henry W. Brown of Augusta Calkins of Brimfield, insane. An inventory was filed in the estate of Samuel P. Clough, late of Palmer, personal $114, real estate $500. Accounts were filed in the estate of Joseph L. Reynolds, late of Monson; Austin Newell, late of Monson; George S. Shearer of Ludlow; Hattie M. Gates of Palmer. An allowance was granted to Maria S. Clough from the estate of Samuel P. Clough, late of Palmer.

The Election in Palmer.

The Republicans pulled themselves together once more and gave their candidates a good majority, as the figures below will show:

Sudden Death.

Oliver Wolcott, a prominent citizen of East Longmeadow and a descendant of one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, died in his seat on the Governor's train yesterday morning between Springfield and Palmer. He was sitting in a seat beside another passenger with whom he talked rationally for some time. He did not appear to be ill, but leaned back against the car window and breathed his last without even the slightest struggle, death resulting from apoplexy. When the train reached Palmer his remains were placed upon a stretcher and removed to Loomis' undertaking rooms, where Medical Examiner Holbrook viewed the body. Upon the dead man's person were found many documents pertaining to his business, besides a check for $1900 and about $65 in bills and loose change. A credential card, issued by the East Longmeadow Grange, was the means by which he was identified. The remains were conveyed to East Longmeadow on the 5.32 p. m. train. Mr. Wolcott was born in East Longmeadow and was identified with one of its leading industries. He has been honored with many town offices, and has served as representative to the Legislature. He was about 65 years of age and was a member of Hampden Lodge of Masons of Springfield, and of the Methodist church of his native town.

The Pool Tournament.

The pool tournament which opened Monday evening at the Brunswick Billard Parlors has been well attended, and some of the contests have been interesting. There is considerable interest manifested in the result of to-morrow evening's games, and quite a number of the sporting men from the surrounding towns and villages are expected to be present. The following is the result of games played up to last evening: Monday, Thomas Parker of Palmer, 11; Joseph Fallardeau of Thorndike, 4. J. F. O'Brien, referee. Tuesday, Martin Rooney of Palmer, 11, Henry Thompson of Palmer, 4. James Kenare, referee. Wednesday, John Dawson of Palmer, 11; A. Larnnier of Wales, 5. Martin Rooney, referee. Thursday, Smith of Springfield, 11; C. W. Handy of Palmer, 7. J. T. Lynch referee. Two games will be played this evening, the first between Martin Rooney and John Dawson, and the second between Thomas Parker and Smith, while to-morrow evening the two winners will play the finals for first and second prizes, and the two losers will play for the third prize. After the above an exhibition of pool playing will be given by F. H. Courtney of Worcester, champion of Central Massachusetts, who will play with the winner of the first prize in the tournament. On the Saturday evening following an exhibition of sparring will be given by Thomas F. Dorsey of Worcester and Nelson Rochet of Canada.

The Royal Arcanum Hunt.

An enthusiastic meeting was held at the district court room Monday evening, attended by those interested in arranging a programme for the annual hunt which is to be held under the auspices of the Royal Arcanum, yet those outside of that order and many in the surrounding towns and villages will receive invitations and participate. The meeting was called to order by Judge Robinson, and Charles E. Fish chosen chairman and H. P. Holden secretary. It was voted to assign next Tuesday as the day for the hunt, while on the following evening a fine supper will be served at the Weeks House, while there will also be a social gathering and a dance, with a good orchestra in attendance. The members of the different teams, which are captained by H. P. Holden and F. N. Carpenter, are allowed the privilege of inviting their wives and lady friends to the social and dance, but as a guarantee of good faith, and to assure the management that the expense will be borne by the losing side, it will be necessary for all those intending to participate to deposit the required sum with a committee composed of George A. Rice, Andrew Pinney and George F. Erskine, which meets at 7.30 to-morrow evening at the office of D. F. Holden, for the purpose of receiving this guarantee and to choose sides. This committee has also been assigned the duty of arranging the details, so that each person will have a printed list of those who compose each team and the count for the different kinds of game, before the hunt takes place.

A Novel Invention.

W. R. Parks has just perfected an ingenious arrangement which will be known as the "Parks Oil Burner." It is a simple contrivance, and can be easily attached to or placed within hot-air furnaces, and also in coal and wood stoves, it being the intention of the inventor to make kerosene oil take the place of wood and coal for heating purposes. The apparatus is composed of a retort for heating the oil, which is placed inside the furnace door, and occupies about as much space as a cigar box. A low grade of refined oil is fed from a tank near the boiler, and passes through the chambers of the retort where it becomes heated, then it passes into a receiver for the heated gas, and back again into the retort, thereby keeping it continually hot and causing a large flame, without smoke, to issue forth by means of a deflecting-plate on top of the retort, which also serves to spread the fire. The oil is under air pressure, and the tank from which it is fed will hold 50 gallons. It will stand a pressure of from 25 to 30 pounds, and has an air pump attached which can be made to work automatically if desired, while on top of the tank is a gauge which indicates the pressure within. It will easily run a 25-horse power boiler. It will also produce the same amount of heat that a fire of wood or coal will produce, and at a saving of 25 per cent, while there are no obnoxious gases coming from the blaze. The inventor thinks he has "hit the nail on the head," and has filed an application for a patent.

A Dead Body Found.

The body of an unknown man was found Monday morning in a dilapidated shed on the farm of the Joseph King estate near West Brimfield by a Frenchman who happened to look into the structure while passing. He reported the discovery to neighbors, who quickly notified Medical Examiner Holbrook, who viewed the remains, but found no marks of violence on any portion of the body, or anything that would indicate foul play, consequently an autopsy was deemed unnecessary. It is thought the man was a tramp, as he was seen in that vicinity about 10.30 Sunday morning by the Blodgett boys, acting so strangely that they dared not approach him. It is the opinion of the medical examiner that his death was due to apoplexy or heart-disease. The man was apparently about 60 years of age, had gray side-whiskers and moustache, a fair physique, and was 5 feet 6 inches in height and weighed about 125 pounds. He was fairly well dressed in a blue sack-coat, with vest and trousers of the same material. There was an old scar upon his forehead and a circle around his left ring finger, indicating that he had quite recently worn a ring, but none was found upon his person. A bundle containing underclothing, etc., was found near him in the building, as was also a pair of old shoes, which he had evidently discarded for a new pair which were on his feet. His hat also was found close by, and was of soft dark material, while in his pockets were eye-glasses, a "T. D." pipe and a quantity of tobacco. The remains were taken in charge by Undertaker Loomis that afternoon, and placed in the tomb at the cemetery on Thorndike street to await identification.

Election Notes.

It was a very quiet election locally, free from the usual party wrangles and disputes.

Are you a winner or not? If not, it is time to pay up your bets and shake hands all round.

Most of the "stay-at-homes" were out, as illustrated by the Republican plurality of twenty-five votes.

J. W. Weeks, with his tally-ho coach, did good service in conveying voters to and from the town house.

A. H. Willis, F. R. Sistare, D. W. Taft and T. W. Kenefick were among former residents who came home to vote Tuesday.

The daily newspapers were in great demand Wednesday morning, and LeGro & Lynde's news-room was literally packed at intervals.

There was no particular excitement on the streets Tuesday evening, for whichever way the latest bulletins read all seemed to receive the news good-naturedly.

Some of the more enthusiastic politicians remained up Tuesday night to get the latest election returns and pay up their bets on the result of the different doubtful states.

The "I-told-you-sos" have been exceedingly numerous this week, and the persons who lost their guess and have not yet been attacked by this political bore may be considered fortunate.

The aggregate number of votes polled here on election day was 843, which is the largest in the annals of the town. Four years ago Palmer gave the three presidential candidates 644 votes.

Election returns were received Tuesday night at the union passenger station and at Hibernian Hall. The latter place was well filled nearly all night, the returns coming in until 4 o'clock Wednesday morning.

The dull skies and frequent drops of rain Tuesday morning made the third-party men smile, for it started in with every appearance of being good Prohibition (Democratic) weather, but the wind changed and so did the political weather-vane.

The average political prognosticator, who has busied himself for the past few weeks in trying to foretell the result of the election, has not taken to himself a pair of wings, but remains among us and will be heard from just the same in future campaigns.

There was no happier man in town Tuesday evening than W. W. Leach, the representative-elect from the 10th Hampden district. He shook the hands of Republicans and Democrats alike. He had good reason for his cheerfulness, too, for it isn't always that a candidate can carry every town in the district so handsomely. Somehow the voters did not seem inclined to follow the Republican's advice and "let the young man wait."

Over forty of the leading Republicans of the town assembled at the Weeks House Tuesday evening and gave a supper and reception to Representative-elect Leach. Speeches were made by Hon. Charles L. Gardner, Lawyer S. S. Taft, Judge Robinson, C. E. Fish, W. W. Leach, Dr. Holbrook and others. The election returns were received and read during the feast, and the occasion was highly enjoyable.

THORNDIKE.

There will be a harvest supper and entertainment in the Congregational church vestry next Tuesday evening, for the benefit of the society.

WALES.

H. T. Smith is sending off 200 barrels of apples.

Wales as usual cast two Republican votes to one Democratic. All but 16 of the voters voted—two of those were sick, five out of town and nine indisposed. Half an hour before the time to open the polls it was discovered that Congressman Rockwell's name was on the ticket in place of J. H. Walker, and not a sticker in town. To meet the emergency H. A. McFarland drove his horse 6 miles in 20 minutes, and obtained stickers, arriving in ample time.

PALMER CENTER.

A large party of young friends met with Miss Abbie Trumbull Tuesday evening, to help celebrate her sixteenth birthday. Refreshments were served, and dancing occupied the evening. Several handsome presents were left as souvenirs of the occasion.

There is one man in town who is quite an enthusiast for Harrison. He returned from a visit on Wednesday of last week, and finding it was the last day of registering returned on foot to Palmer after having walked here. It is safe to say there is not another such in town. He made the remark "I would walk ten miles to vote for Harrison."

WILBRAHAM.

The Willing Workers met at the Congregational parsonage Thursday afternoon and evening.

Miss Eliza Adams has gone to Amsterdam, N. Y., to spend the winter with her sister, Mrs. S. Coe.

Charlie Beebe, son of the late Marcus Beebe, who has been in Colorado the past few years, has returned home.

George Soule of Bridgeport, Ct., has bought the residence of J. S. Albray, on Main street, with farm adjoining, and will take possession soon.

Rev. M. S. Howard was presented with a gold-headed cane and a sum of money by his parishioners last Thursday evening. H. M. Bliss made the presentation speech, which was happily responded to by Mr. Howard.

THREE RIVERS.

G. Beecher Orcutt is attending a French school in Springfield.

There will be a concert at the Baptist church next Sunday evening.

Miss Kattie L. Webb, teacher of the third primary, is quite sick with a fever.

Miss Nettie Milliken is at home from Northfield, where she has been attending Moody's school.

Mrs. E. H. Fales of Elgin, Ill., has been the guest of her brother-in-law, Station Agent E. L. Derby, this week,

F. A. Parsons, principal of the grammar school, has been absent from his duties this week on account of the mumps.

Dr. Silas Ruggles entertained a few of his friends Tuesday night with an oyster supper while waiting for election returns.

A certain young lady seemed somewhat vexed Wednesday night when informed that Harrison was elected, as she had bet on Cleveland.

Burglars broke into the store formerly occupied by G. E. Dalrymple, but now used for an auction room, Wednesday night, and 20 pairs of pants, two blue overcoats and some jewelry was stolen. Officers have no trace of the thieves.

MONSON.

Harry Chapin is very sick with typhoid fever.

Willie King is quite ill with typhoid fever.

Fred Tucker of Andover college was at home Tuesday.

William Bell of Franklin is the guest of his mother, Mrs. Jane Bell.

Charles Miller of New York is visiting Lyman Miller for a few weeks.

George Holdridge and wife of Enfield are the guests of Mrs. Luther Clark.

Rev. J. F. Lee's residence presents a handsome appearance as it nears completion.

The third dance of the series will be held at Green's Hall to-night. Music by Lane's Orchestra.

The regular monthly meeting of the Marcus Keep Post, G. A. R., will be held at the headquarters next Monday evening.

The ball game that was to have been played last Saturday between the Wide Awakes of Palmer and the Monson academy nine was postponed on account of rain.

Last Sunday over thirty were taken into the Methodist church on probation, four on full membership, and one by letter. Next Sunday about thirty children will also be taken into the church on probation.

A Bold Mid-day Robbery.

A very bold a successful attempt was made last Friday noon to burglarize the New London Northern Railroad station. C. L. Stiles, the station agent, left the depot at noon for dinner, and when he returned found the money drawer and ticket case in the middle of the floor, and $50 missing. He thinks the thieves were secreted in the freight house when he locked up. They forced open the ticket office with a chisel, but no other marks were to be seen. Although word was at once sent to the surrounding towns, no clue has yet been obtained of the robbers. As the agent is responsible for money left in the office, the loss falls on Mr. Stiles.

Terrible Accident to a Mill Employe.

James Savage, an employe at Cushman's mill, met with a terrible accident Saturday morning. He was at work with the evaporator, used for the purpose of drying cloth. He had just started the machine, and as some of the cloth was hanging over the side, he tried to push it in while the machine was in motion. In doing so his hand was caught in the cloth and was wound around the axle three times, breaking the bone in two places, and terribly mangling the flesh, so that the bone protruded nearly six inches. Unless the machine had been stopped immediately the man would have been killed. Drs. Fuller, Ellis and Rand were summoned at once, who found the man injured about the head also. He was carried to his home near by, where the doctors decided that amputation was necessary, and the arm was taken off near the shoulder. He has a wife and three small children who are dependent upon his daily labor for their support, and the blow is a hard one to them.

This is the sixth accident that has happened in this mill since it was built.

The Election.

Election day passed off very quietly, but the voters were nearly all out. The town cast 615 votes to 613 last year, and it is the largest vote ever cast in the history of the town. The election returns were received at the town hall in the evening, where a very large crowd assembled. A telephone was put into the hall for the occasion, which made it very convenient. The result in Monson was as follows: Harrison 349, Cleveland 240, Fisk 24; Ames 348, Russell 242, Earle 24; Rockwell 351, Ely 240, Cutler 24; Gunn 350, Merritt 241, Alger 24; Clark 351, Whitman 240, Wright 24; Bridge 375, Hall 240; Russell 615, Spooner 615; Metcalf 345, Robinson 251, Bowen 19; Potter 334, Bugbee 248, Wall 29.

At the special town meeting the town voted to accept the highway from John Dower's house to Pleasant street.

Rev. F. S. Hatch's lecture on "Paris" at the academy will be well worth attending. Mr. Hatch is a pleasing speaker, and will illustrate his lecture by stereopticon views. The second lecture subject will be "Switzerland."

POINTERS.

If all rumors are correct, several more silk hats will be worn before long, over the recent election.

A. A. Gage's residence was handsomely illuminated Thursday evening in honor of Harrison's election.

Republicans of all ages are giving vent to their feelings, while the Democratic lamentations are long and loud.

A salute of 38 guns was fired from the hill near the town hall Thursday night, in commemoration of Harrison's election.

The Democrat who was obliged to go under the Harrison and Morton flag in front of Central block and cheer for the candidates, swallowed the bitterest pill in his life.

A prominent Democrat has a whisky barrel in front of his office labeled "Pure Whisky," as a take-off on the Republicans, but the barrel speaks for itself, it is empty.

R. M. Reynolds went to New York City after voting Tuesday, and was at the Republican headquarters, where Chairman Quay and Vice-Chairman Clarkson received the returns.

One election bet is rather amusing. A superintendent of one of the mills, in a weak moment bet on Cleveland, and in consequence has to wheel his son to the mill three times a day for three days in a common wheelbarrow.

WARE AND VICINITY.

Royal Smith has been missing since Saturday night, and when last seen was quite drunk. It is suspected he may have been drowned in the river.

Twenty-three acres of the best wood land in this vicinity, part of the estate of the late Homer Breckenridge, is to be sold at auction to-morrow.

Watson Brown, a very superior blacksmith when sober, had his leg broken in a drunken squabble on Tuesday evening, and was taken to the poor house.

The new directory of Ware and Gilbertville has just been issued by R. S. Dillon & Co. A great deal of pains has been taken to make it correct, and we believe it to be so in the main.

Malcomb Campbell has made arrangements with the business men so that his son Herbert will remove the ashes and other refuse from their places of business once a week during the winter.

Some day next week it is expected the Republicans will have a celebration of their victory. If so, there will probably be a large number here from Springfield, Northampton and other places.

There is to be a meeting of the Sons of Veterans next Monday evening at Grand Army Hall, to choose officers and send in an application for a charter to form a camp of the Sons of Veterans in Ware.

It is said that one of the speakers at the Democratic rally Monday evening used language in reference to Rev. E. Hitchcock that was too vulgar and low to bear repeating, thus disgusting some of their would-be friends.

The first lecture of the Ware lecture course will be given at the town hall next Tuesday evening by A. E. Winship, upon "Street Rambles in Mexico." There are a few more course tickets that may be had at Blood's drug store.

Firemen's Hall was engaged in which to receive the returns Tuesday night, but was found too small and the Town Hall was opened for the purpose, but nothing very satisfactory to either party was obtained, and the majority went home early.

Rev. D. O. Clark will lecture at Ware Center church next Wednesday evening, subject, "The Worth of Man." This lecture will be a feeler of the desires of the people, and if well patronized there will be a course of entertainments at the Center this winter.

There is to be a Union Gospel service at the town hall every Sunday evening at 7.30, and a praise service to commence fifteen minutes earlier. There will be leaflets of selections from Gospel Hymns distributed in the hall, and an effort is being made to make these a series of pleasant and profitable meetings.

The ladies of the Unitarian society are famous for the names of the entertainments which they give. The latest is the "Prismette," that they will have at the town hall Wednesday and Thursday of next week. There is to be a supper, and they always have a good one, an exhibition of marionettes by a professor from Lowell, a doll's reception, etc.

The Town's Last Rallies.

TWO LARGE PARADES.

The Republican parade under the direction of W. V. Howard, with F. P. Clark, Charles Sargent and Dr. O. W. Roberts, aids, Monday evening, was by far the largest of any parade of any kind ever seen in Ware, there being over 300 in line, besides the bands, divided as follows: Seventy-six horseman, a boat on a truck containing 20 young ladies, who sang campaign songs at intervals on the line of march, a log cabin with six men, 70 older Republicans in double carriages, Otis Hose Jr., 16 lads in uniform, David Brown, foreman, mounted on E. H. Baker's pony, 38 citizens in one barge and on foot, Harrison and Morton battalion, 88 men, the Cornet band which led the procession 18 men, the Cadet band which led the battalion 22 men. The companies formed on Pleasant street and the line of march was as follows: Pleasant to Aspen, Aspen to Vigeant, Vigeant to North, North to Cottage, Cottage to Church, Church to Main, Main to Bank, Bank to Prospect, Prospect to Church, Church to Parks, Parks to Main, Main to South, South to Chestnut, Chestnut to Maple, Maple to Knox avenue, Knox avenue to East, East to Pleasant, Pleasant to North, North to High, High to Church, Church to Main, Main to West Main, counter-march to West, West to Water, Water to Main, Main to starting place, taking about two and a half hours. The fireworks team in charge of H. M. Hitchcock led the van, keeping up a blaze of colored fire or fireworks over most of the line. About 80 per cent of our business men are Republicans, and were nearly all represented in the procession. The cavalry and Harrison and Morton battalion carried the banners presented them by A. P. Gorham, and George Gould carried the log cabin banner with "Voted for Harrison 1840, Hope to Vote for Harrison 1888," upon it. Only one other banner was in line, it bore a picture of our town hall and the words "We are doing what we can without it," alluding to the manner in which the Republicans were deprived of the use of the hall after it had been booked to them.

The Harrison and Morton battalion at the several halts sang campaign songs, and both the battalion and the cavalry gave ringing cheers for the large number of illuminations which were shown all along the line except on Water street. Among these were Thomas Kennedy, S. Gates, W. A. Root, George Campbell, A. Rugg, D. F. Marsh, Aaron Smith, H. P. Cummings, John Osgood. Mrs. Witherell, C. C. Hitchcock, W. E. Bullard, D. G. Utley, H. Warner, George E. Tucker, Mrs. D. Merriam, Rev. A. T. Perry, Gamaliel Marsh, Mrs. Chapin, Mrs. Bond, Dr. O. W. Roberts, F. G. Fisher, Misses Olds and Waterman, who in addition to their illumination had arranged a pretty tableaux on the front step, where Rev. E. Hitchcock's little girl, surrounded by American flags and drapery, stood waving the flag, H. T. Billings, J. W. Cummings, D. P. Billings, H. O. Robinson, whose little boy stood in the doorway with the waving flag singing out at the top of his voice, "He's all right!" W. H. Newland, J. R. Lawton, Miss Sargent, H. M. Hitchcock, Richardson and Croteau, Sandford's billiard rooms, Winter's barber shop, J. R. Lawton's store, the National bank, Mrs. Loomis, Benjamin Bond, H. Bassett, Rev. James Boyle, whose residence was illuminated and made a brilliant display of colored fires, G. K. Cutler, J. F. Robinson, J. W. Robinson, C. N. Gilbert, W. S. Dunham, Mrs. Newland, F. M. Sibley, Henry Smith, Joseph Harding, O. C. Stetson, George C. Holden's house and shop, M. L. Lane, Charles Snow, who had a prettily arranged tableau in his parlor which was seen from the street, E. Puffer, H. L. Fairbank, Ed. Lyman, overseers of Otis company in block opposite Congregational church, D. M. Wheldon, D. C. and Frank Gates, Mrs. Dr. Richardson, Dr. O. W. Barrett, Rev. C. W. Duffield, Dr. E. H. Guild, M. Kelly, C. A. Lee, W. J. Irwin, E. H. Baker, Hugh Kennedy, Mrs. Baxter Gilbert, Fred C. Blood, Dr. D. W. Ainsworth, F. N. Hosmer, Lewis N. Gilbert, W. H. Hall, Frank Smith, H. O. Caryl, C. A. Julia, Charles D. and J. H. G. Gilbert, Benjamin Brown, Charles A. Stevens, who displayed several hundred Chinese lanterns and a large number of fireworks, Mrs. Sandford, William S. Hyde, H. Connell, A. Kœhler, Mrs. Eaton, Mrs. Field, Rev. E. Hitchcock. R. C. Snow, Calvin Hitchcock, Mrs. Sturtevant, Knox Ruggles, Miss L. Howard, William Kennedy, M. F. Brown, John Mott, E. P. Clark, store, Mrs. H. Fletcher, Mansion house, Mrs. Wilcox, Buffington's restaurant, Jasper Fairbank, W. C. Sheldon, A. Bryson, W. W. Barnes, L. Hinkley, Mrs. Fuller, A. D. Hitchcock, W. M. Winter, Mrs. Gilbert, the residences of Eddy Court, Fred E. Marsh, George and C. W. Eddy displayed a large flag on the hill that was given rousing cheers as the companies passed, John Ross, Waldo Cheever, the Otis company and the Geo. H. Gilbert Mfg. Co's. mills and offices, Alanson Bassett, Adolphus Gilbert, John Sibley, Mrs. Walsh, Samuel Rogers, Mrs. I. N. Lewis.

The Democrats also had their final rally Monday evening. John Lashua was chief marshal of the procession which formed in front of the town hall, and consisted of Prendiville's military band, 19 men, who gave some fine music for the first time in public, the Ware drum corps and about 130 torch bearers. The procession started at 7 o'clock and stopped under the Democratic flag in Main street and gave three cheers for Cleveland and Thurman. When they arrived at the Republican flag they stopped and gave three cheers for the stars and stripes. Philip L. Keefe was chairman of the evening and introduced as the first speaker Frank F. Pope of Boston, who took as his text the first verse of the first chapter of the epistle of Senator Hoar to the Republican party, "Purity of the Ballot." He spoke of there being honor in the so-called shot-gun policy of the South as compared to some of the base methods employed in the North to intimidate voters.

The next speaker was William Cushing of Boston, who went into an elaborate discussion of the working of the protective system as detrimental to the laborers. At the close of his speech three rousing cheers were given for Cleveland and also three for the Old Roman. Albert Weiss, E. R. Foster, Dr. D. M. Ryan, William Medcalf, Matthew Kelly, Jeremiah Byrns, Sr., Postmaster Byrns and Selectman Daniel Nolan occupied the platform with the speakers.

JOTTINGS FROM THE HUB.

From our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, NOV. 7, 1888.

Washington street in front of the newspaper officers has been filled all day with a cheering, shouting crowd, well made up of partisans of each side, hoping and fearing over the news from New York state which was displayed upon the bulletins. Each side would have its moments of encouragement, though, of course, the prestige was in favor of the Republicans. The probability was in their favor through the day, and all that the Democratic advices could do was to try to stave off the apparently inevitable defeat. The Journal and Record put out the strongest claims of success; the Herald apparently gave just what came, whether on one side or the other, and the Globe, with a smaller number of bulletins, endeavored to stem the tide which seemed to be setting against the Democracy. At first both sides claimed Connecticut, but the full returns later gave the state to the Democrats, and even the Journal put out a bulletin to that effect. Little was said about New Jersey, for it seemed to be conceded that it had gone for Cleveland, but the bulletins from Indiana were most contradictory, each side assenting that there was not any doubt that it has gone the way it wanted it to go. California was claimed during the day by the Globe, but this disappeared late in the afternoon, as did the assertion that there was an error in Kings county which would give New York state to Cleveland. "The Old Roman," Mrs. Cleveland, Col. Lamont, and the president himself were quoted at different hours of the day as giving up all hope of the election, and the opinions of state and national committees were interspersed with appetizing frequency.

The Republicans were most demonstrative in their rejoicing. In the forenoon they had three live roosters displayed from the windows of their headquarters, and in the afternoon these were retired to give place to a live eagle bearing an American flag. All through the day the street resounded with cheers and shouts as one side or the other heard news which was especially pleasing. The street was almost impassable all day long. It seemed as if teamsters took pleasure in driving through, and the horses were continually almost trampling upon the crowd. That was the outward aspect of affairs. At the Republican headquarters there was the most intense delight at the extent of the victory, and a jubilation meeting was speedily arranged to be held in Faneuil hall at one o'clock. The hall was jammed by as enthusiastic a crowd as ever gathered there. Dr. Burden presided and speeches were made by Messrs. Long, Banks, Candler and others. Everybody was full of enthusiasm, and there were cheers after cheers just to allow the superfluous energy to escape. It was a scene that will be remembered by those who are getting their initiation into politics, and which will give immense satisfaction to those who are rounding out their political careers. Every one was happy and showed it by their hands and lungs.

What will surprise the observor of the election returns will be the size of the total vote. It is perfectly enormous in its magnitude. I have heard of precincts in Boston where the total registration was about 1030 and the vote was about 960. In one of the wards of Newton the total registration was about 530 and the total vote was 513. Some of the smaller cities seem to have attained almost as high a vote, and it is the most remarkable election in that respect in the recent history of the state, and perhaps in the history of the state as a whole, for it is said on the authority of the Harvard professor of American history that the people are coming to be more in the habit of turning out at the polls and that the proportion of voters who come out in recent times is decidedly greater than it was forty years ago. The vote from the country towns, compared with that of four years ago, seems to show that there was many who did not come to the polls then. However it may be, it is the best thing for our public affairs that the people turn out, and this new departure ought to be only a precedent for a new order of things, so that the reproach will no longer be true that we do not care enough about voting to turn out at the polls.

In the election of ten out of twelve congressmen the Republican state committee feel very happy, though Dr. Burden tells me to-day that he had really set his heart upon getting eleven of them. The ninth and tenth districts have been changed from Democratic to Republican representatives, and the third remains to be represented in the next congress, as at present, by a Democrat. Here it was that Treasurer Beard met his defeat by an overwhelming majority at the hands of John F. Andrew, the son of our war governor. Beard fully expected to be elected. He told me that he had no doubt of it. Whoever was nominated by the Republicans in that district was sure of election, he asserted. But the other side was too strong for him. One of his warmest supporters says that the result was due to the buying of the Republican voters away from Beard, that they were hired to peddle ballots at the polls, and under pretence of being paid for this work they were really paid for their votes. But such charges are liable to be made by the defeated party. In the ninth district Congressman Burnett, in like manner attributes his defeat to the use of money by Candler. Next year, when the new Australian ballot system goes into effect, we shall see no more of this hiring of ballot distributors, but the state will provide all the ballots and the ingenious politicians must devise some other means of getting the support of the purchasable voters. In the districts other than the third, where the Democrats had lively hopes of success, they have been badly disappointed, and the Republican majorites are in all instances so large that there is possibility of a reverse of the count.

The congressional delegation from this state for the fifty-first congress will stand as follows: First district, Charles S. Randall of New Bedford; second, Elijah A. Morse of Canton; third, John F. Andrew of Boston; fourth, Joseph H. O'Neil of Boston; fifth, Nathaniel P. Banks of Waltham; sixth, Henry Cabot Lodge of Nahant; seventh, William Cogswell of Salem; eighth, Frederic T. Greenhalge of Lowell; ninth, John W. Candler of Brookline; tenth, Joseph H. Walker of Worcester; eleventh, Rodney Wallace of Fitchburg; twelfth, Francis W. Rockwell of Pittsfield. All of them except Messrs, Andrew and O'Neil, are Republicans. In the view of character of the men who are to retire, it cannot by any means be said that the state will be as well represented as for the present congress, but the new members must be given time in which to show their capacity.

The Legislature which has been chosen is stronger Republican than usual. The returns for the House do not appear in full at the time of writing, but the Senate has only seven Democrats, instead of ten in the Senate of 1888 and 17 in the ever-to-be-remembered Butler year. The Republicans will have everything in their own hands, and they can pass the prohibitory constitutional amendment or anything else they wish without forming any combination with the Democracy. The next session will see some important business matters before it, and the members will do well to be posting themselves.

Would You Believe

The proprietor of Kemp's Balsam gives thousands of bottles away yearly? This mode of advertising would prove ruinous if the balsam was not a perfect cure for coughs and all throat and lung troubles. You will see the excellent effect after taking the first dose. Don't hesitate! Procure a bottle to-day to keep in your home or room for immediate or future use. Trial bottle free at all druggists. Large size 50c and $1.

If you are seeking a comfortable pair of shoes you ought to visit the shoe store of Broadhurst Bros., 376 Main street, Springfield. We notice they always have plenty to do. Customers are pretty well satisfied that Beaver button boots for $1.50, lace woolen boots for 75 cents and $1, and woolen slippers for 49 cents are not to be had at many places. At Broadhurst Bros. they are to be found in abundance.

The Excitement Not Over.

The rush on the druggists still continues and daily scores of people call for a bottle of Kemp's Balsam for the throat and lungs for the cure of coughs, colds, asthma, bronchitis, and consumption. Kemp's Balsam, the standard family remedy, is sold on a guarantee and never fails to gives entire satisfaction. Price 50c and $1.

Of all diseases is impure blood, when loaded with foul humor. How important then that the blood should be pure, rich and strong, without which there can be no health. To purify the blood Sulphur Bitters is incomparably the best medicine that it is possible to obtain.—THE EDITOR.

CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA.

I have been a sufferer from catarrh for the past eight years. Having tried a number of remedies advertised as "sure cures" without obtaining any relief, I had resolved never to take any other patent medicines, when a friend advised me to try Ely's Cream Balm. I did so with great reluctance, but can testify with pleasure that after using it for six weeks I believe myself cured. It is a most agreeable remedy—an invaluable balm.—JOSEPH STEWART, 224 Grand avenue, Brooklyn.

Mothers.

Remember that Castoria does not contain Morphine, Opium, or any other narcotic substance, in any quantity, shape or form. It is entirely vegetable, pleasant to take, positively effective, and perfectly harmless. It is not a secret remedy; the formula is printed on the wrapper. Your physician will recommend it. Paregoric, Bateman's Drops, and many so-called Soothing Syrups, are composed principally of Opium or Morphine; in any quantity they stupify, and in large quantities are deadly poisons. Castoria assimilates the food and regulates the bowels, cures diarrhœa, allays feverishness and fretfulness, soothes the pains in teething, relieves constipation and kills worms. It brings refreshing and natural sleep to the child, and gives rest to the mother.

"Castoria is so well adapted to infants and children, that I recommend it as superior to any other known remedy." DR. H. A. ARCHER,

Advice to Mothers.

Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of cutting teeth? If so, send at once and get a bottle of Mrs. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures dysentery and diarrhœa, regulates the stomach and bowels, cures wind colic, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. Mrs. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING is pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female nurses and physicians in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. ## S. S. S. FOR THE BLOOD.

PEED'S MILL, TEXAS, June 20, 1888.—The Swift Specific Company, Atlanta, Ga.—Gentlemen: One of my children was troubled with rheumatism and boils for about two years. We gave her various kinds of medicine, but without profit, and began to despair of curing her at all. I was persuaded to try your Swift's Specific. After she had used several bottles the diseases all disappeared, and she is now a hale, hearty and healthy girl twelve years old. Another child has just become afflicted in the same way, and I am using the S. S. S. and anticipate a prompt and permanent cure.
N. C. WAGGONER.

RICH HILL, MO., July 7, 1888—The Swift Specific Co., Atlanta, Ga.—Gentlemen: Our little girl when but three weeks old broke out with eczema. We tried the prescriptions from several good doctors, but without any special benefit. We tried S. S. S., and by the time one bottle was gone her head began to heal, and by the time she had taken six bottles she was completely cured. Now she has a full and heavy head of hair—a robust, hearty child. I feel it but my duty to make this statement.
Respectfully, H. T. SHOBE.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., June 27, 1888—The Swift Specific Co., Atlanta, Ga.—Gentlemen: In 1886 I contracted blood poison, and at once sought a physician, who treated me for several months. By his advice I went to Crab Orchard Springs, Ky., where his course of treatment was carefully observed. I recovered, as I thought, but the next spring pimples began to appear on my face and body. These gradually increased to sores and running ulcers. I was advised to try S. S. S., and immediately after taking it I commenced to improve, slowly at first, but more rapidly afterwards, and soon nothing remained to tell of my trouble. My blood is now thoroughly cleansed, and my system free from taint, and I owe my present condition—a perfect cure—to your medicine. I cheerfully give this statement that others who have suffered as I have may reap the same benefit.
HARDY M. BURT, 24 West Ninth St.

HOMER, LA., May 25, 1888—The Swift Specific Co., Atlanta, Ga.—Gentlemen: About two years ago my general health gave way entirely. I was so debilitated that I almost despaired of ever feeling well again. All that the physicians did for me brought no permanent relief. Friends insisted that I should give S. S. S. a fair trial, although I thought it would be throwing away money. After taking a thorough course my health and strength returned, and I must say that S. S. S. alone cured me, as I discarded all others while using it. As a tonic I can most heartily recommend it; for general debility, it certainly is a specific.

OVERCOATS.

A careful look through our Overcoat department will be of interest to you whether wishing to purchase now or later. You can have one laid aside for you and call for it when you desire. The assortment is larger now than it will be again this season.

We have all sorts and qualities to be seen, but our finer grades always sells first. Overcoats varying in price from $15 to $25, $28 and $30, are Coats which are most sought for this year.

ULSTERS.

Also we show a choice variety of the very best that can be produced, may be a little early to speak of these and yet we never sold as many so early in the season as we have this fall. People who drive or travel appreciate these garments, more and more.

REEFERS

Are demanded, and they grow in favor yearly. Nothing more useful either Under or Overcoat, or Ulster or without a Top Coat. We have a large variety.

The Ballet Girl.

With complexion like the rose
'Mid the snows,
Due to powder on her nose,
I suppose,
She twirls upon her toes
In abbreviated clothes,
And exhibits spangled hose
To her beaux.

When cruel time bestows
Adipose,
Fairy parts and all those
She outgrows,
And murmuringly goes
To the very hindmost rows
To pirouette and pose
With the "crows."

When life frayed and faded grows,
Like her bows,
She in garrets sits and sews
Furbelows,
Till her weary eyelids close
In the peace of death's repose.
Is she reaping what she sews?
Heaven knows.

CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER.

The Purest and Best.

Is made only of strictly pure grape cream of tartar, strictly pure bicarbonate of soda, and a small portion of flour as a preservative, nothing else whatever, and is warranted entirely free from alum, ammonia, phosphates, lime, and all other adulterations frequently found in baking powders. The character of materials used, their purity, and the nicety of their combination, render Cleveland's superior baking the most healthful and most economical in use, and it always affords wholesome, nutritious, and delicious food.

It is recommended for purity, healthfulness and efficiency by government and state chemists, chemists of boards of health, and professors in institutions of learning throughout the country.

JOHNSON'S UNIVERSAL CYCLOPÆDIA (Revised edition) is a whole library of universal knowledge from the pens of the ablest scholars in America and Europe. It is accepted as high authority in our leading colleges and institutions of learning. It is not for the few, like Appleton's, the Britanica, or the International, BUT FOR ALL. It has just been thoroughly revised at a cost of over $60,000 and three years' labor by forty editors and over 2000 renowned contributors. It is in eight convenient sized volumes. No father can give to his child at school or his son or daughter just entering the arena of life anything that will be of more permanent benefit. It is an education supplementary to that of the schools.

$4.00?

YES, $4.00

Each, for about seven hundred Boys' Suits, sizes 4 to 14. We commence to-day a sale of Suits of the above sizes, of strictly all wool Cassimeres, just made up by the best manufacturers in this country. Included in the suits at this low price are about three hundred of the famous

"Rough and Tumble Suits,"

sold usually for $5.50, $6, $.50 and $7. These all go in at the price stated above, $4, and these lots are none of them short lines of broken sizes, but full lots and a large and complete range of sizes. We never have offered Boys' Suits at any such prices.

Sales must be for cash on delivery. Can furnish extra pants of a good many lots. Also Caps of the Rough and Tumble suits if wanted.

MEN'S

Suits at Moderate PRICES.

For fear a good many people will have an idea that we sell only the finest goods (and we do make a specialty of the best made), we want to call attention to our stock of the medium and low-cost garments, both in Suits, Overcoats and Pantaloons.

Our Suits at $4.50, $5, $6 and $8

Are well and strongly made, with a full lot of sizes, and for durability, fit and workmanship are better than are usually sold at such prices. You can find hundreds of them at the above popular prices.

Our Overcoats from $1.50 and upwards to $10 are bargains not ordinarily shown so early in the season for any such prices.

Our stock of Pantaloons for $1, $2, $2.50 and $3 is very large. Every workingman can well afford to take time to see this really mammoth stock of Pantaloons. The $1.50 range contains hundreds of the celebrated "McMillan's Pants."

THE HARD PROBLEM.

I know of a boy who was preparing to enter the junior class of the New York university. He was studying trigonometry and I gave him three examples for his next lesson. The following day he came into my room to demonstrate his problems—two of them he understood; but the third—a very difficult one—he had not performed. I said to him:

"Shall I help you?"

"No, sir; I can and will do it, if you give me time."

I said, "I will give you all the time you wish."

The next day he came into my room to recite another lesson in the same study.

"Well, Simon, have you worked that example?"

"No, sir," he answered, "but I can and will do it if you will give me a little more time."

"Certainly, you shall have all the time you desire."

I always like these boys who are determined to do their own work; for they make our best scholars, and men too. The third morning you should have seen Simon enter the room. I knew he had it, for his whole face told the story of his success. Yes, he had it, notwithstanding it had cost him hours of the severest mental labor. Not only had he solved the problem, but, what was of infinitely greater importance to him, he had begun to develop mathematical powers, which, under the inspiration of "I can and will," he has continued to cultivate until to-day he is professor of mathematics in one of our largest colleges and one of the ablest mathematicians of his years in our country.

My young friends, let your motto ever be, "If I can I will."—New York Evangelist.

A WARNING DREAM.

The following story is told as true by Mrs. Lucy H. Hooper in the Philadelphia Telegraph: Since we are on the subject of the supernatural, I will here record the very singular adventure of a lady who is a resident of the interior of Pennsylvania. She was traveling in Europe, and while staying in London she dreamed one night that she was visiting prominent points of interest in that city in regular tourist fashion. But wherever she went she was met by a peculiar-looking man who invariably asked her the same question, "Are you ready?" Go where she would, and do as she liked, in every scene in her dream she met the same man, and he always asked her his ever-recurring question. She was considerably impressed by this dream, and remarked to the lady to whom she related it that she never should forget the face of the man that had so persistently appeared before her. Time went on, she returned to the United States, and went to pay a visit to one of the large cities, stopping at the most noted hotel in the place. She was lodged on one of the upper floors, and went down stairs to breakfast the morning after her arrival. At the conclusion of her repast she went to the elevator and entered it, with the purpose of returning to her room. She was the only person in the elevator, and the man in charge of it, before starting it, turned to her with the question, "Are you ready?" Struck by these words she looked at the man, and instantly recognized the hero of her singular dream. She was seized at once with a vague and causeless terror, and cried, "Let me out!—you must let me out!" The elevator being already in motion, no release was possible till she reached the first floor. She hurried out of it and closed the door, the man started it to descend, and instantly the elevator and its unfortunate guide fell with a crash to the cellar. The poor man was instantly killed, and the strange dream had probably saved the dreamer from a similar fate.

SHE MURMURED.

"Laura," exclaimed the youth, as he laid his arm timidly on the back of her chair, "now that you have promised to be mine, it surely does not seem like asking too much if I—"

"Well, George?"

George took her hand in his, swallowed once or twice spasmodically, and proceeded:

"As your affianced husband, Laura, whom you will some day promise in the sight of high heaven to love, honor, and—er—cherish, you will not think me presuming, dearest, I hope, if—if—"

"Well, George?"

"—if I venture to claim the privilege of a k—of a kiss!"

The lovely maiden laid her head trustingly on the young man's shoulder, a tender light shone in her dreamy eyes, and her fragrant breath swept the cheek of the rapturous lover as she softly murmured:

"George, don't be a clam!"—Chicago Tribune.

Some of the advantages in buying Head-wear of us. We do a large business in

HATS and CAPS.

We carry a large stock from which to make selections. We sell so many we turn our stock often, so we are always adding new. We have the new styles and sell them before they get old. We are jobbers, we buy direct from the maker at their lowest price. We buy close, we sell a great many. We have no "fancy prices." We aim to furnish as good if not a better article for the money than can be bought elsewhere.

We have been buying and selling Hats and Caps a good many years. We don't "know it all," but our experience is worth much to us and to you. We know what is right in style and quality. We know who makes good reliable goods, and where to get the best for the money.

All these advantages are to the mutual benefit of our patrons and ourselves, and are the reasons for our very large trade.

A FAIR TRIAL OF HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA for scrofula, salt rheum, or any affection caused by impure blood, is sufficient to convince any one of the superior and peculiar curative powers of this medicine. The following statement is right to the point.

"My daughter Mary was afflicted with scrofulous sore neck from the time she was 22 months old till she became 6 years of age. Lumps formed in her neck, causing great annoyance, and two of them, after growing to the size of a pigeon's egg, broke and discharged. One became a running sore for three years. We thought we would give Hood's Sarsaparilla a thorough trial. We began with it in January, and in a few months, after she had taken five bottles, all supperation had ceased. We then waited three months, when, as a new lump was beginning to form, we again gave her Hood's Sarsaparilla. After she had taken less than two bottles the lump and all indications of scrofula had entirely disappeared, and now she seems to be a healthy child."—J. S. Carlile, Naurights, N. J.

FURNISHINGS & FIXINGS

Won't you keep in mind our assortment of furnishings which is complete? Underwear department is brim full of fine medium and low-cost Merchandise. Cardigan Jackets and Gloves are the specialties now.

Speaking of Gloves, our sales this season have been thrice doubled in Gloves. We still keep up the sale of these at 98c which are usually sold for $1.50. Hundreds of customers can testify to this fact, and to the value received. Another new feature of our Glove sale is a new lot of Pekin Kids which are always retailed for $2. We have succeeded in purchasing fifty dozen at a sacrifice from what they cost to import. With this profit "off" we can sell them for $1.48. All are perfect goods. We have all shades and siezs.

Umbrellas, especially silk umbrellas, just now are receiving more than ordinary attention. Will you inspect this stock of Umbrellas. It will amply repay you. Our fine Neckwear comes very largely from Fisk, Clark & Flagg. We have a large stock of Novelties in our furnishing department.

Sanitary Underwear, also an important feature.

MASON & HAMLIN.

The cabinet organ was introduced in its present form by Mason & Hamlin in 1861. Other makers followed in the manufacture of the instruments, but the Mason & Hamlin organs have always maintained their supremacy as the best in the world.

Mason & Hamlin offer, as demonstration of the unequalled excellence of their organs, the fact that at all of the great World's Exhibitions, since that of Paris, 1867, in competition with best makers of all countries, they have invariably taken the highest honors. Illustrated catalogues free.

ORGANS
$22 to $900.

Mason & Hamlin do not hesitate to make extraordinary claim for their pianos, that they are superior to all others. They recognize the high excellence achieved by other leading makers in the art of piano making, but still claim superiority. This they attribute solely to the remarkable improvement introduced by them in the year 1882, and now known as the "Mason & Hamlin Piano Stringer," by the use of which is secured the greatest possible purity and refinement of tone, together with great increased capacity for standing in tune and other important advantages.

The Maid, the Dude, the Horse.

"Where is the white horse, my pretty maid?
For I see your hair is a white horse shade."

The maiden to whom these words were said
Was a pretty maid whose hair was red.

'Twas said in a crowded thoroughfare—
Nearly every kind of a horse was there.

The long line of horses the maid reviewed,
Then to her annoyer, a real, hard dude:

"There isn't a white horse within a mile,
But the donkey is 'round," said she with a smile.

The dude grew red and wished he were dead.
"What is your hurry, kind sir?" she said.

A STRANGE ESCAPE.

As a train on the New York, New Haven & Hartford road was entering the city of New Haven, Ct., one morning, a young woman attempted to cross the track. The locomotive was still a few rods distant, but she ran, showing the nervous haste frequently evinced by the fair sex in such a situation. She did not heed what was beneath her feet so much as the object of her dread. Unfortunately she was where a side track was connected with the main track by a switch, and she caught her foot in a frog. She struggled desperately, but her foot was held as if it were in a vise. She cried out, then almost swooned. The engineer applied the air brakes, although it was evident that the train could not be more than considerably slackened before it reached her. She was apparently doomed.

At this moment a man with a jack-knife, which he had opened as he run, dashed to her side, with two slashes cut the shoe from her heel to her toes, pulled her foot from it, and, grasping her in his strong arms, drew her from the track. The next second the locomotive passed over the spot where she had stood.

It was as gallant a deed as ever a man did for a woman's sake.

The train was stopped a moment. The passengers learned the particulars of the rescue. The men raised the windows of the cars, swung their hats and cheered as they saw the hero support his half-fainting companion in his arms.

The train moved forward, and the man and the woman were by themselves. They looked into each other's eyes; the man with solicitude, the maiden with gratitude and admiration.

"I can never thank you enough for your brave and generous act," she said.

"Do not mention it. It was nothing."

His modesty was that of the brave.

"How my heart beats! I was so frightened! Were you not afraid?" she exclaimed.

"I had not time to think whether I was or not; and besides, we railroad men are used to close calls."

She had now sufficiently recovered from her agitation to notice how her new friend was dressed. She saw that he must be a railroad conductor, he being attired in one of the blue uniforms commonly worn by conductors, and having upon his head the wide and square blue cap which these men are required to wear. Moreover, worked in gold braid on the front of the cap was the word "Conductor."

Like the majority of conductors, Joseph Williams (for such was his name) had a broad frame and was square shouldered. It is said that the motion of the train tends to give conductors their sturdy shape and solid appearance. That he was brave, alert and efficient, had been proven by his recent deed; and, on account of it and his manly bearing, she immediately reposed great confidence in him.

She told him that she was the only daughter of Robert Blakeman, who kept a bakery in New Haven, and that she lived with her parents in the western part of the "Elm City."

Mr. Williams received permission to accompany her home, he telling her that on account of the shock and fright which she had sustained she ought to allow him to go with her, especially as he was not on duty that day, and would not inconvenience himself by doing the favor. She saw an eager look in his eye, and she blushingly gave her consent. It was very evident that each welcomed an excuse for their continuing together. As they walked along the conductor's admiration for his companion rapidly increased; and it was not to be wondered at, for she was one of those winning maidens that no man who is susceptible to female charms can help liking. About twenty years old, she was slender and graceful, with a beautiful, thoughtful face, which indicated innocent enjoyment of life. But her greatest charm was the singular artlessness of demeanor and confiding yet shy manner, utterly unconscious of her captivating ways.

She was ready—alas! perhaps too ready—to believe in everything that was fair to look upon and appeared to be good. Already she felt so gratified to Mr. Williams, and so much admired him for the risk he had taken for her sake, that she believed him to be the possessor of every quality that enters into the strength and beauty of true manhood.

As soon as they reached the main thoroughfare of the town, they seated themselves in a horse-car, rode through pleasant and shaded streets; by the beautiful Green, an oasis and resting-place in the very heart of the city's traffic; by the buildings of Yale College, over which, in hours of quietness, the spirit of learning seems to brood; then by fine residences and far beyond the business center, to a quiet neighborhood, where modest but comfortable homes can be found. They were soon at the door of the pretty cottage where our heroine lived. Mr. Williams went in and remained a few moments. He was introduced to Miss Blakeman's mother, a middle-aged lady with a mild and tranquil face, evidence of a kindly disposition, who shed tears as she pressed the conductor's hand and thanked him most fervently for preserving the life of her only child.

As he turned from the door, Miss Blakeman, with a deep blush overspreading her cheeks, and in timid accents, thanked him a second time for saving her life, and expressed the hope that he would call again. He said that he would be happy to do so, and, tipping his hat politely, wandered down the street.

Now that he was no longer under the spell of her winning ways he was affected by a singular depression of spirits. He walked slowly, and closed and unclosed his hands nervously. Meanwhile, these thoughts ran through his mind:—

"I must not go there again. It would be imprudent, and might result in breaking up that innocent girl's happiness and covering me with dishonor. I ought merely to have thanked her and not led her to believe that I would come again. But she is very charming; and what would be the harm of cultivating her acquaintance? How I wish—but it is too late! I am only suffering the just penalty of my youthful folly, and I must bear it like a man."

During the few succeeding weeks Williams attended to his duties as usual. The greater part of the day he was on trains running between New Haven and New York. Four nights of each week he spent in New Haven, where he boarded at a hotel near the railroad station. He went about the city but little and did not see Miss Blakeman.

But one evening, however, at the end of a month, while strolling along the edge of the Green, he met her, and although something warned him to leave her as soon as possible, he found the temptation too great to be resisted. After the customary greetings, she gently reproached him for not having kept his promise, and he at once made a stumbling apology for having failed. He imagined that she looked not so well as when he had first seen her, and that a shade of sadness pervaded her usually joyous spirits. Strangely enough, it flashed through his mind that his failure to seek her society had disquieted her; but his modesty forbade his entertaining the thought. Nevertheless there was a thrill in her voice, a tender light in her eyes, and a confiding touch in the arm which she had placed in his as they walked along, that convinced him that she was far from being indifferent; and his resolution to forego the pleasure of her society was put to flight.

They had ice-cream at a restaurant and then went to Miss Blakeman's home, which they reached at 8.30 o'clock. Mr. Williams was so well entertained that it was 10 o'clock before he could bring himself to take leave of the fair girl.

Thereafter he called as often as once, and sometimes twice a week. Occasionally he took Miss Blakeman on a drive through the pleasant environs of the city, or up the picturesque and lofty East Rock, on the summit of which now stands a noble landmark, a massive soldier's monument. At that time the hill-top was not crowned with any work of art, and was without historic associations; but the splendid view of field and forest, of sea and of city, and the great rock itself, were there then to delight as now. Miss Blakeman never tired of gazing on this scene, and the genuine enthusiasm which she expressed whenever she was at this spot, or wherever else the beauties of nature were spread before her delighted eyes, amply repaid him for his kindness in taking her on their little excursions.

Meanwhile, with a curious feeling of commingled dread and satisfaction, the conductor noted that she believed in him. He saw, in fact, that she had become deeply attached, and this was his excuse for continuing in her society. He argued that he could not absent himself without wounding her feelings. As too often the case under such circumstances, he shrank from making a frank avowal which would cause both of them pain, and allowed himself to drift along. He put off what his sense of duty prompted, and trusting that through some fortunate, but not probable, combination of circumstances all would yet turn out well. The longer he delayed the more serious the matter became, until it seemed too late for an explanation. He realized at last that the girl loved and trusted him with her whole heart, and he knew that he loved her better than life itself. He pushed the bitter cup with reckless selfishness from his lips and criminally lived on.

He was moody and wretched, and it was with the greatest difficulty that he could attend properly to the responsible duties of a conductor. Frequently he wished that he had never been born; and the strong man would sometimes awake in the middle of the night and weep as if his heart would break. When in the presence of his Edith, the very fibers of whose being seemed to be entwined with his, he was often sad and strangely absent-minded; only by a great effort could he rally from such moods and appear himself.

At first Edith was not alarmed at the eccentric conduct of her lover. She attributed it to the worry of business or to temporary indisposition. When, however, the depression became habitual, she besought him to tell her what troubled him. He made light of her anxiety, and pleaded ill health. Nevertheless she was not satisfied. A strange foreboding seemed to warn her of unseen trouble that no thought could banish; and yet Edith's love was to the fullest extent confiding; not a tremor of suspicion, not a shadow of doubt disturbed her. She had believed that his honor was as immovable as the North Star. The wonderful wealth of a pure woman's affection, tenderness and confidence had been lavished upon this man, until it could almost be said that in him she moved, lived and had her being. And now this innocent life, this lovely and lovable personality, feeling for the first time the thrill of a great and pure passion, was suddenly overspread by a threatening cloud that robbed it of the sunshine which had warmed and nourished it. Why should one so good, so charming and so capable of experiencing love's highest joys be visited by trouble at the very moment when her happiness was greatest, and when it was adorned by such a rainbow of promise?

While our gentle heorine was in this condition of love and foreboding, she received a letter directed in a, to her, strange writing, and evidently that of an illiterate person. Fortunately, she opened the letter when alone in her own room, and she found the contents as follows:—

"WINSOR LOCKS, ct july 10, 1885.

"Eduth blakemans.

i writ to tel yu thet joe Williams as yu is keepin compinie withe now is my husbund and yu orter not hav nothin mower to do withe him for my sakes and yuern allsoe, a friend i kin relie on haz tolt me abut his doins and i doenot blame you fore i here yu suppus him tu be a singall man if yuer th' rite sort yull guv him his waulkin ticcut and if aint up to thet ill cum daune to new havens myself and se abut this ere bizness.

"MRSS. JOE WILLIAMS."

Edith, first startled and then stunned, nearly fainted. The reason for the strange conduct of her lover was now apparent, and the poor girl felt overwhelmed with grief and indignation. Then came the sustaining thought in the hope that the letter had been written by some malicious enemy. Nevertheless she was haunted by a feeling that she was about to be terribly disappointed. During the remainder of the day she suffered untold agony, and as evening approached, at which time she expected her lover, her distraction of mind was so great, that on the plea of a headache she remained in her room.

At last well-known footsteps, heard by her through an open window, caused her to hasten to the door; and scarcely had the bell ceased to ring before she greeted her lover.

Her demeanor was so strange that he was immediately filled with an indefinable dread. She appeared to be calm, but was deathly pale, and her hand was cold as ice and trembled when he touched it.

As soon as he entered she handed him the letter, and simply said, in cold, faraway tones:—

"Do you know what this means?"

He unfolded the letter with hands that shook in spite of all his efforts at self-control. He rapidly caught the drift of its contents, and staggered as if stricken with a blow. His eyes were cast down, great drops of perspiration stood on his brow, and the agony and helplessness of the man were absolutely pitiable.

"It is true!" she almost shrieked.

"Great God, yes!" he answered in thick accents, as he smote his brow with the palm of his right hand. "But have mercy; let me explain!"

"Never; you're a monster!"

"Edith, I entreat you."

"It is too late, Joe; how could you be so cruel? My heart is breaking."

She flew by him with a moan, and, flying up the stairway, sought to hide her agony. With outstretched arms William ran into the hall after her. He believed that he would find her fainting, and he expected to catch her falling form.

When she had reached the head of the stairs she turned and cried:—

"Go, go; I cannot bear it longer!"

He hurried from the house and wandered like one insane through the streets. He passed a sleepless night and rose in the morning haggard and desperate. He did not care what became of him, and almost hoped for death to end his misery. Mechanically, at 11 a. m., he took charge of a train bound for New York. He was now comparatively calm, although it seemed as if there were no future for him, except one of misery; but, from long habit, he attended to his duties well. At the edge of evening he started from New York in charge of another train. During the day he had resolved to end his life. His plan was to ascend to the top of one of the cars shortly before the train arrived at a covered bridge about thirty miles out from the metropolis, and allow himself to strike the roof of the structure as the train passed under it. He would be killed at once, and his body would fall to the ground. The verdict would be that his death was caused by an accident, and he would escape the odium which attaches to suicide.

In accordance with this resolve, he climbed to the top of the car next to the rear one, when the train was within about four miles of the bridge, and awaited his doom.

It was cloudy, but not intensely dark. A storm was brewing, and over the indistinct landscape, through which the train rushed like an unchained monster that seemed to delight in newly-found freedom, there rested a portentious gloom. Puffs of damp air came from the sea and smote the desperate man's cheek; he saw the faint gleam of a lantern rocking from the gaff of some vessel that was plowing the dark waters.

Once he thought he heard the slow, solemn wash of the surf; but he probably imagined it, the cars rattling so loudly as to drown all common noises in the vicinity. Turning his eyes inland, he saw the dim outlines of wooded hills in the distance, and near by, several dwellings and the light of lamps, around which he imagined happy families were gathered. And yet nothing seemed real to him, and he could scarcely believe that he was not in a world where all objects were unsubstantial and intangible. Everything appeared to be fleeting and evasive. And he began to think that he himself was but a shadow and his previous life nothing more than a dream, the latter part of which was an appalling night-mare.

There are conditions of extreme peril, when the mind of a sensitive temperament is subject to a phenomenon in which time seems to be annihilated. It often occurs, we are told, to persons drowning, who, being resuscitated, have said their entire lives were brought before them as if condensed in a panorama, as it were, and in the few moments of strangulation all the good and ill of their past have flashed before them. We all know from experience that, to one overborne by fatigue, in a sleep of one minute a dream has had existence that called for an hour to narrate.

This is what happened to Joe while standing upon the roof of the car; he was swiftly approaching the dim, huge form of the covered bridge that was to be his death. His life came before his mind as in a flash of lightning; and not only were the events crowded into one horizon of his view, but those events seemed to assume relations to each other that were not only novel, but were instructive to him. Gleaming over all was not the light of sin, but that of weakness and folly; and, as of consequence, a power yet left of retrieving himself tugged at his will, and urged the abandonment of his proposed suicide. He saw how in his early youth he had permitted himself to become entangled in an affair with a vulgar, ignorant, and, as he now believed, vicious girl; how in a moment of generous impulse he had made the wretched creature his wife; and so, without lifting her from degradation, had been dragged down to abject misery. Life with her was intolerable to both. They had separated, although he yet supported her in wanton extravagance that kept him in poverty.

This was not sin; it was folly. The sin came in when he caught a glimpse of heaven on earth that might have been, and was not. It was a grievous wrong to win the affections of a poor girl he could never honestly claim as his own. What right had he to leave his work unfinished? What right to throw away all chance of retrieving, in some way, his wretched past? Why not bravely live on, and trust to the good Father of all for the opportune redemption? Two parts within himself seemed to contend for mastery—one appealing to his pride, the other his better nature. Pride won, and folding his arms resolutely he awaited the horrible blow.

The train was on the up-grade, but behind time, and the engineer had called for all the speed of which the locomotive was capable. The long, heavy cars, flying along at forty miles an hour, vibrated so violently that nothing but long practice enabled the conductor to preserve his balance and remain standing. Every second brought his death nearer and nearer. He had braced himself for the final blow, when suddenly the shrill whistle of "down brakes" rang out, and the reversal of the engine brought such an unexpected shock that the conductor was hurled from the roof of the car to the road beneath. Fortunately, he fell in a marshy piece of ground that lined each side of the track near the river. The soft, yielding earth saved him from being knocked insensible; and, as he instinctively struggled up, he was conscious of a flash, a shock, a crash, and then a dead silence, followed immediately by loud cries, escaping steam, and agonizing shrieks that seemed to pierce through and ride above the awful tumult.

Joe knew only too well that a collision had occurred at the mouth of the very bridge he had selected to die upon. Dragging himself from the mire, he hurried to the wrecked train. The telescoped cars were jammed and smashed into each other, and the awful fact that they had taken fire, was but too evident; and the wounded wretches, held to an awful death within, were screaming in agony for relief. All these had been extricated by the men and passengers left unhurt, save one woman, whose screams pierced the hearts of all. Joe, seizing an axe, cut his way into the burning car and found the poor sufferer cruelly hurt, held by a seat. How in the smoke and heat he worked cannot be told in words. He would have perished in the attempt but for the water poured over him from buckets and even hats, which the passengers carried from the river. At last he won; and, gathering the sufferer in his arms, he worked his way from the cars.

Arms were stretched tenderly to take this last living of the wounded, and she was carried to a bank and laid softly upon the cool green sod. Joe dragged himself after. Why he did so he could scarcely say, for he was so exhausted he could scarcely stand. He threw himself upon the ground near the form he had rescued.

The woman was insensible, but loving hands, feeling as men feel in such awful calamities, the Savior moving within them, bathed her face and gave her stimulants until consciousness returned, and she feebly moaned out her pain and thankfulness. A few words were uttered that made Joe rise and look upon the woman he had rescued. She was his wife.

"Polly," he said, bending over her, "don't you know me? I am Joe, your husband."

His face blackened by smoke, with his hair burned and eyebrows singed, so disfigured the poor fellow that it was by his voice alone she recognized him. The poor little white face was distorted by pain; but, crowding it down, she said feebly, "Joe—I am so glad."

He attempted to put his arm about her, but a cry of agony at the move caused him to desist. As it was, he stooped and kissed her trembling lips, and made a pitiable effort to cheer her with loving words. She was dying. He felt that she was dying; and all the old love came back, ill-assorted as they had been.

For awhile she gasped, as if for breath, and then, by an effort, she gathered words to whisper, "dear Joe," and died.

It was nearly a year after this terrible event that our hero sought the home of one he now felt was his only love. The story of his heroic conduct at the dreadful accident, and his strange effort to rescue the woman who proved to be his wife, had gone into the journals; so that he was free to enter the humble dwelling, and honest and honorable abode. While waiting in the little parlor, he heard a step upon the stair. His heart throbbed so that it seemed to choke him; and when she did appear he could not utter a word. Nor was it necessary. He seized the girl in his arms, and said, "Be mine."

"I have been yours, Joe," responded the girl, "since the moment you saved my life."

To Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Lull, on the fifteenth anniversary of their marriage, October 30, 1888.

PROLOGUE.

An order came, once on a time,
That I should write a little rhyme,
In which each sentiment it tells
Should chime with merry wedding bells,
As they rang out one night like this
For Erskine Lull and Della Bliss.

But time is short and duties long,
And so I fear this humble song
But hollow mockery will seem,
Of their deserts and our esteem.

THE LINES.

A likely youth, who, I've heard say,
Was near his twenty-first birthday,
Now that his school-boy pranks were ended,
And he at courting age suspended,
Began to feel 'twere not amiss,
To put on matrimonial BLISS,
And shape the tenor of his life
By taking to himself a wife.

So, looking eagerly around,
Where comely girls were to be found,
He spied a school-house called Crow Hill,
Where Jack perhaps might find his Jill;
For, as it chanced, one Alvin Bennett,
Was holding there religious senate,
While crowds assembled every week
To hear this worthy layman speak,
And exhortation, praise and prayer
Bespoke a great revival there.

Now, in its midst this young man came
To find a lass to wear his name;
And there he met, by fate's decree
Our lovely blue eyed Della B.
On her he fixed his wandering gaze,
Charmed by her model pleasant ways,
And while she wondered and surmised
He to himself soliloquized:

She will admire my style, I guess,
As much as I her bright red dress,
And such a dainty pair of feet
Ne'er hath it been my lot to meet.
Such perfect fitting tiny shoes
Can not be over ones or twos,
And 'twill not cost so much, thought he,
To buy a "one" as 'twould a "three"

And she, observing his devotion,
Reciprocated his emotion.
She thought upon his fine physique,
His roguish eye and glowing cheek,
She thought upon the houses where
He'd sample every bill of fare,
For sure, a well trained butcher's clerk,
"Gets half his living while at work,"
For generally he's so good looking
That when he stops where folks are cooking
They treat him every time they bake
To doughnuts or to ginger cake.
And so her work would be so small
She never would get tired at all.
And visions of a larder stored
With choicest steak to grace her board,
Passed through her thoughts till Cupid's darts
Had entered both their fluttering hearts,
And love, quick following fate's behest,
Had LULLED their smitten hearts to rest.

This settled, they with one accord
Gave all their future to the Lord.
And in the list of converts there
Were found the names of this new pair.

Well, true love never smoothly flows
The wise ones say—and yet who knows?
I won't pretend to set them right,
But this I know, that one March night,
When snowdrifts checkered off the scene
With strips of scratchy ground between,
Our hero thought with many pride
"I'll go and take my girl to ride!"
Then straightway rose a windy sputter
Betwixt his carriage and his cutter.
Each thought that his should be the honor
Of being first to smile upon her.
And he, to silence their appeals,
Greased both the sleigh-shoes and the wheels.

But oh! alas for his intentions,
And bootless carriage right's conventions;
When he arrived and found he'd missed her,
He turned him round and took—her sister.

Ere she reached home our heroine heard
This little story, every word,
And blushes came and went as showers
Caress the cheeks of April flowers.

When, after this, the Praying Band
At State-Line school-house took its stand,
Our sisters turned with one consent
And meeting-ward their footsteps bent;
But entering,—lo! the green-eyed master
Warned our sweet friend of dire disaster.
For by her own true love's side
A sparkling girl—perchance his bride—
Appeared as unconcerned as though
She'd learned the habit long ago.
And if our heroine marched out
With haughty mien and scornful pout,
And glancing neither left nor right
Walked on and on and out of sight,
What wonder, since she did not know
That he was not the lady's "beau"—
That he was but the little brother,
And so, of course, they loved each other.

But all came straight and time passed on,
Then came the Reverend Silverthon,
He called May Hill a Blissful station—
Begged leave to make a short oration,
And finding all the friends were there
Arrayed in wedding garments fair,
His silvery voice rang round the room
And hailed our couple, bride and groom.

"And did you promise to obey?"
I heard a merry bridesmaid say.
Though well I knew 'twas not the phrase
For marriage service now-a-days,
I thought I heard beneath the breath
"We'll serve each other until death."

That was in eighteen-seventy-three,
And now upon the family tree
A branch for fourteen years has grown
That's called George Erskine, and 'tis known
That he's indeed as fine a lad
As doting parents ever had.

And looking back o'er fifteen years
With all their joys and hopes and tears,
A goodly record meets our gaze—
A host of kindly acts and ways.
And though some graves have come between
The former wedding and this scene,
We all a little nearer stand
The marriage supper of the Lamb,
And soon the summons we may hear
To greet the friends who once were near.

Monson, Mass. E. J. B.

"LET US KICK."

I really and truly believe that the day will come when the kicker will be classed where he belongs and be entitled to the reverence due him. I look upon him as a philosopher and a philanthropist. He stands forth one man out of ten thousand. He is actuated by the most unselfish motives. He is the real reformer.

I am not a kicker. I am simply taking the preparatory lesson to enable me to blossom out. The other day when I bought a ticket to go East, they told me at the ticket office:—

"While the train does not leave until about 11, the sleeper is open at 9, and you can go right to bed and wake up at Niagara Falls next morning."

I entered the sleeper at half-past nine and went to bed. That is, it is called going to bed. You are boxed up, boxed in, surrounded and smothered, and charged $2 for the misery. A sleeping-car is a mockery, a fraud, and a deception. The avarice of the companies results in misery for the passengers. Four other persons had gone to bed, and at 10 o'clock we were all asleep. At that hour two men entered with a great clatter. They were talking loudly, and they sat down and continued it. I waited fifteen minutes for one of the other sleepers to kick. No one uttered a protest. Then I rose up and asked:—

"Do you men know that this is a sleeping-car?"

"We do," they answered.

"And do you propose to continue this disturbance?"

"We propose to talk as long and as loud as we please!"

I called the conductor and inquired:—

"I have paid for a berth in which to sleep. I can't sleep for this disturbance. Will you stop it?"

"Really, I can't," he answered.

"Are there no rules?"

"Yes, but people in a sleeping-car must expect to be disturbed."

"Oh, they must. Very well—see me later."

Four others came in with just as much racket, and they kept their chatter going until 11 o'clock. At 11.30 the lights were turned down and everybody was ready for sleep. I had been patiently waiting for this. Lying on my back, arms locked over my head, and my palate down, I brought a snore which went thundering over that car in a way to open every eye. After two more a man called out:—

"Thunder and blazes, but we've got a whale aboard!"

After three more they began to yell at me from every berth. I put in two extra ones, and the porter came down and shook my arm, and said:—

"Heah—you—stop dat!"

"Colored man," I said, as I looked up at him, "if you come here and do that again I may fire upon you!"

As soon as he had gone I went back to business. When a man sets out to snore for revenge you'd be surprised to know what success he can make of it. In five minutes they were calling for the conductor. He came down and parted the curtains and said:—

"Hey—you—wake up! You are disturbing the car!"

"Conductor, haven't I paid for this berth?" I asked.

"Yes."

"Is there any rule which prohibits snoring?"

"No, but—"

"Then you keep away from me! I have a revolver, and I might take you for a robber!"

Then I returned to the main question. I snored in every key of the scale. I snored for blood. I had every person in the car swearing mad and ready to fight, and they sent for the passenger conductor. He refused to interfere. Several chaps volunteered to "pull me out o' that," but when they came close enough to see the muzzle of a revolver they fell back. At 2 o'clock in the morning they held a convention, and and as the result one of them asked:—

"Stranger, can we buy you off?"

"No, sir."

"Is there any way on earth to stop that bazoo of yours?"

"There is. The four of you who came in last were grossly selfish. You had no care for the rights of others. The four who were here before I came were disturbed, but hadn't the grit to kick. Now, then, promise me on your solemn words that if you ever enter a sleeping-car again you will respect the situation, and I will let you off."

Every soul in that car made the promise, and half an hour later we were all asleep.

When I reached Philadelphia I passed the baggage-car just as my trunk came out. The baggage-man gave it a whirl and a push, and it landed on one end on the truck, and there was a smash.

I at once secured his name, street, and number, and when his car was clear and he came down I said:—

"Let me see what this damage amounts to."

"What in —— have I got to do with your trunk!" he exclaimed.

"You flung it out in a reckless manner. No railroad has any more right to damage my trunk than to damage me."

"Go to Halifax!" he sneered, as he walked away.

I got the broken trunk to the hotel, had the damage estimated by a trunk-maker, and then went down to headquarters, and said to the manager of the road by which I had come in:—

"This morning my trunk was damaged four dollars' worth by careless handling. Here is the address of the baggage-man. Who shall I sue?"

"You saw the trunk damaged?" he queried.

"I did, and I have witnesses."

"Wait a few minutes."

He sent a messenger after the baggage-man. When the latter came he was asked:—

"Did you damage this man's trunk this morning?"

"It accidentally fell."

"Did you tell him to go to——?"

"He was too fresh."

"It is you who are too fresh, sir. Pay this man his damage, and if there is another complaint you will lose your place."

You know what a buffet car is, of course? It is a cross between a fifth-class restaurant and a highway robbery.

There may be some entitled to patronage and respect, but they are always attached to the train just ahead of or behind mine. On this same trip I was obliged to order a lunch in a buffet car. The waiter brought what he called coffee. I asked him to name it, and he gave it that name. I told him to throw away the stuff and make a new cup twice as strong. This second cup had a faint taste of coffee. When we had quadrupled the amount of coffee I had a bill of fifty cents to pay for a single cup, and it was about what you would get in a dollar-a-day hotel. Then I gave him ten cents for a couple of spoonfuls of his raw coffee, and a few hours later I walked in on the manager of the division, spread the stuff before him, and asked:—

"Did you buy this stuff to feed travelers on at 200 per cent profit?"

"This is half chickery," he said, as he examined it.

"And the rest is the cheapest of Rio. It is the stuff served out on buffet car No. ——"

"What?"

"I got this from the waiter."

"The scoundrel! There is trickery here. I buy the best of O. G. Java, and my orders are to serve as good coffee as can be found at the Fifth-Avenue."

Well, the waiter had been playing a little game of his own, and he got the bounce for it, and the manager thanked me for meddling. Now, here were three kicks. The row in the sleeping-car was a lesson to stick by a dozen travelers for years to come. That baggage man will be careful of your trunk, and more careful of his language for many a day, and when you order a cup of coffee on the buffet car between Buffalo and Hornellsville you will get what you ask for. Is the man who kicks a crank or a humanitarian?—Detroit Free Press.

NOVELTIES IN JEWELRY.

Placque-shaped clocks of silver are in vogue for library tables.

Gold cigar cutters with diamond tipped edges are in the market.

A hook and an eye is an old but trustworthy design now being offered in silver garter buckles.

Two leashed dogs straining at a chain held by a groom is a peculiar pattern in silver brooches.

A cricket bat of red gold and finished off with a dainty silken tassel makes a handsome book mark.

A diamond star pendant, with turquoises in skeleton settings between the points, is a handsome ornament.

An expensive but handsome novelty is a gold handle pocket knife, with emerald and diamond setting.

A chased silver hand glass, the rim set with sixteen large fresh water pearls, is considered cheap at $500.

A unique hairpin tray is of Russian silver, washed in gold and ornamented with etchings of historical scenes.

For evening wear a necklace made of fine gold barrel links, with nine medium size moonstones, is a fanciful novelty.

Old customs are recalled by the demand for silver loving cups. Twisted handles, antique in design, add to their beauty.

A new vase is of silver, with gold relief work, profusely decorated with passion flowers. It makes a handsome center piece.

A dainty pin represents a feather fan of eight fluffy plumes, each in a different shade of gold. In the center is a flashing diamond.

A parrot's head with ruby eyes makes an attractive brooch. The feathers are in the now opalescent finished gold, and look very life-like.—Jewelers' Weekly.

THE USE OF THE GIRDLE.

The girdle has grown to be a monstrous fad with the girls. This morning, in an elevated car, I found myself beside an acquaintance who had some pretense to social position. Her slim figure was encircled by a huge silver girdle, from one side of which dangled forty-six little chains. At the end of every chain was a trinket. We fell to talking about them, and I looked them over, while she chatted about the history of every one. There were fourteen Roman coins, a latch-key, pen-holder case, vinaigrette, skating medal, button hook, glove-buttoner, silver address-tablet, tiny silver bon-bon box, a corkscrew, a minature scimetar, a chatelaine watch, a small oxidized iron parasol which when opened became a fan, a bullet with which she had killed a bear on her brother's ranch, a card-case, a lock of hair in a locket, two minatures—one of Herbert Kelcey with a drooping moustache, and the other of Osmond Tearle with his eyes turned heavenward—a chain purse, a compass, a small paper-cutter, a dozen odd trinkets of every conceivable shape, and a double-barreled dog-whistle.

"Where did you collect them all?" I asked.

"Everywhere," said she, with a shrug.

"Don't you find them troublesome?"

"Oh, no; they're vastly useful."

"How so?"

"They supply subjects of conversation to men who are a little stupid in the morning," she said, sweetly, as she wandered out of the car at Fourteenth street.—San Francisco Argonaut.

COUNTING YEARS BY WINTERS.

The Dakota Indians count their years by winters and say a man is so many snows old, or that so many snow seasons have passed since an occurence. They have no divisions of time into weeks, and their months are absolutely lunar, only twelve, however, being designated, which receive their names upon the recurrance of some physical phenomenon. The Dakotas have a system of winter counts, which were formerly executed in colors on the hides of animals, but the present recorders make use of paper, books, pens, pencils and paints obtained from the whites. The figures used are extremely interesting. To represent whooping cough, for instance, a head is sketched and the cough illustrated by lines issuing from the month. On the occasion food was very scarce, and they lived on acorns. They told the story with a sketch of a crude oak tree and little dots below it representing the acorns.—Magazine American History.

Jinks—What was the matter at your house last night?

Blinks—Matter?

"Yes; something unusual going on, wasn't there?"

"Not that I know of."

"Eh? Why as I passed your house I heard a woman's voice yelling: 'Brute, monster,' etc., and a voice that sounded like yours shouting back: 'Old hen, old fool.' and I don't know what all, and then there was a great banging of furniture, and pretty soon a broomstick came through the window. Wasn't that something unusual, come now."

"No, nothing unusual."—Philadelphia Record.

A veritable child anecdote, the incident attending which occurred in Medford on Sunday last, is worth recording. A little fellow of 4 years of age came home from the session of Sunday-school swelling with the information that Jesus had walked upon the water. It made such an impression upon his imagination that he could not be content till he had tried to do the same thing. Secretly he went to the bath room of the family, filled the bath tub with water, and attempted the feat that was agitating his little mind. The result was that he was nearly drowned. Taken out of the water, his first spluttering effort at articulation appeared in the sentence: "I ain't no kind of a Jesus!"—Boston Herald.

Country editor's wife—This is an exceptionally fine codfish, John.

Country editor—Yes, and I got it cheap.

"How much?"

"Only half a column."—Texas Siftings.

Unguarded Tongues.

Tongues unguarded throw disaster
Right and left, for tongues run wild;
Cutting deep, dividing fond hearts,
Turning parents from a child;
Pleadings cannot stay their mischiefs,
Tears cannot assuage each wound;
Sorrow hovers o'er the places
Where unguarded tongues are found.

I have seen the laugh of childhood
Checked by some foreboding tone;
For hard words of constant chiding
Wear like drippings on a stone.
Fed by frowns, the child of nature
Dons a sullen, moody air;
Innocence gives place to boldness,
Joyfulness to grim despair.

I have seen the cheek of girlhood
Blanch beneath a thoughtless word,
While a rush of bitter anguish
All unsought the young heart stirred;
Visions of a faithless lover
Trusted while the trust proved vain—
These cold words of careless meanings
Quite aroused to fresh, deep pain.

I have seen the eyes of old age
Under tears grow dim and blurred—
Tears that gathered fast by tauntings,
Or by some unfeeling word.
Sad indeed to see the aged
Hurried to their graves by woe,
But they whisper very often
"We are burdens, well we know,"

O, how keen a wedge is driven
In fond hearts by words that sting—
Words that ever stand out boldly,
Though years pass and changes ring!
Unkind words are better banished
From the lips of old and young;
Each should learn and heed the motto,
"Set a guard against thy tongue."

A TRAMP'S CONQUEST.

Tom was hungry. That is not an alarming condition when one is in easy reach of a restaurant or the home table. But hungry, cold, and not over-clean, in a little Wisconsin settlement, with not a cent in one's pocket, is, to any one but a professional tramp, an embarrassing position to be in.

It was in just that position that Tom Hamilton found himself one summer morning. He, with three or four others, had been spending a couple of weeks among the famous trout streams of Wisconsin. He had made friends with two noble red men who had served them as guides.

At last these pleasure-seekers separated. Tom's vacation had not quite ended, so he was to remain a little longer.

The next day he discovered that he had lost his purse. Then he had lost his hat in going over the rapids. His coat was demoralized; his boots had lost the shine that distinguished them on State street.

What few effects he had brought with him were either in the hands of the rest of the luggage, or in the hands of his aboriginal brothers.

That morning his cogitations were something in this wise:—

"Well, Tom Hamilton, this is rather an interesting state of things. Twenty miles from a railroad station; no money, no clean clothes, no anything."

"I do charge you, Tom Hamilton, with being a tramp, that's what you are, and now be true to your character, sir, and make a successful tramp. Perhaps, however, you had better take an account of stock; in other words, see what your resources are.

"First—Two soiled handkerchiefs, evidently of former respectability; a bit of rhyming composed and sung by our campfire, evidence of extraordinary mental power; a photograph of cousin Bessie, showing that I have known the refining influence of female friendship, a copy of Tennyson, a couple of cigars and an empty match-box."

"These are my possessions this a. m. Now here is a hamlet where I ought, according to poetic tradition, to find every latch-string out and every man ready to clasp me in his arms and call me brother, ready to share the last crust of bread and the last cup of coffee with me."

Tom reconnoitered a little after the fashion of a thoroughbred tramp. One woman offered to give him his breakfast in return for an hour's devotion to her wood-pile, but he fully intended to be consistent, and so he declined her offer.

He noticed a large, pleasant-looking, brown farm-house, set well back from the road. The lawn in front was smooth as a floor. He noticed a flower-bed in the distance gay with bloom. He saw the hanging-baskets in the porch, and he looked upon the place as critically as though he meditated purchasing instead of asking for a breakfast.

"This looks inviting. This house has a fine expression, for houses have expressions as well as their inmates, and there is a young lady swinging in that hammock. I know she is young, because she has on a light-blue dress, and any one not young ought to known better than to wear light blue. She also has fair hair and blue or gray eyes.

"This is a somewhat a ridiculous way for a hungry man and a temporary beggar to reason, but it shows that my exposures and privations have not impaired my powerful intellect."

He tried his fate at the kitchen door.

"Sure now, it's hungry ye are, and it's something to ate ye're wanting."

"If you please."

"Then I'll be asking the mistress."

"Can't you give me something without?"

"Av course I could, young man, but it's Norah O'Flaherty that obeys orders."

"Certainly, Norah, give him something," he heard a sweet voice say in answer to Norah's inquiry. "What sort of a looking man is he?"

"Ah, Miss Ruth! he's a wicked-looking chap, with the blackest eyes I ever see in a living cratur's head, and he just takes in everything at a glance. I'm afraid he's a thafe, Miss Ruth."

"Did you leave him alone?"

"Not I. Maggie is there and she'll kape her two eyes on him."

"Go and give him something to eat, and I'll come out and take a look at him. But watch him well."

In a minute or two more Tom was sitting on the back porch eating a bowl of bread and milk and blackberries. Norah had given him a seat at the kitchen table and had set forth other food, but he had taken this pastoral dish and retired to the porch.

"He may be a decent fellow after all," Norah soliloquized.

Pretty soon he saw approaching him as fair a vision as had greeted his eyes for many a day. It soon materialized into a dainty little lady, apparently about nineteen, with a cloud of light brown hair, large, hazel eyes, and a sweet, but resolute-looking little mouth. She wore a light blue morning dress, had a rose at her throat, and carried a book in her hand. It was that charming little story, "One Summer."

The lady took a seat in a chair at a little distance, gave him a quick glance, in which there were sympathy and distrust mingled, the sympathy predominating, and said, "Good morning!"

"Good morning, madam!"

"Have you walked far?"

"Quite a distance."

"You look tired."

No response. Tom thought that if that was the worst thing that could be said of his looks he would be thankful.

"Are you looking for work?"

"Yes, ma'am," he answered, boldly.

"Do you understand farm work?"

"Some kinds."

"My father is in need of help. He is away from home for a few hours, but if you are inclined to wait till he returns I think he would give you something to do; but perhaps you were going somewhere in particular."

"No, madam, I was not, and I will be glad to wait."

The truth was Tom had fallen straight in love with the blue-robed maiden, and enjoyed the sensation; and though at this moment he would have given a half year's income for a change of raiment, he still felt grateful to the fate that had led or misled him to this spot. After he had finished his breakfast he told Ruth that if there was any little piece of work he could do till her father's return he was ready to undertake it.

Ruth didn't know; she thought there must be something, but she didn't just know what.

She tried to be very dignified and very business-like, and failed completely. Finally she said that if he understood using the lawn mower he might employ himself in that way for a while.

"Papa is very particular about the lawn," she said.

He could easily believe it, for it was already as smooth as a carpet; but he began his work somewhat cautiously it must be confesed.

Ruth came out and gave some little directions. The wind blew her flossy hair about her face in a most bewildering fashion, and heightened the color in her cheeks to actual rosiness. The sight of such loveliness set Tom's heart beating tumultuously under his not over-clean shirt.

The adventure was beginning to assume an embarrassing character; he wanted to be "himself again." Having assumed a false position, he found it difficult to extricate himself.

Then he heard the piano. There was a skilled hand upon the instrument, and in a moment, floating from lip and finger, arose exquisite strains from "Norma." Tom resigned his position as amateur gardener and threw himself down under a tree to listen.

Then followed a brilliant rendering of parts of "Fra Diavolo," then an aria from "Don Giovanni." This she commenced, proceeded with a certain distance, hesitated, tried again, stopped; again and again this was repeated.

Tom had several good gifts; he was a good musician and could whistle beautifully. There was something positively exquisite in it—low, and tender, and sweet, as clear and strong as the spirit of the music bird.

He thought: "I am not presentable in your parlor, but I think I can help you, if I am a tramp." So he commenced the aria she failed upon—that sweetest of all arias —"La ci darum."

That melody, with all its tender, soft earnestness, its slow, swimming tones of languor, fell upon his ear. She tried again; this time he, from his position under the tree, accompanied the piano. Again she faltered at the same place, stopped, while he carried it through to the end.

Then he saw Miss Ruth on the porch, and her sweet voice reached him, in these words, gentle and courteous, and yet with just the slightest touch of authority:—

"I wish you would come here a moment."

Tom walked slowly to her.

"I wish you would whistle that passage again, where I failed, you remember. I haven't the music. I tried to play it from memory," she half explained. "And you whistle it with wonderful accuracy, and wonderful precision, too."

Tom colored, with pleasure, through the mosquito blotches that adorned his face.

He raised his hat and said: "I will stand outside and accompany you; or, if you will grant me the pleasure, I will play it for you."

Miss Ruth lifted her hands in astonishment and replied:—

"I have seen some curious people in my life, but I don't know as I ever saw a—a—tramp who understood opera music. No! Certainly not in this region of the country."

"Miss Ruth," Tom said, "you know the poet says 'things are not always what they seem.' I am a living illustration of the truth of that statement. I am not what I seem, but I don't know as I can prove that to you. However, such credentials as I have I lay at your feet," and Tom solemnly took from his pocket his two soiled handkerchiefs, the pictur of his cousin Bessie, his copy of Tennyson, the two cigars, and the empty match-box, and also the fragment of rhyming.

"My name is Thomas de Quincy Hamilton. I live and practice law in Chicago, as did my father before me. I have wandered like a lost sheep for a day and night in the woods near here, in consequence of an injudicious love of nature and an unwise reliance upon the red man's word."

He handed her the copy of Tennyson and the picture. She glanced at the first, saw the name written on it, laid it down; but when she looked at the photograph she cried out, "Bessie Granger!" and with the impulsiveness of a girl of nineteen carried the picture to her lips and gave it a kiss that made Tom wish himself a small bit of pasteboard for a moment.

"Why, this is the picture of Bessie, my old room-mate at Vassar, and you must be her cousin Tom, of whom I've heard her talk by the hour together."

"Your penetration does you credit. I am that same cousin Tom."

Ruth held out her hands to him and said: "To think that I should have given Bessie's cousin his breakfast on the back porch and bid the servants keep an eye on him; it's too comical;" and they both laughed heartily, which helped sweep away the last trace of formality or embarrassment.

When Ruth's father, Mr. Williston, came home an hour later he was astonished beyond measure to find his daughter sitting on the piazza reading aloud to a demoralized looking youth, who sat at a respectful distance in an easy chair.

His first thought was that Ruth had found some one on whom to experiment in a philanthropic way. She was probably trying to sow good seed in a very poor ground: but he was soon disabused of that idea, as their merry laughter and chat reached his ears. He was not long in making investigations, which were, as we can understand, perfectly satisfactory.

Tom told his story; Ruth supplemented it with an account of her suspicions and Norah's watchfulness.

He said: "Since I am again within the pale of good society I find the demands of an 'effete civilization' strong on me. I can think of nothing that would go so far to reinstate me in my good opinion as a bath."

Mr. Williston escorted him to his son's room, and placed it and its belongings, including the son's wardrobe, at Tom's disposal.

He accepted Mr. Williston's invitation to spend a few days with them.

"For truly," said his host, "you are the most delightful tramp we ever entertained; your going astray has given us a great pleasure. I am here myself partly from one of the causes you have suffered from, excess of confidence in mankind. But, after all, we find this a very pleasant summer home."

"I had wondered," said Tom, "how it had come about you should choose to live here. But my wonder has been absorbed by gratitude that you did, be the cause what it might."

There followed three delightful days, days filled with music, and mirth, and "converse sweet;" days golden with heartshine, radiant with budding hopes; days love-crowned and glorious.

Tom rode away with a copy of "One Summer" in his pocket (Harry Williston's pocket by the way), and the bliss of a hundred summers in his heart, for the little Ruthie had heard his last request as graciously as she did his first, and we are all invited to the wedding, to take place at Christmas.

HOW MANY APPLES DID ADAM AND EVE EAT?

Some say Eve 8 and Adam 2, a total of 10 only.

We think the above figures entirely wrong. If Eve 8 and Adam 8 2 certainly the total will be 90. Scientific men, however, on the strength of the theory that the antediluvians were a race of giants, reason something like this: Eve 8 1 and Adam 8 2; total, 163.

Wrong again. What could be clearer than if Eve 8 1 and Adam 8 1 2 the total was 893?

If Eve 8 1 1st and Adam 8 1 2, would not the total be 1629?

George Washington says: Eve 8 1 4 Adam and Adam 8 1 2 4 Eve; together they got away with 8,938.

But if Eve 8 1 4 Adam, Adam 8 1 2 4 2 oblige Eve. Total, 82,056.

We think this, however, not a sufficient quantity, for though we admit that Eve 8 1 4 Adam, Adam, if he 8, 0 2 8 1 2 4 2 keep Eve company. Total, 80,282,056.

Everybody is wrong again. Eve, when she 8 1, 8 1 2 many, and probably felt sorry for it, but her companion, in order to relieve her sorrow, 8 1 2. Therefore, Adam, if he 8 1, 8 1 4 2 4 2 fy Eve's depressed spirit. Hence both ate 81,896,054 apples.

"What's the matter, Johnny?" asked one of the neighbor's boys, as his companion came out of the alley gate. "Ain't finished yer dinner a'ready, have ye?"

"Nop."

"Didn't ye get any?"

"Yep; but I didn't stay to finish it."

"What made ye leave so soon?"

"Well, I said something at the table, and everybody but pa laughed.—Merchant Traveller.

"Wilfrid," said he, while his larynx quivered whith tremulous pathos, "have I offended you?" "No, George, you have not." "Then why are you so silent?" "Do not ask me." I am a woman and I am trying to make a record."—San Francisco Post.

A Woman's Thought.

"I'm so weary of my home!" she cried,
"And of its endless tasks so mean and small;
I love to mingle with the world outside,
To drink from life's full cup; the drops that fall
From beakers others clasp, tho' gladly quaffed,
Slack not my thirst, my hand must hold the draught."

She feels a little hand slip into hers,
And little fingers clinging to her gown,
And in her heart a tender memory stirs
Of violet lids by early death shut down;
And as she lifts the little hinderer up,
"I drink," she cries, "at last from love's full cup.

"Forgive, dear Lord, forgive the foolish speech,
For love is all; without it life is naught;
Let me but have the blessing in my reach,
And I will nevermore complain of ought;
Life's cup may hold for woman what it will—
Without love's wine she will be thirsty still.

"And knowing this, how have I dared to call,
When love doth make the humblest toil divine,
My daily round of duties mean and small?
O darling, press your warm, soft lips to mine
While I thank God I safe at home abide,
Nor envy dwellers in the world outside."

PLANTATION PHILOSOPHY.

Ever' friend is lost by hate; ever' friend is won by love.

Er man ken dress mighty fine, an' yet hab er mighty shabby mind.

Little things is mo ter be feerd den big ones. It's de little bird dat whups the hawk.

Brabery am no sign o' sense. De game rooster will fight tell he dies, but he ain't got ez much sense ez de guinea chicken dat won't fight nuthin.'

Some preachers put me in mine o' er tailor dat makes er coat ter suit hisse'f, an'den tries to make ernuder man war it whuther it fits him ur not.

Dar ain't nuthin' filthier' den er chicken nur cleaner den er cat, but I ain't gwine ter fling erway de chicken 'ca'se it's filthy, nur eat de cat 'ca'se it's clean. Wid er woman dar ain't er inch difference twixt lub and hate.

Er wise man may believe er liar wunst, but he ain't gwine ter do it twice.

Fur years an' years de white man had been teachin' de nigger how to die, but mighty few men hab been teachin' him how ter lib.

De fus man what does er thing, no matter ef some udder man does it better, is hil up ez de pusson ter praise. We ullus think dat de fust flowers in de spring smell de sweetest.

De reason we tink dat our mudders could beat anybody cookin' is bekase we kain't carry de boy's appetite inter ole age.

When my wife says, "Doan yer tink yeo'd better do so an' so?" I commences ter argy wid her; but when she says, "Go an' do so an' so," I hus'les den an' dar.

I knowed one man what was so good dat he wouldn't pull a steer outen de ditch on Sunday. He was afterwards sent ter de penitentiary fur stealin' a hoss on Tuesday.

De baby is more ap' ter die den de man, a little more ap' ter fall den de well-grown one; de ole man is more ap' ter die den de young man, fur de ripe apple is allers ready ter drap.

It is a mighty good ting ter be 'dustrious, but too much sturrin' 'roun' aint good fer yer. De pateridge is more ap' ter be seed by de hawk when he is flyin' 'bout den when he's restin' under de bush.

Once a man tole me dat he didn't want de office what he had been nomniated fur, an' dat he wasn't gwine ter ax no man ter vote fur him, but when he foun' dat I had voted agin him he come roun' an' raised a row wid me. Now, when a canerdate tells me he doan' want de office, I may say nuthin' but I has a mighty strong 'spicion dat he's a liar.

"Whom can we think of," she said, endeavoring to awaken the interest of the class in these unfortunates, "that would have had great sympathy for those who are shut in?" "I know," said a bright little boy, with brightening face, "some one in the Bible, isn't it, teacher?" "Yes," said Miss R., "and who was it, Johnnie?" "Noah," was the spirited answer.—Harper's Weekly.

PROVERBS ABOUT WIND.

Cats with their tails up and hair apparently electrified indicate approaching wind.

If swine be restless and grunt loudly, there will be much wind.

Pigs can see the wind.

Hunters say that the direction in which the loon flies in the morning will be the direction of the wind next day.

Magpies flying three or four together, and uttering harsh words, predict windy weather.

Anvil-shaped clouds are very likely to be followed by a gale of wind.

The vernal equinoctial gales are stronger than the autumnal.

If it blows in the day it generally hushes toward evening.

If small white clouds are seen to collect together, their edges apparently rough, look for wind.

A slight yellow sky at sunset presages wind.

If the full moon rises red expect wind.

A very red sky in the east at sunset indicates stormy wind.

Heavy, white, rolling clouds in front of a storm denote high wind.

The sharper the blast,
The sooner 'tis past.

A gale moderating at sunset will increase before midnight, but if it moderates after midnight the weather will improve.

Wind storms usually subside about sunset, but if they do not the storm will probably continue during the following day.

When the glass is low,
Look out for a blow,
Fast rise after low (barometer),
Precedes a stormy blow.

Always a calm before a storm.

No weather is ill,
If the wind is still.

Every wind has its weather.

Wind in the west, weather at best.
Wind in the east, neither good for man or beast.

WE DIE TOO EARLY.

If there is any one thing, more than another, that distinguishes the American people from the Europeans, it is the matter of longevity. Look at Gladstone, in his 79th year, one of the most indefatigable workers in the English political arena, and John Bright, his old-time co-laborer, his senior in years, yet a zealous leader in the same field. President Grevy, of the French Republic, is an octogenarian. The emperor of Germany had entered the last decade of his century of life, followed closely by his military chieftain, Von Moltke, with his prime minister, Bismarck, is 77. How is it with America's public men? Of all our presidents, from Buchanan down to Cleveland, not one is living except Mr. Hayes; all died at the age when Europeans look forward with a reasonable expectancy to, at least, twenty years of public usefulness and activity. Of all our vice-presidents for the same quarter of a century, but one is living, Hanibal Hamlin, and of all who have aspired to the presidency and vice-presidency through a nomination, but one is living. Johnson, Grant, Arthur, Hancock, McClellan, Hendricks, Colfax, Brown, Blair, Wilson, Wheeler, Logan, all gone, died at the meridian of a life time. Turn to the death rolls in the daily newspapers, and see how this terrible fact is emphasized. The very few reach the 50th year; the many die before life may be said to be fairly begun. Whether it is that we as a people live too fast, or, whatever the reason for this great discrepancy in a natural life expectancy may be, the fact remains that "Americans die young."

FLIES.

A house fly is born fully grown and of mature size, and there are no little flies of the same species, the ones occasionally observed being different in kind from the larger ones. The house fly does not bite or pierce the skin, but gathers its food by a comb or rake or brushlike tongue, with which it is able to scrape the varnish from covers of books, and thus it tickles the skin of a person upon whom it alights to feed upon the perspiration. A fly is a scavenger, and is a vehicle by which contagious diseases are spread. It poisons wounds and may carry deadly virus from decaying organic matter into food. It retires from the sight at the beginning of the winter, but where it goes, few persons know. If a search of the house be made they will be found in great numbers secreted in warm places in the roof or between the partitions or floors. Last winter we had occasion to examine a roof, and found around the chimney myrids of flies hibernating comfortably and sufficiently lively to fly when disturbed "in overpowering clouds." No doubt this is a favorite winter resort for these creatures.—Boston Globe.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 16, 1888.

KANSAS gave Harrison and Morton a plurality of about 70,000 votes, a little less than Pennsylvania with her 73,000.

THE New York Central road has begun what may prove a serious railroad war by cutting the rates on west-bound freight from 20 to 40 per cent.

IT looks as if Speaker Carlisle's reëlection might be successfully contested on the ground of fraudulent votes being cast for him to an amount exceeding his majority.

THE newspapers are getting on swimmingly with the make-up of Gen. Harrison's cabinet,—a subject with which the president-elect hasn't bothered himself as yet, we'll warrent.

AMERICA surrendered to England very gracefully at Washington yesterday, when Mary C. Endicott, daughter of our secretary of war, became the bride of Joseph Chamberlain of England.

PERU recently closed up a house occupied by a United States consul, and refuses to apologize for the unneighborly act. If she isn't a little more careful in her demeanor Uncle Sam will go down and give her a trouncing.

THE usual after-election foolishness has begun a'ready, a good Republican in Philadelphia having named his twin baby boys Harrison and Morton. They are pretty good names, however, and the boys ought to thrive under them.

LOOK out for war with England p. d. q. The daughter of the late British minister, who was recently bounced by the president, met Mrs. Cleveland in a Washington store the other day and actually failed to bow to her. The reserves should be called out forthwith.

THE quidnuncs are wondering whether Congressman Reed of Maine or McKinley of Ohio will be chosen speaker of the 51st Congress. As leader of the minority in the House for the past four years Mr. Reed ought to be able to read his title clear to the speakership.

OUR Democratic administration encourages American shipping by hiring a foreign vessel to take a naval expedition to Mexico and Central America for telegraphic determination of longitude, and this when there are plenty of American vessels to be had suitable for the service.

THE Montreal Star mourns over the result of our election last week in this fashion:—

> In England the result of the presidential election is received with disappointment. The British manufacturers were hoping that the Democratic party would continue in office and that the tariff would be lowered, thus allowing of the admission of British-made goods. But this hope is knocked on the head.

ONE of the first things the next Congress will do, in all probability, will be to add three or four new stars to the national flag. Dakota, Montana and Washington have been knocking for admission to the sisterhood of states, but the Democratic House would do nothing about it because it would add so many to the number of Republican states.

AFTER all, the Democratic party must feel a great measure of relief over its defeat, for the reform cloak under which it has been masquerading has fitted terribly snug, as its frequent rents have shown only too clearly. Now it can be thrown off for a time, allowing the party to indulge in a good long breath without danger of "busting" anything.

BECAUSE some Republican negroes whose votes were counted out demanded a recount at Brunswick, Miss., last week, one of them was shot and killed and another fatally injured. Now we are told that they are arming and drilling for the purpose of massacring all the whites in the town, but when the news of the massacre comes it will be found that nineteen out of every twenty killed are negroes.

MAYOR O'BRIEN of Boston was nominated by the Democrats Wednesday evening. The surprise of the evening came in the appointment of a committee to confer with a similar committee of the Republican city convention, for the purpose of nominating a non-partisan school committee, to be placed on both tickets. This is an admirable move, and ought to give the city a first-class school committee.

REPUBLICANS all over the country have been uncorking a good deal of enthusiasm the past week over the election of Harrison and Morton. It was a great victory, and no mistake, and the rejoicing is both natural and proper. But with the victory comes the responsibility, and if needed legislation is not accomplished the Republicans will be to blame, for there will be no Democratic House to throw the responsibility upon.

A TELEPHONE decision of considerable interest was rendered by the United States supreme court Monday, being the first unfavorable verdict in a long list of decisions which the Bell company has obtained from the courts. This one merely affirms the power of the government to inquire into the question whether the Bell patent was obtained by fraud, but it opens the door for some substantial possibilities in the future.

In my estimation," says John A. Brooks, Prohibitory candidate for vice president, "Cleveland is the uncrowned king of American statesmen, and his name and conservative rule will long live in history. I consider this election adverse to prohibition. Had the Democrats continued in power Prohibition would have been given a wider field." This is undoubtedly true, for the Democrats have always been noted for giving prohibition a wide field,—all out doors in fact. By the way, the Prohibitionists who helped to elect Gov. Hill in New York, the notorious friend of the saloons, and defeated Warner Miller, the champion of temperance, must feel that they have given temperance a mighty lift in that state.

PALMER AND VICINITY.

The Baptist Sunday-school will give a concert at the church next Sunday evening.

Dwyer & Sullivan have placed a new sign over the entrance to their grocery store.

A movement is being made by some of the young men of the village to form a debating society.

Rev. F. W. Betts of St. Paul's Universalist church attended special services at Westfield to-day.

Rev. A. W. Weeks conducted the religious exercises at the state primary school Sunday evening.

Firemen's hall should be better fitted up, in order to make it more attractive and homelike to the members of the department.

Quite a number came from Monson, Ludlow and Wales Monday evening, to see what the Republicans of this town "had to offer."

Complaint has been made to the selectmen that dogs have recently injured a flock of sheep belonging to Albert Marsh, who will claim damages.

Sears & Cook, the Central street grocers, have dissolved partnership, the former returning to Lenox, while the latter will continue the business.

Mrs. E. R. Savin, residing on South Main street, died from internal injuries Wednesday night, and the funeral and interment took place to-day.

The schools were closed to-day, to allow the teachers an opportunity of attending the annual meeting of the academic and high school teachers at Northampton.

Those interested in the formation of the new brass sextette will meet at H. W. Munger's establishment, on South Main street, next Tuesday evening at 7 o'clock.

L. L. Merrick Post and the Woman's Relief Corps will hold a ten-cent sociable in G. A. R. Hall next Tuesday evening. A "donkey party" will be the entertainment.

Sheriff Healey thinks he has obtained a clue which will lead to the arrest and conviction of the parties who recently entered the depot at Monson and robbed the till of its contents.

J. H. Shaw, one of the overseers in Holden's woolen mill, was the recipient of a pleasant surprise party and a valuable gold watch, Tuesday evening, given by his friends and associates.

The selectmen of Palmer and Monson have accepted the stone work on the new Blanchardville bridge, erected by Thompson Brothers of Monson, and the wood work will be commenced shortly.

A sad sight on Central street Tuesday was a woman lying dead drunk in the gutter. She was well dressed and gave her name as Rose Jackson, of Boston, at the district court Wednesday morning, where she paid $6.58.

A musicale was given at the residence of John A. Squier on North Main street, Tuesday evening, and a large number were present and enjoyed the treat. A good programme was carried out, several local and outside soloists participating.

A horse belonging to Martin Maxwell of Silver Street became frightened at a passing locomotive Tuesday afternoon, and indulged in a lively run down Main street, overturning and smashing the vehicle, and somewhat injuring the driver.

The Republicans procured a quantity of new torches for the parade Monday evening, and for use in celebrating future victories. The next one, by the way, comes in 1892, according to Senator Quay, who says Harrison will be re-elected.

The county commissioners held a hearing at the district court room yesterday afternoon, in the matter of discontinuing the Fenton and Farrell bridges. The testimony of those who claim land damages was taken, and the meeting adjourned with the decision of the commissioners reserved.

Those who attended the leap year party given by the Woman's Relief Corps last spring will remember it as a particularly enjoyable affair. The Corps is preparing to gave another in the near future, when they intended to go the whole figure, the music being furnished by ladies, and a lady prompter.

Charles Blake, a flagman on the Central Massachusetts Railroad, fell under the wheels while attempting to board a freight train on the New London Northern Railroad Saturday evening and had his ankle broken and foot otherwise injured. He was conveyed to the Converse House, where he was cared for by Dr. William Holbrook.

Braman B. Adams, Jr., formerly of this town, has a twenty-two page article on "The every-day life of Railroad men," with nineteen illustrations by A. B. Frost, in the current number of Scribner's Magazine. Mr. Adams was assistant station agent at Palmer, and later was station agent at Westfield, but is now on the editorial staff of the Railroad Gazette, New York city.

W. H. Hitchcock and H. T. Huntington were badly hurt by the bursting of a cannon Wednesday evening at North Wilbraham, where they had gone to participate in a Republican celebration. Mr. Hitchcock escaped with a severe cut over the eye and a few other bruises on the head, but Huntington had one arm broken and the flesh badly mangled, and will probably be laid up for some time.

Manager Conry intends to present an attractive programme at the Brunswick Billiard Parlors and Gymnasium, Thanksgiving week, and has engaged a variety company to give entertainments nightly. A small stage is soon to be put in, and the place will be run on the principle of the side shows in the metropolitan dime museums. Sparring between two professionals takes places to-morrow evening.

The dead body of the unknown man who was found in an old building on the farm of the Joseph King estate at West Brimfield recently, has been buried in the Thorndike street cemetery, the authorities being unable to obtain even the slightest clue to his identity. It was thought to have been the body of one Harrington, who it is supposed recently jumped off the South end bridge at Springfield, but an examination of the remains proved contrary.

Some of the Democrats are "kicking" because the fire engine house was illuminated Monday evening, claiming that it is a town building, and party politics should have nothing to do with town matters. Some pretty sharp things have been said about the chief engineer in connection with this matter, but Mr. Hitchcock wishes it understood that he had nothing to do with it, and did not even know the building was illuminated until his attention was called to it.

Barnard Walbridge, a lad of eight years or thereabouts, had a narrow escape from being burned to death during the Republican rally Monday evening. He was walking near the team containing the fire-works when a small ball of fire, discharged from a rocket, went into his coat pocket, where he had a collection of Roman candles stored for his own use. The fire burned his clothing badly and discharged the candles, and but for timely assistance the lad would have not escaped so fortunately.

The pool tournament at the Brunswick Billiard Parlors and Gymnasium terminated Monday evening, having had a good attendance. Smith of Springfield carried away the laurels and first money, while Dawson of Palmer was accorded second and Parker of Palmer third. The result of all the games up to last Thursday evening was given in last week's JOURNAL, and those from Friday evening until the close of the tournament follow: Friday evening, Dawson 11, Rooney 10, Smith 11; Parker 10. Saturday evening, Smith 11, Rooney 7.

It takes skillful manipulation on the part of a young lady with numerous admirers to prevent a collision between the different ones, as was discovered by one in this place last Sunday. She accepted an invitation to ride in the afternoon with one of Palmer's young men, stipulating that she must return at 6.30, as she had an engagement at that hour. It was just 6.30 when they returned, and as they drove up another admirer appeared from the opposite direction with his team. She is now wondering whether she has lost both chances for future rides or not.

Paid His Election Bet.

An election bet was settled here last Saturday evening, and long before the time announced for the show a large number of people had gathered on the sidewalks to see the funny spectacle. The bet was a wheelbarrow ride from a point on North Main street to the Palmer National Bank and return, and was between J. T. Donovan and A. C. Page. Donavan, whose choice was Cleveland, held the handles and marched steadily along, while Page seemed to enjoy the ride as much as if it had been in an upholstered hack. The vehicle was decorated with the national colors, and the street urchins followed en masse, blowing fish horns and shouting for Harrison.

Personal.

Ashley Royce of Winsted, Ct., was in town over Sunday on a visit.

Stillman Ellis contemplates a visit to California this winter.

C. P. Stone spent a portion of the present week in Vermont.

Miss Katie L. Curley spent Sunday at her home in New London, Ct.

G. L. Hitchcock of Keene, N. H., was in town this week renewing acquaintances.

Dr. E. E. Hill will return from Philadelphia Nov. 24, to remain about two weeks.

Mrs. W. J. Keith of Springfield has been stopping at D. W. Taft's on Pine street, this week.

Miss Mary Mason now has charge of the telegraph office at Warren, recently opened by the United Lines Company.

John S. Holden was one of the reception committee at the pubiic dinner of the Home Market Club at Boston last evening.

Mrs. M. M. Martin and two children of Townsend, Vt., are visiting at the Converse House as the guests of Mrs. C. P. Stone.

Superintendent Roth of the Eagleville mills, at Eagleville, Ct., and wife, were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Sanders over Sunday.

Fred Tuttle, who has been employed by the American Express Company at Springfield for some time, has ceased duties there and accepted a position in Brown & Abbe's market.

D. B. Collity, formerly clerk at the Weeks House, has accepted a position with Dr. Wilbur, and will have charge of his horses the coming winter. His position at the Weeks House is filled by D. Needham of Stafford.

The Arcanum Hunt.

The annual hunt took place Tuesday under the auspices of Quaboag Council, Royal Arcanum. The weather was all that could have been desired, and the hunters arose bright and early. The teams were composed of members of the society and others, and the woods were scoured in every direction, and as a result an unusually large amount of game was bagged, the best individual scores being made by F. C. Hatch, A. N. Southwick and C. E. Fuller. The hunting parties met at headquarters at 7 o'clock the same evening, where much time was spent in commenting upon the size and variety of some of the strings. The teams were composed of the following:—

Captain—F. N. Carpenter; C. E. Fuller, F. O. Munger, G. F. Erskine, George Griffin, D. F. Holden, C. T. Brainard, George W. Wilcox, Fred Allen, W. F. Wait, J. W. Weeks, Jr., C. E. Fish, H. W. Smith, H. L. Holden, H. D. Converse, George A. Bills, E. G. Hastings; C. D. Holbrook, Rufus Flynt, W. A. Barnes, J. S. Knox, D. H. Brown, C. A. LeGro, F. W. Harrison, George Magrath, H. G. Loomis, J. Foley, William McDonald, G. C. Ellis, A. N. Southwick, C. A. Brown.

Captain—H. P. Holden; F. C. Hatch, Silas Keith, S. L. Ferry, Charles Holden, J. S. Holden, George A. Rice, J. F. Holbrook, H. N. Sedgewick, William Haines, A. C. Merritt, O. J. Stockwell, James Hatch, A. Pinney, E. A. Maxwell, George W. Lyman, George M. Atkins, W. C. Hitchcock, A. L. Hills, M. M. Cook, James F. Fenton, C. K. Gamwell, W. H. Stowe, H. E. W. Clark, H. A. Northrop, F. D. Barton, Stillman Ellis, Henry A. Loomis, Stephen S. Taft, F. G. Sedgwick, W. C. Dewey.

The former team scored 3355 points, while the latter scored 3050. The judges were George A. Rice, Andrew Pinney and George F. Erskine. A fine supper and dance was enjoyed at the Weeks House Wednesday evening, paid for by the losing side, and the occasion was much enjoyed. The Palmer orchestra furnished the music for dancing.

The Republican Demonstration.

A meeting of the Republicans of this town was held at the district court room Friday evening, and committees chosen to arrange for a celebration of the recent national victory on the following evening, but rain necessitated a postponement until Monday evening, when the programme was carried out very successfully. Enthusiasm was manifest at an early hour, and at 7 o'clock the cannons which were stationed on Dewey's hill began to boom, and kept it up at intervals during the march of the procession. Two large bonfires were lighted on Knox hill and burned brilliantly. The procession formed on Church street in the following order:

Chief Marshal, Capt. H. E. W. Clark, and assistants.
Drum Major, F. O. Munger.
Bondsville Brass Band.
Harrison and Morton Mounted Brigade.
Republican Men and Boys' Battalions.
Tally-ho coach containing the surviving members of the Silver Grays of 1840.

Some of the transparencies were: "How about returning those rebel flags, Grover?" "Exodus, Grover C., March 4, 1889." "Exodus: The tribes of Benjamin and Levi want a change." "The soldiers voted as they shot." "Harrison, 239." A team with a large quantity of fireworks preceded the procession, and brilliantly illuminated the following line of march: From Church street to Pleasant, up Pleasant to Central, down Central to Maine, down Main to Fox avenue. Countermarch, Main to North Main, Squier to Pine, through Pine to Knox, through Knox to Foster avenue, thence to Thorndike, to Park, from Park to Pearl, from Pearl to Pleasant, through Pleasant to Walnut, down Walnut to Main, up Main to Church, where the procession disbanded, the march consuming over two hours. There was a general illumination by private residents and business men, which was pronounced the finest ever seen in town. In fact, there were few houses which were not lighted. The horsemen looked finely, and many of the leading citizens joined the parade and carried either a torch or a broom. The sidewalks and streets were well filled, many coming from the other villages to witness the celebration and to jeer at Grover or shout for Harrison, as they felt disposed.

THREE RIVERS.

Eaton & Newell commenced running their meat cart Wednesday.

J. I. Milliken, who has been in the employ of the Palmer mill for 15 years, the last six as assistant superintendent, has resigned to take effect December 1st, and will go to Lawrence as superintendent of the Everett mill.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

The Republicans made a creditable display of illuminations and fireworks Monday evening, and the Bondsville band furnished music. The enjoyment of the occasion was marred by the bursting of a cannon, which severely injured H. T. Huntington and W. H. Hitchcock of Palmer, the former receiving a broken arm and the latter some bad cuts on the head.

WEST WARREN.

Miss Lottie Hussey of Maine is visiting her aunt, Mrs. Frank West.

Felix Labre has taken J. M. Scott's place as boss carder in No. 4 mill.

John M. Scott, foreman in No. 4 mill card-room, left Wednesday night for Nashville, Tenn., where he is to have a similar position. His Sunday school gave him a gold scarf pin, cuff buttons and ring; his help in the mill presented him with a gold-headed pin.

WARREN.

Schools close next week for a short vacation.

Miss Ida Lilley has returned from a visit in New York.

Mrs. Kingman left Wednesday for her home in Minneapolis.

Episcopal servics were held in Crescent Hall last Sabbath afternoon, with a good attendance.

The illumination Wednesday evening was very fine, a large number from Ware being present.

Mr. Whipple, who has been in Boston the past few weeks for medical treatment, is expected home soon.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Converse entertained the choir of which Mrs. C. is a member, Monday evening.

The invitations for the marriage of Frank Strickland and Miss Deland of Worcester are out for next week Thursday.

The funeral of Edgar F. Wetherbee took place in the Universalist church Wednesday afternoon. The Odd Fellows, of which he was a member, attended in a body. Mr. Wetherbee leaves a wife.

The teachers' institute, which was held Tuesday, had a good attendance. Mr. Greenough of the Westfield high school, Mr. Edson, Supt. Aldrich of Quincy, and Miss Gay of Springfield were present.

WALES.

Mrs. A. L. Rogers is painting her house.

E. Shaw is putting up a large shed to store tools and wagons in.

Miss Ursula J. Shaw is spending a few weeks with Mrs. A. L. Rogers.

The bonfire at Spencer's illumination Monday night could be plainly seen from the Laurel Hill cemetery.

Ephriam Switzer is extensively repairing the fence and walks around Mrs. A. L. Rogers's house. He has also started his horse power wood saw, and is doing a large business cutting up the winter wood.

The town was painted red Monday night. Seventy-five houses were illuminated, several of which were very elegantly lighted. The streets were crowded with people until 10 o'clock. A few of the faithful ones kept their houses dark, but they were lighted from the outside with red fire by the boys who were enjoying the fun.

Although the weather has been so unfavorable, the work of painting the Baptist church is finally completed. It was due chiefly to the enterprise of the ladies of the aid society connected with the church, that it was painted at this time. More than a year ago they saw that such work was needed to be done, and as it was the object of the society to aid the church, they decided that they could do it in no better way than this. For this end they have worked, and this fall have seen their object accomplished, at a cost of about $200. Much credit is also due to Frank Hulitt, who had charge of the work. It has been done in a most satisfactory manner, and is not a little improvement to the town.

THORNDIKE.

Mrs. C. McAuliffe is visiting friends in Boston.

The forty-hours devotion is soon to be held at the Catholic church.

A pool room has been opened in the basement of Loftus's building on Commercial street.

Miss Susie Page, who is now confined to her home by a fall received in the mill, is recovering.

John Farrell accidently cut his leg Tuesday with a jack-knife, and received a painful wound.

New signs, bearing the names of the different streets in the village, have recently been put up.

Several from this place attended the jollification at Palmer Monday, and report it a sight worth seeing.

Pat Maloney's show, which appeared here on Thursday last, was greeted with a good house and was all it was advertised to be.

The festival at the Congregational church Tuesday evening was largely attended and much enjoyed. It was a success throughout.

There is some talk among the local Republicans in regard to changing the post-office. There are two candidates for the position.

A social dance will be held at Union Hall this evening under the auspices of the X. O. B. club, with music by Lyons and Luman's orchestra.

P. J. Nelligan is doing some concrete work for the Thorndike Co. at No. 2 mill. Business in the mills is brisk, and an order was received one day this week for 184 cases of goods.

There is talk of having an eight hour go-as-you-please walking match at Union hall in the near future, with prizes of $15, $10 and $5. Entries to be left at the Clinton House. Further particulars will be published in a few weeks.

The Ivers & Pond Piano Co. of Boston is putting in a number of pianos and organs in this place which give good satisfaction and are sold at bottom prices, $250 to $500 for pianos, and $90 to $175 for organs. All orders left with John F. Luman will receive prompt attention.

Great preparations are being made by the Emmet club for the coming entertainment and dance, which will take place Thanksgiving Eve, Nov. 28th. James Lossee of Indian Orchard is to prompt, and Lyons and Luman's orchestra will furnish the music.

Mrs. Ellen Fay, an old and well-known resident of this village, died Saturday after a long and painful illness. Her funeral took place from the Catholic church Monday morning, and was largely attended by her many friends and acquaintances.

James Sullivan, employed by the Thorndike Co., met with a narrow escape from serious injury Saturday, while handling cases in the storage building. The floor on which he was standing broke, letting part of his body through and causing a havy case to fall on him. Fortunately he escaped with a few bruises.

MONSON.

A. J. Robbins is in feeble health.

Will King is improving, and will be out again soon.

Only a few attended the Levy concert at Willimantic Tuesday evening.

Mrs. Jacob Rogers has been visiting friends in Stafford Springs the past week.

Herbert Noble of Child's business college, Springfield, was at home over Sunday.

Horace Squier has gone to Illinois on a business trip, and will be gone about two weeks.

P. B. Johnson, the contractor of the wood work on the Universalist church, has moved his family here.

Rev. I. A. Priest will exchange pulpits with Rev. J. H. Simmons of Stafford Springs, Sunday morning.

Public examinations begin next Tuesday at 2 p. m. and Wednesday at 9 a. m. Public rhetoricals at 2 p. m. Wednesdays.

A. N. Gaouette has on exhibition in Jenks's show window a large and handsome crayon portrait as a sample of his skill in this line.

A number of local sportsmen went to Westford last week on a hunting trip, and brought back a large string of game, among which were 12 coons.

The geography question in the public schools has at last been settled, the Warren's common school, revised edition, having been adopted.

A fair, under the auspices of St Patrick's society, will be held week after next, commencing the 25th, with a sacred concert in the evening.

James Savage, who was injured so badly and lost his right arm at Cushman's mill recently, has been presented with $135 by his friends as a token of sympathy.

A business man gets shaved at one of the local barber shops free for one year, resulting from a bet with the proprietor, who in case he won was to have 20 cents for every time he shaved the young man.

That prominent Democrat did his duty in good shape when he gave three cheers for Harrison and Morton under the flag in front of Central block, but it made him Swett to do it.

The Universalist society will hold a sociable in Central hall next Tuesday evening. Supper will be served in the usual way, at the usual hour. Admission is free, and a cordial invitation is extended to all.

The revival services at the Methodist church have been continued three evenings of this week with good results. Twenty-nine were received into the church on probation Sunday morning, making fifty-six in all.

Hen thieves seem to be doing a pretty successful business. Nelson Skinner, who lives on Moulton Hill, found all of his fowls had been stolen one night this week. Omar Broadway's hen roost was also visited and a number of chickens and a turkey stolen.

The Christian Endeavor society of the M. E. church, which was organized in May with a membership of 22, has increased to 53 active and 10 associate members, 29 having joined the society within a month. The society holds very interesting meetings every Sabbath evening at 6 o'clock.

Sarah E., wife of Charles Aldrich, died at her home Tuesday morning of consumption at the age of 28. She has been a patient sufferer for years, and was much esteemed by her friends. The funeral was held at the house Thursday afternoon, the services being conducted by Rev. J. H. Emerson, of whose church she was a member.

Monson no doubt possesses one of the finest water plants in Massachusetts. Chief Engineer Fred Fuller, and his assistant Frank Lee of Boston, have been at work for the past few weeks surveying for the Monson Water Co. and the reservoir of the company will be built just below the Conant mill pond. This is 400 feet above the level of Main street, which is sufficient for all purposes, and will throw water over any house in the village. The company could easily get a much larger fall of water by going farther up the stream.

Academy News.

The written examinations have come, bringing with them trouble and anxiety.

The members of the Philomathean society have been invited to attend the meeting of the Linophilian society Friday evening.

The lecture Friday evening, given by Rev. F. S. Hatch, pastor of the Congregational church, on "Paris," was well attended, and those present heard a most entertaining description of that city's wonders.

The last sociable of the term will be held Monday evening, November 26th.

The Olympics of Wesleyan academy have challenged the newly organized foot ball team to a game.

The rhetorical exercises are made more interesting by the addition of a more extensive musical programme. The quartette furnished music Friday, which was well appreciated.

The winter term opens Wednesday, December 5th, at 8.45 a. m. Board is furnished at Hammond hall at cost, and the total expenses, including board, room, care of room, fuel and lights, for the past two months, has been $3.23 for boys and $3.15 for girls.

WARE AND VICINITY.

A children's dramatic entertainment was given this week at the convent.

E. W. Lawton has purchased a half interest in the real estate and insurance business of Levi W. Robinson. The business will be continued at Mr. Robinson's old stand under the firm name of Robinson & Lawton.

Active preparations are being made for an interesting and amusing time at the social at the chapel this evening. The costumes of "ye olden times," that will be brought out on this occasion, will be astonishing to the young people of today.

The first regular meeting of the Wednesday evening club was held Tuesday evening. The inaugural essay by the president, the subject of which was "A glance at last year's work: a stimulating word for the future and something of a plan for the ensuing year," will appear in the STANDARD next week.

The annual harvest supper by the Ladies' Benevolent Society of Gilbertville will be given Thursday evening. Judging from the past the quantity and quality will be such that none need go hungry. The supper will be followed by an entertainment, consisting of singing, readings and music.

The first lecture of the Ware course was given Tuesday evening by Rev. A. E. Winship of Boston, and was one of the most interesting and instructive ever given in Ware. His "Street Rambles in Mexico" were so vividly portrayed in word pictures that there was no need of the stereopticon or other illustration.

Wednesday and Thursday evenings the Unitarian society held a pleasing entertainment, called a prismette, in the town hall. The drop curtain had a fine rain-bow in tissue paper upon it, fancy and useful articles were on sale, and a large and beautiful flower-stand was in the center of the hall. The marrionettes were exceedingly funny, and everybody seemed happy. The singing by a quartette of Amherst College students was very fine and much appreciated.

Nearly two weeks have passed and no tidings of Royal Smith, who so mysteriously disappeared. Sunday the Grand Army, of which he was a member, organized a systematic search for him, dragging the river but finding no trace of him. He was not of a quarrelsome disposition, nor is it likely he would have much funds about him, so there seems to be no motive for foul play. Dennis Towne, one of the searching party, was insulted and stoned by the boys in the vicinity of Water street.

The first of the union gospel meetings was held at the Town Hall Sunday evening, which was well filled by an interested audience. Revs. A. T. Perry, E. Hitchcock and T. A. Dorion were on the platform. The singing was under the direction of Henry B. Anderson, Geo. G. Hall organist, A. G. Noble, cornet. The service commenced with a praise meeting, singing selections from gospel hymns, after which Rev. A. T. Perry preached an able sermon from Romans 6: 23, "For the wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." He was followed by Rev. E. Hitchcock in a few words of exhortation given in a tender, feeling manner. These services are to be held every Sunday evening for the present.

William Daunt of Hardwick was found insensible by the roadside near the house of D. A. Jennison, Thursday afternoon. The officials of Ware were notified and Policeman Maurice Fitzgerald went for him and brought him to the police station at Ware, where his wounds were dressed by Dr. W. W. Miner. There was a fearful wound over the right temple, but the skull was not broken. Later in the evening he recovered consciousness sufficient to say that his horse ran and he was thrown out, and it is supposed his head struck a stone. He was driving a young horse and had two empty barrels in the wagon, the rattle of which it is supposed frightened the horse. His sister is the wife of Michael Buckley of Ware.

Fatal Accident.

Joseph Hamilton, a Scotchman 28 years of age, was instantly killed in the flannel scouring department of the Geo. H. Gilbert Mfg. Co's. mill last Saturday afternoon. His work was in tending the washer, standing back of it, and taking the ends of the cloth as they were handed to him by the man in front and throwing them between the rolls of the washer. No one saw the accident, but it is supposed that in throwing the wet ends to the rolls he threw them back over his head where they were caught on a shaft running about 100 turns per minute, and wound instantly about it, taking the man with it. He was badly crushed and mutilated, and his neck broken. He had been in this country but a few months, and leaves a wife and two children, the eldest but about three years old. The funeral was held at his residence on Water street Monday, Rev. C. W. Duffield conducting the service.

The Republican Celebration.

The Republicans had a rousing ratification rally Monday night. Joy and gladness seemed to pervade the town, and there was music in the air from the Cornet and Cadet bands and the Warren Drum Corps. The line of march was not as long as at a former parade, but covered Aspen, Vigeant, North, Cottage, Church, High, Bank, Pleasant, East, Knox, Maple, Chestnut, South, Main, Storrs and Eddy streets. The decorations and illuminations were exceedingly fine, some of those who did not vote for Harrison joining in the celebration by illuminating their dwellings. On Pleasant street the yards of G. K. Cutler, Mrs. Sturtevant and C. Hitchcock seemed one mass of Chinese lanterns; the residence of H. P. Cummings, D. C. Marsh, W. S. Dunham, Dr. O. W. Roberts and the unfinished house of George Campbell were especially attractive. Although perhaps not as expensive as many others on the line, THE STANDARD displayed a banner 14 feet long bearing the portraits of Harrison and Morton and the words "The Ware Standard, 34 years old Always Republican," which was given rousing cheers. The fireworks by C. A. Stevens and C. D. and J. H. G. Gilbert were especially fine, the procession being halted to witness them. The fireworks wagon kept up a display most of the way. The procession consisted of the Harrison and Morton Battalion and cavalry, company of about a hundred men in uniform from Warren, and 68 men from Gilbertville with brooms instead of torches, and citizens in carriages. After the parade a collation was served in the town hall where brief addresses were made by Charles A. Stevens, chairman of the Republican club, W. H. Kelley of Warren, Rev. B. V. Stevenson and H. C. Davis. Campaign songs were sung, in which the Warren drum corps gave efficient assistance. Four hundred rations were served at the collation, put up in neat paper boxes with hot coffee from the Oriental Tea Company, brought here hot from Boston in their patent insulated cans. Dennis Towne fired a salute of 84 guns during the evening.

MRS. ROBINSON, the murderess who poisoned eight, mostly blood relatives, for their life insurance money, escapes the just penalty of her terrible crimes, the governor having commuted her death sentence to imprisonment for life. The fact that she was a woman made her crime the more awful and her punishment should have been equally impressive. The commutations of sentence must be generally regarded as a serious mistake.

JOTTINGS FROM THE HUB.

From our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, NOV. 14, 1888.

During this week thus far the suburbs of Boston have resounded with the drums of the victorious Republicans celebrating the election of Harrison and Morton. Rockets, Roman candles and red lights have been employed to express the exuberation which the Republicans feel over their great victory, and as much is made of it as if they had been out of office for a generation. I hope that it does not come, any of it, from expectation of getting all the offices, for if it does, what will become of our principle of civil service reform? The Republican administration ought to profit by the example which befell the Cleveland administration in Maryland, and not try to do otherwise than fill the offices with the best men available, without too close scrutiny into their party standing. For the politicians may as well recognize now as later that the reform of the civil service is one of the issues which has come to stay till it is settled right.

Here in Boston the result has been accepted quietly, and business goes on as usual. The Republicans are full of assurances that they will take hold of the tariff and reduce it in the best possible manner for the interests of the country. But they all say that a reduction must be made. The Democrats say that they are still alive and that they made a good fight. The independents have not spent any time mourning over spilled milk, but have set at work at once to organize for the next campaign. This week a meeting of the Massachusetts Tariff Reform League will be held to decide what steps shall be taken next, and offers of speakers have already been received. New applications are being made for membership, and letters come in saying that the good work must go on and that success in the end is sure. I have not happened to see any of the Prohibitionists since the election, except Mr. Frank H. Dyer, the secretary of their state committee. The falling off of the vote in this state, he says, is what he expected, for they could not hold what they had in 1884, when some of the Republicans who could not vote for Blaine or Cleveland voted for St. John as a sort of protest, nor did he expect that they would hold up to their vote of 1887, for it is the natural tendency of men in a national campaign to range themselves with one of the two great parties. Some of the Prohibitionists are much disappointed at the success of the Republicans, for they hoped that they would be defeated in order that the strength of the third party might be made manifest, and thus the urgency of the reform compel more people to come into the third party. But they must find their consolation in the doubled vote of the party outside of Massachusetts. There is nothing to console them here.

Now that the election is over, the thoughts of the politicians are turning to the organization of the Legislature, and much work has been done already by the aspirants for the chairs of the Senate and House. It seems to be generally conceded that the president of the Senate will be Senator Hartwell of Fitchburg, and there has been but little opposition to him. The oleo men would doubtless prefer some other candidate, but they will have to be satisfied with such positions on the committees as he will give them. It is said that there is a clear anti-oleo majority in the Legislature, so that the farmers are sure of getting their desired legislation the coming session. Certainly the Republicans will have a great majority, and will be able to do anything they please, from the re-election of Senator Hoar to the passage of the prohibitory constitutional amendment, without calling upon any of the Democrats for help. The responsibility and the glory will both be theirs, and all that the Democrats can do will be to look on and wait in patience for whatever the future may have to give them.

In the House there is a lively canvass for the speakership. Speaker Noyes was left out by the Republican caucus and Theodore C. Bates was unexpectedly defeated after he had secured the Republican nomination. This leaves the field open to men of less pretension, men who would not be mentioned if Mr. Noyes had been returned, though this does not necessarily imply that they will not make as good speakers as Mr. Noyes. Among the candidates thus far are Messrs. Slocum of Newton, Wardwell of Haverhill, Bottum of Northampton, Barrett of Melrose and Wyman of Hyde Park. Mention has been made of Messrs. Read of Cambridge and Hayes of Lynn, but they do not seem to have much support yet; indeed, Mr. Hayes says he is not a candidate, but is in favor of Mr. Wardwell. There will be some important legislation to come up, and the members will do well to make themselves familiar with it as far as possible, and to post themselves on recent legislation. The number of new men is large, and the constant curse of the Legislature is the inexperience of members.

The Catholic question has been revived again as soon as the election issues have subsided. There will be a meeting to-morrow night in Tremont Temple, of the committee of one hundred, to show to the public something which is found in the text books favored by the Catholics. It is evident that this question will press for solution, and it is very likely that some measures will be presented to the Legislature in order to protect the public school system from the withdrawal of the children of many parents into parochial schools. In Watertown, it will be remembered, when the fall term began, several of the schools were closed because so many of the children had been removed to the parochial schools that it was not thought best to keep the schools open.

The religious agitation known as the Andover controversy has advanced another stage in consequence of the action of the prudential committee of the American Board in again refusing to send out under their auspices Rev. William H. Noyes, as was asked by the Berkeley street church, in accord with the advice of the recent council. The committee find that Mr. Noyes still holds the views regarding future probation which he did when he was rejected before, and that under the instructions of the board they are not at liberty to send him out. It seems that the real trouble with this doctrine, and why it is so obnoxious to the board, and to many orthodox people, is that it is supposed to rest upon the theory that the doctrine of the atonement, which is usually received, is mistaken, and that the fact of the incarnation is the essential part of the life of Christ upon earth, and that his death was not necessary for human salvation. Thus it is seen that much more is involved than the question of what Mr. Noyes believes about the future probation of the heathen. The Berkeley street church will send him out as a missionary on its own responsibility, and thus there will be started a separate missionary enterprise. It is a very momentous event for the American Board.

To-day there has been dedicated on the Common the monument to the memory of Crispus Attucks, the negro who fell at the head of the State street crowd in March, 1770, at the so-called Boston massacre. It is a handsome monument, and will be immensely pleasing to the colored people, for it recognizes one of their number.

LANDON.

Eminent physicians recommend Laxador as the most effectual specific for dispepsia or indigestion. Price only 25 cents a package.

Large sales indicate the merits of all good articles. Druggists sell more of Dr. Bull's Baby Syrup than of all other remedies for the cure of baby disorders.

Everyone who has once used Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup invariably resorts to it again for colds, etc.

"When vice prevails and impious men bear sway,"
When cuts, sprains, bruises torment all the day;
Then ease from pain—from care and hurt is sent
By great Salvation Oil, the standard liniment.

Do You Wish

To regain your health if you are all broken down and suffering from nervous prostration? I will tell you what cured me after suffering for months. I used two bottles of Sulphur Bitters, and now I am a well man.—C. STILES, Bookkeeper, Canton.

Oriental Beauties

Secured delicate complexions and soft skins centuries ago, by use of Cream of Mecca. Send address of four lady friends and 10 cents in stamps to W. E. & W. P. Thayer, 231 Savin Hill avenue, Boston, for sample box and book.

An Eminent

Temperance lecturer in New England, Mrs. John Barton, says: I was subject to deathly sick head aches and also dispepsia. Sulphur Bitters cured me when all other remedies failed. Mrs. Barton is the wife of John Barton, Superintendent of Repairs, Pacific Mills, Lawrence, Mass.

The Excitement Not Over.

The rush on the druggists still continues and daily scores of people call for a bottle of Kemp's Balsam for the throat and lungs for the cure of coughs, colds, asthma, bronchitis, and consumption. Kemp's Balsam, the standard family remedy, is sold on a guarantee and never fails to gives entire satisfaction. Price 50c and $1.

An Enormous Circulation.

The day after election the circulation of the BOSTON DAILY GLOBE reached the amazing figure of 424.250—more than three times the figures of the same day four years ago. The GLOBE is taken by people in all shades of politics, because it is the most enterprising newspaper in New England, and always give the true facts, especially after an election.

Palmer to have a Theater.

It has been noised about the town that Mr. V. H. Woolrich, of Pick-Me-Up medicine fame, had returned to Palmer and was on the lookout for a site on which to build a theater. Being interested, one of our reporters called on him a day or two ago and the following conversation ensued: Reporter:—"Is there any truth in the report that you are going to build a theater here in Palmer?" Mr. Woolrich: —"Well I have thought some of doing so. You see, we need one in the town, and if a suitable one is built, why we could have the best companies stop off and make us a night stand. You know the old adage—A little nonsense now and then is relished by the best of men," and Palmer should have some once in a while." Reporter:—"Have you as yet made any definite plans?" Mr. W.:—Well, yes, I have the plans for the building. It will be a ground floor theater, the same as the Park Theater of Boston, the auditorium will be in the form of a horse shoe, there will be a balcony with a seating capacity of 300, a parquet circle will grace the pit with 200, seats and the body of the house will seat 300 more, making the total seating capacity 800; there will be a private box each side of the proscenium arch; the stage will be 40 x 60 feet, being large enough to produce any opera or drama; the stage instead of bowing out as is usual, will bow in, it will be complete in every detail, the rigging loft will be of the best, the slides and groves and scenery will be of the best; under the stage there will be twelve dressing rooms, furnished with set-bowls, mirrors, etc. The floor will be built on the "jack principal," it will dip toward the stage, and for balls, parties, public gatherings, etc., it can be let down on a level. The building will be lighted throughout by incandescant light, Thomson-Houston system, and will be the most complete and one of the best play houses in Western Massachusetts. In the meanwhile be up with the times Woolrich's New Market Condiment makes a ten-dollar horse worth a hundred. Now is the time to try it. Buy it at the store where you trade. $1.00 per can. It is a sure winner."

Who's Afraid.

A celebrated photographer while making pictures along the rough coast of New England, set his camera to take the view of a double row of rocks off York Beach, Maine, with the waves dashing over them, when three sunny-faced children appeared on the scene from behind the rocks where they had been hidden from view, running towards the water as though to plunge into the surf, and by accident halted directly in front of the camera already set, when a clear manly voice from the distance rang out the warning to the younger child, "My Darling, don't go near the water!" They turned, each in characteristic pose, and the reply came from the little one, "Who's afraid!" Snap went the rubber on the camera, and the sunbeams had fixed forever a picture, piquant, roguish and withal such a touch of nature as no artist's fancy could ever body forth.

By special consent of the parents, who are prominent in New England society, the Chicago & North Western Railway Company have invoked the "Art Preservative," and the picture has been duly engraved upon steel bp the celebrated engravers, John A. Lowell & Co., Boston, and copyrighted, forms the basis of one of the most beautiful and attractive souvenirs ever offered by a railway company to its patrons.

Many copies have been distributed free, but so great is the desire to possess one of these beautiful works of art that even the generous North Western calls a halt.

Copies of this picture, which is spoken of in art circles as a "modern classic" in connection with a chaste and ornate callendar for 1889, will be sent, postage paid, to any address, in return for 25 cents in stamps or postal note, or for two dollars nine copies will be sent, express free, to any point in the United States, by

CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA.

For three weeks I was suffering from a severe cold in my head, accompanied by a pain in the temples. I tried some of the many catarrh remedies without any relief. Ely's Cream Balm was recommended to me. After only six applications of the Balm every trace of my cold was removed. HENRY C. CLARK, 1st Divison New York Appraisers office.

Would You Believe

The proprietor of Kemp's Balsam gives thousands of bottles away yearly? This mode of advertising would prove ruinous if the balsam was not a perfect cure for coughs and all throat and lung troubles. You will see the excellent effect after taking the first dose. Don't hesitate! Procure a bottle to-day to keep in your home or room for immediate or future use. Trial bottle free at all druggists. Large size 50c and $1.

CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA.

Mothers.

Remember that Castoria does not contain Morphine, Opium, or any other narcotic substance, in any quantity, shape or form. It is entirely vegetable, pleasant to take, positively effective, and perfectly harmless. It is not a secret remedy; the formula is printed on the wrapper. Your physician will recommend it. Paregoric, Bateman's Drops, and many so-called Soothing Syrups, are composed principally of Opium or Morphine; in any quantity they stupify, and in large quantities are deadly poisons. Castoria assimilates the food and regulates the bowels, cures diarrhœa, allays feverishness and fretfulness, soothes the pains in teething, relieves constipation and kills worms. It brings refreshing and natural sleep to the child, and gives rest to the mother.

"Castoria is so well adapted to infants and children, that I recommend it as superior to any other known remedy." DR. H. A. ARCHER,
111 South street, Brooklyn, N. Y.
March 8, 1888.

"From personal knowledge and observation I can say that Castoria is an excellent medicine for children, acting as a laxative and relieving the pent up bowels and general system very much. Many mothers have told me of its excellent effect upon their children. DR. G C. OSGOOD.

Advice to Mothers.

Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of cutting teeth? If so, send at once and get a bottle of Mrs. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures dysentery and diarrhœa, regulates the stomach and bowels, cures wind colic, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. Mrs. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING is pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female nurses and physicians in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price 25 cents a bottle. 1y23

SPECIAL.

YES, you go to Springfield to trade because you do much better there, and they have larger stocks from which to select. Those are points. Now when there, drop into SAXTON'S jewelry store and have a rich treat, looking at diamonds, watches, solid silver ware, clocks, etc., and find yourself welcome, even though not desiring to buy. You see elegant things on every hand, and more than likely see a new novelty, just the present for Christmas, or other occasions. Buying a ladies' solid gold watch, handsomely engraved, for $25 (twelve styles to select from) is worth your thought. You can go very much higher. Finger rings, engraved and plain band, $2.50 and up, with tiny rings of solid gold for baby, 50c. and upward. Cuff holders a pair, 50c.; so much better than the common pin. Think of these useful presents:

Gold thimbles, $3.50 up.
Solid silver thimbles, 25c. up.
Napkin rings, name engraved, 50c.

The boy wants a watch—natural enough—a stem-winder; silver $10, nickel $2.50, isn't hard on your pocket. A silver-toned clock for $6 and upwards adds a charm to home at small expense. A silver or gold-lined cup at $1.00 would make the child's face more radiant than any cup. If we should speak of bracelets, cuff buttons, studs, knives, forks, spoons, etc., you would lack time to read of them, so you will have to visit our large store with its first-class stock, feast on its elegant novelties, and purchase, if you desire, what you may find cheaper and better than elsewhere.

THE CENTURY
MAGAZINE IN 1889.

WHY has it such an enormous circulation? Experts estimate that between two and three millions of people read each number.

BECAUSE THE CENTURY is above everything a leader. It led the development of wood-engraving in America, and it has fostered American authors. It is alive to the issues of to-day. What it prints sets people to thinking and talking.

BECAUSE whatever other periodicals may come into the family, the great reading world has found out that "no household can keep abreast of the times without THE CENTURY." "Its success is explained by its contents.',

BECAUSE the greatest writers of the world like to have their work read by the greatest number, and therefore to such a magazine as THE CENTURY the best naturally comes. It was for THE CENTURY that Gen. Grant first wrote his reminiscences of important battles.

BECAUSE it is publishing the life of Abraham Lincoln, by his private secretaries. Of this it has been said, "The young man who is not reading it robs himself of that which he will one day hunger for." The coming year presents the most important part of this great history, which may be begun at any time.

BECAUSE it is printing those remarkable articles on "Siberia and the Exile System," by George Kennan, which are attracting universal attention and are being reprinted in hundreds of foreign newspapers, but are not allowed to enter Russia. The "Chicago Tribune" says that "no other magazine articles printed in the English language just now touch upon a subject which so vitally interests all thoughtful people in Europe and America and Asia." They are "as judicial as the opinion of a Supreme Court tribunal,—as thrilling as the most sensational drama."

BECAUSE during 1889 THE CENTURY is to have a series of engravings of the greatest pictures of an old Italian masters, made by Timothy Cole, the leading wood-engraver of the world, who has spent four years in Italy on this work, a series of "Strange True Stories of Louisianna," by George W. Cable; occasional richly illustrated papers describing the scenes of the current International Sunday-School lessons; interesting illustrated papers on Ireland, and a series of humorous and pathetic Irish-American stories; a striking illustrated novelette, "The Romance of Dollard," by a new writer, and other novelettes to be announced later; supplementary war papers, untechnical and descriptive of special incidents; "Pictures of the Far West," by Mary Hallock Foote, etc., etc. We have not space here to announce all the new features. Let us send you (free) our "Catalogue of Special Publications," with original illustrations, containing full prospectus, special offer of back numbers to beginning of the Siberian papers, etc. The November number, which begins the new volume, is for sale everywhere after November 1st. THE CENTURY costs 35 cents a number; $4 a year. Address

There's a place of exceeding interest in Springfield—everybody goes to it. That brick building, corner of Main and Vernon streets—that's the place.

What goes on there? Go in first door you come to. Now use your eyes. Up, down, this way, that way, any way. It's Forbes & Wallace's.

You know Forbes & Wallace's? Nobody does. The people right in it don't know it. It begins anew about every day in the year, that is, it isn't this morning what it was last night: it won't be the same this afternoon. . . . It's growing.

The fact is, Springfield wanted just such a place, and got it. The region round about Springfield want just such a place, and got it. And now the whole of Western New England wants just such a place. It hasn't got it, only because it doesn't know how to use it yet.

There are stores enough: there's stuff enough—such as they are and such as it is. What is wanted is a good one, available everywhere; with good stuff in it, the best that's made. And then the means of communication between the whole region and it.

Other merchants don't like Forbes & Wallace. They ought to like them. They give them useful lessons.

People would not go or write all the way to Springfield if the merchants here did as they do. What is it they do? Put themselves in the customer's place.

That one hint out of human nature is worth more than ten generations of cunning. Confidence is better than craft.

A Scheme of Emigration.

The "Brewers" should to "Malta" go,
The "Boobies" all to "Scilly,"
The "Quakers" to the "Friendly Isles,"
The "Furriers" to "Chili."

The little snarling, caroling babes
Who break our nightly rest,
Should be packed off to "Babylon,"
To "Lap" land or to "Brest."

From "Spithead," "Cooks" go o'er to "Greece,"
And while the "Miser" waits
His passage to the "Guinea Coast,"
"Spendthrifts" are in the "Straits."

"Spinsters" should to "Needles" go,
"Wine bibbers" to "Burgundy,"
"Gourmaids" should launch at "Sandwich Isles,"
"Wags" at the "Bay of Fundy."

"Bachelors" to the "United States,"
"Maids to the "Isle of Man;"
Let "Gardeners" go to "Botany Bay,"
And "Shoe blacks" to "Japan."

Thus emigrate, and misplaced man
Will no longer vex us,
And all who are not provided for
Had better go to "Texas."

AMONG THE PARAGRAPHERS.

"What is an edition de luxe?" asked a customer in a Pittsburg book store. "It is simply an edition de looks," was the conclusive reply.—Pittsburg Chronicle.

"Ma," said Bobby thoughtfully, "I wish I had a brother or two." "Why, Bobby?" "To divide up the spanking. It's tough on a boy to be the only one in the family that gets spanked."

Passenger—"You must do with a quarter this time, Augustus; I haven't anything less than a hundred dollar bill." Palace car porter—"I can change it fo' you, sah."—The General Manager.

The small boy who owns a red sled is now begging his mother to build a very thick basement to his winter pantaloons, in order that he may have adequate coast defences.—Chicago News.

Father—"Mary, didn't I see Mr. Slim with his arm around you last evening?" Mary (indignantly)—"No, sir; you didn't. We had the curtains pulled down and the door shut."—Washington Critic.

Sweet Girl—Mercy! It's 10 o'clock. Has time ever passed so quickly with you as it does now? Devoted Lover (a traveling salesman)—"Never, except at railroad dining stations."—Philadelphia Record.

"Oh, grandpop," said little Johnnie, "ain't you getting bald?" "Yes, my little shaver," replied the old man, sadly rubbing his hand over his head, "such is life—hair to-day and gone to-morrow."—New York Evening Sun.

Mrs. Jason—"Jehiel, was there ever any such person as the foolkiller?" Mr. Jason—"What idiotic questions you do ask. How the dickens do I know? I never met him." "Mrs. Jason—"Oh, I know that."—Terre Haute Express.

Worthy of Consideration—"I see that a new word is called for to describe railroad accidents," remarked Spacer; "the word 'telescope' is not considered appropriate." "Isn't it?" replied Tinman; "then how would collideoscope do?"—Puck.

"I've been awful naughty, to-day, papa?" said little Annie when her father came home one night. "Mamma had to tie me into a chair, then she tied my feet and tied my hands, but alas! alas! she couldn't tie my tongue."—Duluth Paragrapher.

Marriage a Success. "Have you paid any attention to the controversy about marriage as a failure?" "Yes, considerable. But marriage is a success." "What makes you think so?" "My wife's late uncle left her $10,000."—Lincoln Journal.

"Amarintha, in accepting me, you have made me immeasurably happy." "I'm glad to know it, Arthur. You are not in the least superstitious, are you?" "No, darling. Why do you ask?" "Because you are the 13th man to propose to me this summer."—Life.

Ransom—"I thought you said you were going to move your house, Smith?" Smith—"Well, I did think of it, but came to the conclusion it couldn't be done." Ransom—"Why not?" Smith—"The mortgage would break the jacks."—Burlington Free Press.

The Bazar is informed of the appropriate selection of an organist at a recent church wedding. As soon as the happy pair had been pronounced man and wife the organist played, "She never will be miss-ed, she never will be miss-ed."—Harper's Bazar.

Sunday-school teacher—"Now, children, that the lesson is ended, you may ask any questions you like, and I will try to answer them. Is there anything you want to know, Willie?" "Yes, ma'am." "What is it?" "Which club do yer think winned der game at der park terday?"

Stout old lady (to druggist's boy)—"Boy, d'ye keep a preparation for reducing the weight?" Boy—"Yes'm." Stout old lady—"Well, I don't know eggsactly how much I ought to git." Boy (digagnosingly)—"Better take all we've got, ma'am."—Harper's Bazar.

Aunty—Cud yo' he'p a poor ole' woman, sah, what was nuss to Gawge Washington? Gentleman — Nonsense, Aunty; George Washington died before you were born. Aunty—Am dat so, sah? Hit doesn't seem so long ter me. I decla'e ter goodness, how time do fly.—Lewiston (Me.) Journal.

Robinson—"Jackson, I hear that Brown called you a liar last night." Jackson (bitterly)—"Yes, he called me a liar." Robinson—"And didn't you resent it?" Jackson (warmly)—"Resent it? You bet I did! I told him that was simply a matter of opinion and not of fact. No man can call me a liar and get away with it!"—Life.

"I tell you," said a traveling man to a companion on the train, "you'll never catch me playing seven-up with Bill Scriven." "Why not?" "Because I saw him turn up a jack off the bottom of the deck." "Well, I'd rather play with him than I would with Jerry Spader." "Why?" "Because when Jerry turns a jack off the bottom you can't see him do it."—Merchant Traveller.

There had been a runaway. A pair of horses were down, a carriage smashed to pieces, and the driver and a lady lay groaning on the grass with their hurts. The street car stopped and many got off to render aid. Among those who stood on the rear platform were two ladies, one of whom held up her hands in horror and exclaimed: "Mercy on me! but what an awful, awful affair! How long did you say you boiled your grape jelly, Mrs. Smith?"—Detroit Free Press.

COFFEE AS A DISINFECTANT.

Years ago some studious German made the observation, the correctness of which he endeavored and to a great extent also succeeded to establish by statistical data, that coffee, if taken early in the morning on the empty stomach, acted as a preventative against infectious and mainly acute epidemic diseases. He quoted a great number of cases where individuals accustomed to drink a cup of hot coffee for breakfast had either escaped an epidemic of typhoid, then raging the part of Germany in which the observer lived, or if attacked by the disease, contracted it in a much milder form; while all those who died from the disease had not been in the habit of taking coffee in the morning. This was a good number of years ago, at a time when in many parts of Germany coffee was still either unknown or so costly a beverage as to be looked up as a luxury that only the rich could enjoy. We have forgotten the name of the physician, but remember that the medical profession did not take kindly to the idea of coffee being a disinfectant, or, as they then said, an anti-zymotic, and those who could not deny the correctness of the observation itself, ascribed the apparent immunity to other causes, many to the hot water with which the coffee was prepared. That the physician, however, has not been so wrong, has been but recently proved. During the last meeting of the Prussian army surgeons in Berlin, Medical Director Opper reported that after extensive investigations, which he related in detail, he had discovered that we possess in coffee an anticeptic remedy of no mean value, but one which could well serve for first dressing of a wound received in battle. If employed at once, it totally prevented suppuration, but if used after puss had already accumulated in the wound, it leads to the formation of a scab, beneath which the wound heals with complete asepsia. The coffee should be employed in the form of powder, and as it might entail the loss of valuable time to have to grind first the roasted coffee bean, which in Prussia every soldier is bound to carry about him, Dr. Opper recommends the use of coffee tablets which have been recently discovered by a Hamburg firm, and which answer their purpose admirable well, as it is only necessary to rub these tablets a little, when they at once assume a powder form.—Medical and Surgical Reporter.

THE TREATMENT OF INFANTS.

It is a subject of marved to most people that so many children die in infancy, but to the observing mind the wonder is that any children live to maturity. When you and I feel miserable we want to be left in quiet. Repose is the sweetest remedy for nervousness or other ills; but the baby is trotted, bounced, "ketchy-ketchied," chucked under the chin, poked in its cheek, or somebody's thumb is thrust into its toothless mouth irrespective of a need of ablution, and then if a baby isn't happy, it is reputed very irritable. Tickling the baby's feet, creeping the fingers like the motion of a mouse across its breast and up into its fat, sensitive neck wrinkles, is another mode of amusing baby. Of course the child laughs, and the idots who torment it forget that it has the same expression with which they reply to a similar process from the hand of some mischievous but torturing friend; and yet we all know that this laugh from a man is a hysterical outcry of nervous irritability. When the laugh ceases, weariness brings weeping, or perhaps a restless and unrefreshing sleep, followed by depression, and probably by indigestion and colic. Nothing should ever be done to startle a child—even a too frequent playing of bo-peep, if violent, has been known to bring on St. Vitus's dance. All surprises are dangerous to the nervous system, just as all sudden atmosphere or dietetic changes are very unhealthy, and sometimes fatal. If music is selected to please the young child's ears, it should be gentle and soothing.

AMBIDEXTERITY.

As a suggestion for the left-handed child's mother I offer the following with thanks for the helpful contributions of others: At dinner one day I heard two or three left-handed people relate their experience, about as follows: Said one, "My teacher always required me to use my right hand in writing, and to this day I write awkwardly and slowly." "My teacher," said another, "allowed me to use both, and I can write as easily and rapidly with my left hand now as others do with their right." My own conclusion was: The true way with left-handed people, and others, too, to a certain extent, is to teach them to use both hands fairly well, for anything so important as writing, drawing, ironing, just as we endeavor to do in piano and organ playing, for instance. It is a relief for the arm and shoulder in ironing, pumping, lifting and machine work. It will tend to prevent the enlarging of one hand or permanent raising of one shoulder, more than one instance of which has come under our observation, from the excessive use of one hand, or the careless leaning on one elbow during school days. And if an accident should happen to the right hand like the losing of two fingers in a gasoline blaze, as occurred recently, or the weakening resulting from a sprain, or a "weeping sinew," which is quite common, one has a well trained hand to depend.

SWEATY FEET.

It is sometimes the case that the feet sweat so profusely that it amounts to a disease; and the exuded matter soon becomes offensive. Noticing in a recent medical journal that Dr. G. Thin of London had proposed a remedy, we advised a friend who was badly troubled with his feet, to try it. The result was so satisfactory at once that we think proper to make known the remedy, as it may relieve others from an annoying affliction. The treatment is merely to soak the feet of the socks in a saturated solution of boracic acid, dry them, and they are ready to put on again; the change is made twice daily. It is also advised to use cork in-soles, which are similarly soaked and dried, and changed with the socks. Boracic acid is not very soluble; an ounce in a quart of water will make a solution near enough to saturation. The acid is a natural product, and not very expensive; it is kept in the drug stores in large cities, and others can easily procure it. The antiseptic or preservative powers of this acid are very marked, and its application is rapidly extending.

TRUE ECONOMY. — It is true economy to buy Hood's Sarsaparilla, for 100 Doses for One Dollar," is original with and true only of this popular medicine. If you wish to prove this, buy a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla and measure its contents. You will find it to hold 100 teaspoonfuls. Now read the directions, and you will find that the average dose for persons of different ages is less than one teaspoonful. This is certainly conclusive and unanswerable evidence of the peculiar strength and economy of Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"I took Hood's Sarsaparilla for loss of appetite, dyspepsia, and general languor. It did me a vast amount of good, and I have no hesitancy in recommending it."—J. W. Willeford, Quincy, Ill.

"I have been troubled by scrofulous affection all my life. It is one of the marked recollections of my boyhood days, and for several years has rendered me unable to labor much. I think Hood's Sarsaparilla, which I have been using at intervals for ten years, is the best thing I have ever taken. I am now 60, and my general health seems better than ever.—H. D. Abbott, Warren, N. H.

CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER.

The Purest and Best.

Is made only of strictly pure grape cream of tartar, strictly pure bicarbonate of soda, and a small portion of flour as a preservative, nothing else whatever, and is warranted entirely free from alum, ammonia, phosphates, lime, and all other adulterations frequently found in baking powders. The character of materials used, their purity, and the nicety of their combination, render Cleveland's superior baking the most healthful and most economical in use, and it always affords wholesome, nutritious, and delicious food.

It is recommended for purity, healthfulness and efficiency by government and state chemists, chemists of boards of health, and professors in institutions of learning throughout the country.

Sold only in cans. Full weight.

FOR CHRISTMAS.

JOHNSON'S UNIVERSAL CYCLOPÆDIA (Revised edition) is a whole library of universal knowledge from the pens of the ablest scholars in America and Europe. It is accepted as high authority in our leading colleges and institutions of learning. It is not for the few, like Appleton's, the Britanica, or the International, BUT FOR ALL. It has just been thoroughly revised at a cost of over $60,000 and three years' labor by forty editors and over 2000 renowned contributors. It is in eight convenient sized volumes. No father can give to his child at school or his son or daughter just entering the arena of life anything that will be of more permanent benefit. It is an education supplementary to that of the schools.

S. S. S. FOR THE BLOOD.

PEED'S MILL, TEXAS, June 20, 1888.—The Swift Specific Company, Atlanta, Ga.—Gentlemen: One of my children was troubled with rheumatism and boils for about two years. We gave her various kinds of medicine, but without profit, and began to despair of curing her at all. I was persuaded to try your Swift's Specific. After she had used several bottles the diseases all disappeared, and she is now a hale, hearty and healthy girl twelve years old. Another child has just become afflicted in the same way, and I am using the S. S. S. and anticipate a prompt and permanent cure.

N. C. WAGGONER.

RICH HILL, MO., July 7, 1888—The Swift Specific Co., Atlanta, Ga.—Gentlemen: Our little girl when but three weeks old broke out with eczema. We tried the prescriptions from several good doctors, but without any special benefit. We tried S. S. S., and by the time one bottle was gone her head began to heal, and by the time she had taken six bottles she was completely cured. Now she has a full and heavy head of hair—a robust, hearty child. I feel it but my duty to make this statement.

Respectfully, H. T. SHOBE.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., June 27, 1888—The Swift Specific Co., Atlanta, Ga.—Gentlemen: In 1886 I contracted blood poison, and at once sought a physician, who treated me for several months. By his advice I went to Crab Orchard Springs, Ky., where his course of treatment was carefully observed. I recovered, as I thought, but the next spring pimples began to appear on my face and body. These gradually increased to sores and running ulcers. I was advised to try S. S. S., and immediately after taking it I commenced to improve, slowly at first, but more rapidly afterwards, and soon nothing remained to tell of my trouble. My blood is now thoroughly cleansed, and my system free from taint, and I owe my present condition—a perfect cure—to your medicine. I cheerfully give this statement that others who have suffered as I have may reap the same benefit.

HARDY M. BURT, 24 West Ninth St.

HOMER, LA., May 25, 1888—The Swift Specific Co., Atlanta, Ga.—Gentlemen: About two years ago my general health gave way entirely. I was so debilitated that I almost despaired of ever feeling well again. All that the physicians did for me brought no permanent relief. Friends insisted that I should give S. S. S. a fair trial, although I thought it would be throwing away money. After taking a thorough course my health and strength returned, and I must say that S. S. S. alone cured me, as I discarded all others while using it. As a tonic I can most heartily recommend it; for general debility, it certainly is a specific.

W. F. BRIDGES, J. P.

HOMER, LA.—I know Mr. W. F. Bridges, and will say that his statement is correct.

MASON & HAMLIN.

The cabinet organ was introduced in its present form by Mason & Hamlin in 1861. Other makers followed in the manufacture of the instruments, but the Mason & Hamlin organs have always maintained their supremacy as the best in the world.

Mason & Hamlin offer, as demonstration of the unequalled excellence of their organs, the fact that at all of the great World's Exhibitions, since that of Paris, 1867, in competition with best makers of all countries, they have invariably taken the highest honors. Illustrated catalogues free.

ORGANS $22 to $900.

Mason & Hamlin do not hesitate to make extraordinary claim for their pianos, that they are superior to all others. They recognize the high excellence achieved by other leading makers in the art of piano making, but still claim superiority. This they attribute solely to the remarkable improvement introduced by them in the year 1882, and now known as the "Mason & Hamlin Piano Stringer," by the use of which is secured the greatest possible purity and refinement of tone, together with great increased capacity for standing in tune and other important advantages.

PIANOS Grand & Upright

A circular containing testimonials from three hundred purchasers, musicians, and tuners, sent, together with descriptive catalogue, to any applicant.

Pianos and organs sold for cash or easy payments; also rented.

"It is simply the ideal young people's magazine, and holds the first place."—Boston Journal.

ST. NICHOLAS FOR 1889.

AN ALL-AROUND-THE-WORLD YEAR.

THIS world-renowned magazine "for young people and their elders" is to have a great programme for the new volume beginning with November, 1888. The editor, Mrs. Mary Mapes Dodge, calls it "an all around-the-world year." Of course the bulk of the contents, as heretofore, will relate to American subjects: but young America is always glad to learn what goes on in the world outside, and these stories and descriptive papers are not of the dry geographical order, and they will be strikingly illustrated. We have space here for only a few prominent announcements.

AMERICA.

"Little Saint Elizabeth," by Mrs. Burnett, author of "Little Lord Fauntleroy;" "The Routine of the Republic, how the Government is carried on;" "College Athletics;" "Amateur Photography;" "Boys and the National Guard;" "The Girls' Crusade;" Indian Stories, etc. "The Bells of St. Anne," a serial about Canada. South American stories—"A Railroad in the Clouds;" "Indians of the Amazon," by Mrs. Frank R. Stockton, etc.

EUROPE.

Life in Norway, by H. H. Boyesen; "Holland and the Dutch," by Mrs. Mary Mapes Dodge; "The Queen's Navy," by Lieut. F. H. Smith, R. N.; "The Winchester School;" "English Railway Trains;" "Ferdinand de Lesseps;" "German, Italian (art) and Russian papers, etc., etc.

ASIA.

Yan Phou Lee writes of "Boys and Girls in China," and there is a description of "Some of John Chinaman's Inventions." Mrs. Holman Hunt describes "Home Life in the East;" papers on Siam, Japan and other countries.

AFRICA.

"The White Pasha," by Noah Brooks, a sketch of Henry M. Stanley; "How an American Family Lived in Egypt;" "Sailor-Boy Domios," a story of the seige of Alexandria.

AUSTRALIA.

A series of interesting articles imparting much novel and amusing information concerning the history, the animal and plant life, etc., of a wonderful land.

THE ARCTIC REGIONS AND THE SEA.

"How We Made the Farthest North," by Gen. A. W. Greely, of the Greely expedition; "A Dash with Dogs for Life or Death," by Lieut. Schwatka; "A Modern Middy;" "A Submarine Ramble," etc., etc.

Subscription price $3 a year; 25 cents a number. Subscriptions are received by booksellers and newsdealers everywhere, or by the publishers. Remit by post-office money order, bank check, draft, or registered letter. The new volume begins with November. December is the great Christmas number.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE.

ILLUSTRATED.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE is the most useful, entertaining, and beautiful periodical in the world. Among the attractions for 1889 will be a new novel —an American story, entitled "Jupiter Lights"—by Constance F. Woolson; illustrations of Shakespeare's Comedies by E. A. Abby; a series of articles on Russia, illustrated by T. de Thulstrup; papers on the Dominion of Canada and a characteristic serial by Charles Dudley Warner; "Three Norwegian Studies," by Bjornstjerne, illustrated; "Commodus," a historical play by the author of "Ben-Hur," illustrated by J. R. Weguelin, etc. The editorial departments are conducted by George William Curtis, William Dean Howells, and Charles Dudley Warner.

"This Farm For Sale."

"For sale?" Yes, that's the word, stranger;
I'm kind o' put to it, you see,
Or, rather more plainly in speech, sir,
A mortgage is closing on me.

I've put a notice conspicuous;
And sent a few lines to the press,
That the home where I've raised my children
Must go for its value, or less.

In a thoughtless and ill-fated moment
I borrowed some funds, you see,
And gave as security perfect,
The mortgage that now worries me.

I thought at the time that I borrowed
That all would come right in the end,
But I failed to provide for the future—
I borrowed the money to spend.

And times have grown harder and harder,
Each year only makes matters worse;
The debt has grown larger and larger,
While lanker and leaner my purse.

The day that I borrowed the money
And made out the papers in town—
Signed, sealed and delivered, recorded,
Both signatures fairly wrote down—

Oh! bother the day and the money;
I don't like to talk of it now,
For with it many misfortunes
Seem strangely connected, somehow.

Like slow-moving sand in the hour glass,
My substance has frittered away;
A cancer that gnaws at my vitals—
The instrument signed on that day.

Yes, stranger, the farm is for sale, sir,
Just fix on the figures yourself,
Only see that the mortgage is covered—
I want that thing laid on the shelf.

The buildings, the fences, improvements,
Have all been the work of my hands;
I hate now to break up and leave them,
But I foolishly mortgaged my lands.

The paper's as firm and as binding
As any good lawyer could draw;
The time is fast closing about me,
So mention your price and I'll go.

We'll not haggle long as to terms, sir,
The money's not coming to me;
Just draw in and cancel those papers
And see that I'm perfectly free.

Then move right along to possession;
I'll pull up my stakes and go west,
And try to grow up with the country—
I think this arrangement the best.

AN AUSTRALIAN "UNCLE TOM'S CABIN."

"Uncle Tom! Uncle Tom!"

"Yes, missie, me here."

"You go longa house, tell plenty Mary come."

"Fetch picaninny, missie?"

"Oh, yes; dim dim master want to see picaninny"—and Uncle Tom departed, beaming with a smile that reached from ear to ear of his black shining face.

I ventured to question my young hostess on the rather strange-sounding appellation she had bestowed upon me.

"Oh," she replied laughingly, "dim dim means a white man. And now tell me what do you think of our plantation home?"

I had come from the far south to spend a holiday at the sugar plantation of my old friend, Jack Hamblin. I do not care to think how many years had passed since, college chums in the old country, we parted to go each on his separate path in life. I went to Australia to make my fortune, as every one in those days was supposed to do · who exiled himself to "the land of the golden fleece." It has yet to be made. A few days afterward I heard that my one-time chum had taken the same step, but he went to Queensland, the land of sugar and eternal summer, whilst I settled down in far distant Sydney. Years after we met at the house of a mutual friend, and renewed our friendship. Jack was on his way to England to bring home a bride. When he returned I must visit him. This was my visit. And Jack's bride? I had expected to meet a staid, elderly woman—for the rascal was 40 if he were a day—but imagine my surprise, and, of course, my delight (one being never too old to enjoy the society of a pretty woman), when I found, dressed in a gown of soft Indian silk with a tint of old ivory in it, a beautiful girl, who could not have been more than 20, waiting under the cool, green shade of the broad veranda to greet us.

"And now," said Jack, "the first thing for you to do, old fellow, is to get out of those wretched city togs into something more suitable to the climate. We'll soon make a planter of you."

Behold me, on my return, clad in spotless white. Then luncheon in a dark, cool room, with soft-footed "niggers" waiting at your chair. And the fruit! Delicious pineapple, ripe mangoes, if you liked them, and a capital curry. Back to the veranda; a luxurious cane chair and a well-seasoned cigar. I felt that I was going to have "a real good time."

"Well, Mrs. Hamblin, if all plantation life be like this, I am afraid I shall be unable, for lack of adjectives, to express my appreciation. Whew! Think of the musty, dusty old city! I'm afraid you must take me as a permanent lodger."

"It is not all like this, as you will learn. Plantation life has its dark as well as its bright side."

"The dark side, I suppose, is the 'nigger.'"

"Well, I'm afraid he is one of the very dark sides. Do you know that is the only subject my husband and I have quarreled about. I do not like this—"

"Slave trade?"

"Well, it is an unpleasant name, but that is really what it means. You are, my husband tells me, a very old—"

"Thanks."

"I mean a very good friend of his, and so I shall talk quite freely to you. Well, since I have been here—and that is not quite a year—I have seen enough of the 'labor trade,' as they call it, to make me detest it. I positively hate it. Oh, if you only knew—but here is Uncle Tom. What a tribe of Marys! I believe he has hunted up every one on the plantation."

"Liza say she want speak some, missie," announced Tom, having marshaled the women in line.

"Well, Liza?—Liza, I may tell you, is a bride, but I'm afraid it was very much a marriage of convenience. Sam, her husband, had a very full box."

"Missie, me no like Sammy," said Liza, a strapping young wench, whose personal attractions were accentuated by a long straw stuck into a hole drilled into the tip of her nose. "Sammy he no speaka me. He plenty sleep. He always sleep."

Liza returned to the ranks, and her temper being no doubt ruffled by the conduct of the somnolent Sammy, fell out with a young mother by her side.

"He, he! you g'long, woman; you no get in wayer me. 'Cos you got little fellow piccaninny, you plenty proud. You!" This with superb scorn.

They make a picturesque group, clad in loose gowns of bed-chintz, with bright scarlet or blue kerchiefs bound around their heads; for background a clump of rustling bamboos. There is a great show of glistening white teeth, and the black, chubby faces show an expression that is a blending of timidity and curiosity. The piccaninnies are the quaintest little creatures you would find out of a bric-a-brac shop. Dumpling shapes done in ebony with bead-like eyes. In a weak moment I venture to caress one of the babes. "Missie" told me with a hearty laugh that I must go the round; or there would be a sad quarrel among the mothers. There was an unpleasant odor of cocoanut oil about the youngsters which did not add to the delight of the task, but it had to be done; and, this duty concluded, Uncle Tom headed the possession and marched the women away. The moment the last petticoat vanished round the corner of the house, we heard the women break into an animated "gabble." I was being criticised, no doubt.

"That is the more pleasant side of slave life, I suppose?"

"Yes, but you must not call it 'slave life.' This is a British colony, you know, and people would be very much offended if you called their laborers slaves. If you wait a moment till I put on my hat, we will go round the quarters. I have some sick calls to make."

We know what a lady's "moment" means. Whilst we wait for "missie" to return, let me briefly describe to you a planter's home. Picture to yourself a large low-roofed house, with broad veranda shut in by creepers which trail their length along the side walls, and even interlace across the roof itself. It is a home in a nest of foliage. Seated upon the veranda, you can see rising from a gully not far distant the graceful crests of a group of palms, and the porcupine-like cluster of sword-shaped leaves that crown the twisted stem of the pandanus. In among the dense foliage of semi-tropical plants the brilliant scarlet blossoms of the hibiscus glow like lamps among dark leaves. The sun pours its rays from a cloudless sky, and, but for the motion of a few fluttering butterflies and the monotonous sound of the water as it plashes over the miniature falls in the fern valley below, you might think you were in some enchanted land of sleep. There is a drowsy air upon everything; Sancho, the big Newfoundland, his mistress's pet, sleeps peacefully at the side of her chair. I feel that I shall follow his example if I do not rouse myself. A book—ah! happy idea. Let me take you with me into the cool, matted dining-room. No stuffy padded chairs; all are of cane. No heavy hangings, but green Indian mats sloped outside the windows to exclude the sun. My friend Jack has a capital library, and from the pile of literature, just received by the weekly mail, I see that he keeps himself well abreast of the times—a couple of months behind, say; no more. Here are many familiar "mags." That is a very old friend, and so is this yellow one; no need to look at the title—Cassell's Magazine, of course; and newspapers, too, both English and colonial. No lack of reading matter, anyhow.

"I hope I haven't wearied you, waiting?"

"Oh, dear, no!" Folk fib with equal glibness in Australia as in England.

A few minute's walk through an avenue of lovely tree ferns, and we reach a little village of neat huts, or "humpies," as they are termed. The "boys" are away in the corn fields; so we may enter.

"These are quite model homes," my hostess says. "The hardest task we have is to train the boys to anything approaching the ways of civilized life. Presently I shall take you to a very different class of village."

Uncle Tom, all smiles, meets us.

"Boy longa hut, he plenty better to-day. Doctor say he go home next ship. He stay no more moons."

"How many more moons [months] have you to stay, Tom?"

"Me stay—10 fellow, one fellow moon," referring to a notched stick in the corner of the cabin.

"How is it he is not out in the field with the others?"

"Oh, we keep him and Liza about the house. He is not strong, poor fellow. So many of them die. In the wet season there are deaths every day. One year 25 per cent; it seems heartless, does it not, to calculate one's fellow-creatures in that way, like—"

"Colored mechanical figures, so much per gross!"

"Just so. Well, one year 25 per cent of the boys died on the next plantation. The Kamaka hospital was full that year, and boys and women, crowded together, died like sheep. They took them away by the drayful of a morning. Some masters treat their Kamakas worse than cattle; a horse is worth something; a boy or two is, or used to be, of less consequence. I have seen boys sent into the field when they could scarcely stand, and forced to work with an overseer watching them. I have seen them knocked down, kicked and lashed with a whip. And yet"—this with a bitterness that should have been foreign to lips so young—"this is an English land, where there is no slave. Poor Uncle Tom—I called him so from some fancied resemblance to the Uncle Tom—he will never see his home again. Before 11 months are past, he will have gone to a land of real freedom."

There is little use of moralizing, so I make no reply. We go into one of the huts, Tom leading the way. The place is dingy and dark, but there is an air of tidiness about it; the bed-clothing is not of the cleanest, but the floor is well swept. On the walls are some rude attempts at decoration, a scrap of broken looking-glass, and a gaudy print. Uncle Tom eyes us closely as we make our inspection. This is his "humpie."

"Boccus plenty full, Tom?"

With great care he raised the lid of a wooden chest, and, lifting off a piece of old newspaper, showed us the most heterogeneous collection of treasures it has ever been my lot to see, bits of crockery, hoop iron, scraps of colored flannel and cloth, some brass buttons, a worn-out table-knife, a "thunder and lightning" shirt, a pair of old boots, and a paper bag full of colored beads.

"That is Tom's wealth," said "missie." "He is quite a capitalist."

"Ten fellow, one fellow moon, take boccus all along island. My people cry me go to Queensland, no cry me go home, show boccus."

"Do you get plenty kai kai [food]?"

"Oh, yes, me get plenty kai kai; bulamakow [beef], taro, sweet portato, rice, bacca. Oh, yes, me plenty. Some fellow boy no like bulamaknow; he get sick, die."

"How did you come here, Tom?"

"Oh, white man come island longa ship. He say, 'You go Queensland, three yams?' Me no like go. White man pull me and Wanukata, all same brother, in boat. White man no look, we jump in water. I swim strong. I hear two shot. I stop quiet, white man pull me in boat. Wanukata he swim strong long way. White man pull boat, catchem Wanukata. He fight very much, and try pull me. White man jump in water with knife. I no see any more; I 'fraid, shut my eyes. Wanukata he cry very strong, 'Towewa! Towewa!'—then him stop, me look—"

"That will do, Tom." I was thankful "missie" had gone ahead. A shudder I could not restrain passed through me as I stepped out of the dark close cabin into the bright sunlight. A short walk across a cleared paddock brings us to a clump of bananas, where another village has been established. This is the home of the new recruits, wild, timid creatures, who cannot be prevailed upon to adopt the habits of their less uncivilized fellows. The "homes" are "detached villas" built of thatchwood, old kerosene tins, pieces of sacking, and the like. As I pull aside the mat that serves for the door of one of the humpies a cloud of smoke rolls out. The evening is closing, and warm as the air is to me, it must, I suppose, be cold to the group of "sick boys" clustered round the pan of wood burning on the earthern floor. Dull-eyed, dejected, inert, some but living skeletons, they present a piteous sight. Squatted on their hams, some lean over the handful of burning embers, thinking perhaps of the far-away island, and the many moons which must rise and wane before they see the cocoa palms of their coral homes again.

We walk silently home. The evening bell is ringing. In the distance rises the sharply-sloped roof the mill, and along the roadway cut between the high walls of cane "the boys" return from work, some running and playing, others linked hand-in-hand—a tribal custom. The drays and plow-horses go rumbling and jingling by. The sinking sun sends its rays of crimson and orange across the fields of rustling cane. A very lovely scene.

The last of my holidays has come, and to-morrow I shall set out for my southern home, not without regret, not without a confusion of idea that somehow it has all been a dream, in which I have recalled some half-forgotten pictures of a planter's home in Kentucky, or "way down in ole Virginny." It is after dinner, and I stand on the veranda contemplating the perfect night and enjoying a quiet smoke. Jack has returned to the mill for an hour. A rustle at my side, and I see my friend's young wife with her hat on and a basket in her hand.

"I am going to the huts. You have heard the new rule to be enforced. Uncle Tom has been ordered to go into the field, and of course we all know what that means. He sent Eliza, our house girl—they have driven her into the field also—to ask me to see him. Would you like to come?"

Of course I go, though I feel loth to leave the glorious moonlight for that stifling humpie.

Uncle Tom is in his bunk, his big eyes bright, his head hot as a coal of fire. Eliza sits on the floor, her hands clasped round her knees.

"Uncle Tom he go die; he say, send missie."

"Well, Uncle Tom?"

"Missie! plenty good, all a same missionary man."

She held up the rude light burning in a pannikin of fat. Uncle Tom had adorned himself for the end—it is their custom—he had on a gaudy shirt; in his ears were great shell earrings, round his neck a string of shark's teeth—a strange picture, the slight, girlish, white-clad figure, the compassionate face bent over the dying boy in his barbaric trappings. She put her hand in his black palm and let it rest there.

"Boccus? boccus?"

Liza rose and drew the clumsy box to the bedside, and opened it for him to look upon his treasure.

"Ten fellow moon no come. People cry, 'Towewa!' all same Uncle Tom. He no come; no go home." Then his mind wandered, and he muttered, "Nea, Tacomala, Iela along a beach, plenty my people. My mother she say, 'Where Waunkata?' Uncle Tom say, 'Wanukata he no come any more.' She cry very strong, 'Oh, Towewa! Towewa!'"

When he awoke he turned to his mistress. "Missie, all same missionary fellow say God."

With broken voice she murmured, "Our Father, which art in heaven"—the familiar words of the prayer fell with little meaning on the ears of this poor dying creature, but he had heard them on his island, and had been told they were good words, a sort of white man's fetish against the evil one—"God bless Uncle Tom."

"God, he good master?"

"Very good."

"I go work along his plantation." He moved weakly and gazed with fast-glazing eyes on his box of treasure-trove. "Missie she have boccus. Now I go die."

I lifted her from the bunk at the side of which, sobbing, she had knelt. No more moons need pass for Uncle Tom. He is free. He has gone home, home to an island that lies beyond the cane-brake, beyond sun, moon, and stars.

A BABY'S DIARY.

Chicago Rambler: 2 A. M.—Born a few minutes ago. Yelled.

2:15 —Am washed. The fool-doctor told 'em I was a boy, just as if that was something new. Was wacked over the lap of a dizzy old Christmas card of a nurse, who proceeded to tog me out in some bandages and a quarter of a mile of skirts. Kicked.

3.—Have slept somewhat. The gorgeous old valentine made for me when I stirred, and turned me into nineteen different positions. Must be training me for a contortionist. Yelled.

4.—Have worked the sound wave for a straight hour. The old man isn't looking as happy as he did. I am a high soprano, I know, for I just heard some one in the fourth story swearing. Old man has remarked that I'll depreciate property for four blocks.

4:10—Everybody is sitting around. The old man has just gotten even with the doctor by giving him one of his cigars. The doctor will have to charge himself up with a prescription pretty soon.

4:11—Told you so! The doctor has just asked the old man if he had ever matched one of his cigars against a glue-factory. Yelled in sympathy.

4:15.—The amiable old Easter memorial is working a bottle. Saw me watch her, and said I was a tootsy-woosty. I wish I were a shoesy-bootsy; I'd fix her for getting a corner on the family supplies and stowing them away in her stomach.

4:18 to 5:18.—Yelled.

5:20.—The antique circus-poster fed me on warm water and whisky. She said I had the colic. Will work the colic racket again.

6.—Wazzer mazzer wiz ev'body? Gizzy old chromo wiz two heads wackin me on the back. Had colic twice.

9 —Woke up with the headache. The old man ought to keep better goods. Guess I'll yell.

9:15—Am washed. Feel a little rocky. Ten minutes for refreshments, then I intend to do the colic gag over again for a cocktail. The old man is writing telegrams about me. He looks a little like a last year's bird's nest himself. Yelled.

12.—Have been asleep. Woke up suddenly and saw the venerable night mare they've hired to groom me working her jaws over enough lunch to feed a shift of section hands. The old man oughtn't to allow it. What'll I do when he kicks out if this waste continues? The thought made me so mad that I yelled.

3 P. M.—Have dozed. Everybody is doing well but the people in the block, who are tired out for the want of sleep. Old man has confidence in me. He has just said that he'd back my lungs against any steam whistle in town, best two toots out of three. It makes one proud to have the approval of his parents.

5.—I was put on a pillow in a chair a few minutes ago, and a fool girl came in and sat down on me. Yelled.

5:20.—Colic. Fortunate results; sleepy.

8:10.—Going to sleep for the night. The giddy old obelisk is in the chair snoring. Room sounds like a round house. Mighty dull sort of a day. Good night.

AN EXECUTIVE SESSION.

She was the daughter of a senator, and her sweetheart had been to see her every night since Lent had given them time and opportunity. Her father became somewhat alarmed, and this morning he called her into his study.

"Well, papa," she said, sweetly, "you sent for me. What is it."

"My dear daughter," he replied, "I be-believe Mr. Blank has been to see you every night for some time past?"

"Yes, papa."

"And he was here last night?"

"Yes, papa."

"Well, daughter, I want to know what occured between you during your protracted interview in the parlor. I ask it, my child, because I have special reasons for wishing to know."

"Dear papa," replied the girl, with tears in her eyes. "I do not doubt your right to ask what occurred there; but, papa, it was an executive session; and, papa, you would not have me divulge the secrets of such a meeting, would you?"

The old man never said a word in reply.

The Enoch of Calaveras.

"Well, dog my cats! Say stranger,
You must have traveled far!
Just flood your lower level
And light a fresh cigar.
Don't tell me! In this weather!
You hoofed it all the way?
Well, slice my liver likewise!
Why, stranger, what's to pay!

"Huntin' yer wife, you tell me?
Well, now dog gone my skin!
She thought you dead and buried,
And then bestowed her fin
Upon another fellow.
Just put it here, old pard!
Some fellow strikes the soft things
But you have hit it hard.

"I'm right onto your feelin's,
I know how it would be
If my own shrub slopped over
And got away from me.
Say, stranger, that old sage hen,
That's cookin' thar inside,
Is warranted the finest wool,
And just a square yard wide.

"I wouldn't hurt yer, pardner,
But I tell you, no man
Was ever blessed as I am
With that old pelican.
It's goin' on some two year
Since she was jined to me,
She was a widder prior,
Her name was Sophy Lee—

"Good God! Old man, what's happened?
Her? She? Is this the one?
That's her? Your wife, you tell me?
Now reach down for your gun.
I never injured no man,
And no man me, but squealed,
And any one who takes her
Must do it d—d well heeled!

"Listen? Surely. Certainly
I'll let you look at her.
Peek through the door, she's in thar.
Is that your furnitur'?
Speak, man! Quick! You're mistaken!
No! Yours! You recognize
Your wife, my wife, the same one?
The man who says so, lies,

"Don't mind what I say, pardner,
I'm not much on the gush,
But this thing come down on me
Like fours upon a flush.
If that's your wife—hold—steady!
That bottle. Now my coat.
She'll think me dead as you were,
My pipe. Thar. I'm afloat.

"But let me leave a message.
No, tell her that I died.
No, no; not that way, either.—
Just tell her that I cried.
It don't rain much. Now pardner,
Be to her what I have been,
Or, by the God that hates you,
You'll see me back again!"

SOPHRONIA.

It was a small story-and-a-half cottage, painted white, with green blinds. The white paint had lost its pristine purity, and the green of the blinds was faded and dusty. A hinge of the gate was broken, and the gate swung and creaked hideously; the little patch of grass in front sorely needed attention. The sewing-machine agent noted these things without knowing it, as he jumped from his buggy and walked toward the front door. He was of an unbeautiful Yankee type, blue eyed, sandy haired, and shambled somewhat in his gait, yet you might look long in his lean face, with its winking eyes and frequent smile, before you could detect an untrustworthy lineament.

There was no bell, so he rapped. No answer. He rapped again. This time a footstep might be heard within, and presently the door was held slightly ajar, and then flung wide open, as if to welcome a long-expected guest. The sewing-machine agent was used to all kinds of receptions, and did not lose a second in commencing his well-learned lesson.

"I am representing the firm of Gusset & Hemm, sewing-machine manufacturers, madam, and would like to show you one of the machines, unless you have one already. Have you a sewing-machine?"

No answer.

"We sell them for cash or instalments, and we warrant them satisfactory. I would like to show you a Gusset & Hemm. Could bring the machine right in, and show you how it works. Did you say you had a machine?"

No answer.

"Or if you have a machine, and it isn't quite satisfactory, we would take it in part payment for the new one." He looked at the figure before him, a little woman dressed in black, her once sunny hair streaked with gray, and hidden under a widow's cap, her eyes, too, hidden behind blue spectacles, her face pale and worn. She might have been thirty-five or forty years old, the agent's own age, but time had lain a heavier hand on the woman than the man. He noted that she trembled, and looked fixedly at him, and thought in his Yankee vernacular, "Nervous critter, afraid of tramps and peddlers, likely." He rambled on in his usual fashion, extrolling his wares, and finally wound up with, "I'll just fetch in the machine, and see how you like it."

At this the woman found her tongue. "No, don't," she said, breathlessly.

"Did you say you had a machine, madam?" asked the agent.

"Yes," she said; and then added, hesitatingly, "but it is out of order. Perhaps you could fix it for me," and held the door wide open as a mute invitation for him to enter. He availed himself of it at once, walking straight into the small front room, bare, destitute of ornament, its most costly furnishing being the sewing-machine at which he seated himself without the loss of a moment. It sung and buzzed under the stress of his rapid foot and hand.

"Needs oiling," he—whirr—whirr—"A new belt would be a mighty good thing on this ere; I'll take this up a little"—whir—whir—"Now I'll tell you, ma'am, you better let me fetch you a Gusset & Hemm; you'll like it a great deal better than this one, and you have plenty of time to pay for it in—"

"No, no," said the widow, hastily. "I couldn't pay for another one. I was two years doing slop-work enough to pay for this, and I had to support my child besides."

"Sho? you don't say so," said the agent, with sympathy. "Paid a high price, didn't ye! Well, I'll tell you candidly there don't seem to be nothin' the matter with this, except it ain't the newest fashion. Here's my card—Azariah Adams, with Gussett & Hemm—I'd like to leave it, and if you want any sewing-machine supplies, needles, or winders, or anything of that sort. I'll take your order now, and bring it when I come round to deliver machines in two weeks."

"Bring me some needles," said the widow, eagerly.

The agent took out his note-book. "What name, madam?"

"Mrs. Twitchel," said the widow, and seemed to look searchingly through her glasses at the agent. He scribbled a minute, thanked her, went out and scrambled into the buggy, with a word to his horse, then drove away, whistling cheerily. Mrs. Twitchel dropped into a seat, buried her face in her hands, and cried softly, but unceasingly, until her little daughter came in from play. The child saw no signs of tears, however. To her she was the same gentle, care-worn, silent mother she had always known; nor could the little one dream that old memories were rising and rushing within her mother's heart like the spring floods, almost overwhelming her with their force.

When Azariah Adams came again the summer had fairly commenced, and Mrs. Twitchel set doors and windows wide open, that the sweet perfumed air might fill the whole small cottage. Besides, she placed a bouquet of the common wild flowers in a glass tumbler on the sewing-machine. She herself retained her former aspect, except that her black dress was laid aside, and a gray dress and white apron lent her a Quaker-like semblance.

Mr. Adams gave greeting as to an old and valued customer, with respect and fervor, produced the needles, received the few cents which were due, and took up his hat to go. But the widow, in her usual hesitating way, detained him.

"Shall you be this way again soon?" she asked.

"Yes, I shall," said Azariah, promptly. "I've sold more machines this time, and I've got to come and deliver them inside of a fortnight. Changed your mind about a new machine?"

"No," said the widow. "I only thought I would have a new hemmer if you could bring one."

With his usual imperturbable cheerfulness Azariah noted down the new order, and prepared to depart, when through the open door flashed a vision of beauty, a tiny six-years-old girl, gold-haired, azure-eyed, music-voiced. She stopped short at sight of the stranger, then fled to her mother's side.

"I swanny!" said the sewing-machine agent, under his breath.

"This is my little girl," volunteered Mrs. Twitchel, smoothing the sunny head.

Azariah sat down in the nearest chair. "You could knock me down with a feather," said he presently. "That child is the living image of one I knew thirty odd years ago. What's your name, Sissy?"

"Annie S. Twitchell," solemnly answered the little one, with a steady look out of her deep eyes.

"This little girl I used to know was named Sophrony—Sophrony Miller. You hain't no relations named Miller, have you?" he asked Mrs. Twitchell.

"Yes, but they're far removed," she replied, with unconscious bitterness. Far removed, indeed, was the beautiful child Sophronia from the middle-aged, worn, Widow Twitchell.

Azariah seemed to have forgotten his usual energetic haste. With softened voice and ingenious coaxing he enticed the little one to his side, then to his knee. Mrs. Twetchell took up her sewing and listened to the talk going on between the two.

"Where did you know those Millers you spoke of?" she said, after a while.

"They lived in the same place where I was born," said Azariah. "Sophrony Miller was the prettiest critter you ever did see. She looked just like this little one of your'n, and when she was just about as big as this one, she and I used to go to school together, and Sabbath school, too. She hadn't no parents, so her aunt brough her up. It don't seem but a little while since Sophrony and I went along the road, hand in hand together, picking blackberries, or wintergreens, or whatever—'cording to the season—or sat together in meetin' with my old grand'ther feeding us pep'mints to keep us quiet. He was a master hand for pep'mints—loved 'em and always carried 'em. Fact, he smelt so strong of 'em all the time they used to call him old pep'mint Adams."

Annie had been regarding him with great gravity, and now asked: "Do you love pep'mints? I do!"

Azariah burst into a laugh.

"You see if I don't bring you some next time I come," said he. "But there's a woman a mile down the road here that's expecting a machine, and if I don't get it to her this afternoon she'll give me bally-hack, so I must go now. Give me a kiss, Sophrony—Annie, I mean, and good-by, madam."

He took his lean, lank frame out of the house, leaving behind him two firm friends.

He came again and brought hemmer, and some peppermints for Annie. Then he called to show a new attachment to sewing machines, and insisted on leaving it for a trial. Then he called to take it away, as Mrs. Twitchell did not purchase it. Then he called to see little Annie. Then he called boldly to see Mrs. Twitchell herself. The nearest neigbor looked out of the window at the frequent visitor and observed, "I believe my soul Widder Twitchell's got a beau!"

The courtship was short. Azariah made his appearance one evening in Mrs. Twitchell's front room, and at once assumed his favorite attitude, one knee crossed over the other, and balancing his chair on two legs.

"See here!" he said abruptly. "You know I told you once about a girl named Sophrony Miller—"

"Yes," answered the widow, in the breathless way which seemed to be habitual.

"Well, I didn't tell you she was my girl," continued Azariah, "but she was. We was engaged. We was going to be married. Everything was all arranged, and I went to the city to get a job; I was gone longer'n I expected, and when I come back, lo and behold, Sophrony was gone! Yes, gone! I never knew where, nor why, except that her aunt had died and she hadn't no home, but she would have had a home if she waited till I got there.

"Well, never mind Sophrony now, only she's the reason why I never wanted to get married since, till now! You remind me of her, and I took to you the first time I see you. I can take care of you and Annie. Say, what's the reason you and I can't get along together?"

Mrs. Twitchell was visibly trembling, and her voice shook as she replied, "If you can't have Sophrony, you'll take me?"

"No matter about Sophrony—I want you."

"Suppose you could have Sophrony and me too."

"Well, I ain't a Mormon," commenced Azariah, but the widow interrupted him by leaving the room abruptly. Azariah stared after her for a moment, letting the two forelegs of his chair drop to the floor. She reappeared as hastily as she had departed. But was it the Widow Twitchell, with spectacles and cap discarded, a transient flush leading the bloom of youth to her pale cheeks, her hair arranged in the fashion of her girlhood, smiling, yet with tears sparkling in her eyes, making them bright as of yore? Azariah made two strides across the narrow room, and his long arms closed about her slender form. No doubts were his, no question arose in his faithful heart; all he said was, "Sophrony, Sophrony, is it you?"

"I had to go away after aunt died," said Sophronia, later in the evening. "I went to see if I could earn a little in the factory. I ain't no hand to write, you know, I never was, but I did write after a while and never got no answer. Then some of the girls from home came visiting the factory, and they said they heard you'd got married in the city!"

"'Twas a lie," said Azariah, thumping the table with fist.

"I just gave up then! And when Mr. Twitchell came courting me, I thought I might as well take him. He wasn't good to me, Azariah, he drank; he died before Annie was born. Annie's name is Annie Sophronia. I expected she'd tell you so long before now. I've earned her living and mine doing hand sewing, but it weakened my eyes, so I commenced to wear glasses, but since I bought my sewing machine they've grown stronger, and I'm going to leave off the glasses now. Azariah!"

"What say?" replied the lover, beaming with unmistakable happiness.

"You was truer to me then I was to you, for I got married and you didn't. But you didn't know me till I took off my cap and specs, and I knew you the first day you came peddling to the door!"—Eleanor W. E. Bates, in Springfield Republican.

THE LATEST PATENTED INVENTION.

Women are so deceptive, you, know. The other day an honest-hearted an well-meaning man, who lives with a third wife and two mothers-in-law, came here from Vermont to sell foot-warmers. Now, it is an historical fact, and one admitted in every family circle, that eight out of ten females over sixteen years of age have cold feet during the winter; and that millions of dutiful husbands each night toil up stairs under the burden of hot bricks or a seven-pound flat-iron.

With all these facts in his favor, a Vermonter invented a foot-warmer of soapstone, handsome in shape, handy to carry on a visit to the country and warranted not to tarnish by the smoke of blistered heels. The agent who came to Detroit had a right to expect a cordial reception, at least, but he went away last night down-hearted and discouraged, and even wishing that he was dead. Provided with one of the warmers, and armed with the certificates of seven Boston doctors that cold feet carry off more than consumption, the agent called at a house on Larned street, east, and said to the middle-aged lady who answered the bell:

"Madam, I shall take great pleasure in showing you the latest Vermont novelty—Brayson's Foot-Warmer."

"No, you won't," was her prompt response, as she looked around for the broom.

"But, madam, are you not troubled with cold feet?"

"No, sir. I keep 'em sissing hot lifting agents off the door step! Get right down, now, or the door'll jam your toes clear back to your heels."

He got down. He didn't propose to give any Detroit woman a second chance to throw away her brick-yard and replace it by one of the most convenient articles ever invented for winter use. He turned down on Congress street, and entered a small millinery store. A female whom he supposed likely to have cold feet if any mortal woman in town had, eyed him suspiciously as he opened the door, and he was hardly inside when she called out:

"Please leave your dog out doors!"

"Madam, I have no dog," he sweetly replied. "My outfit simply consists of an article indispensable to every household. It concerns the feet."

"I don't want no boot-jacks!" she almost screeched.

"It is not a boot-jack. madam. You see it is a soapstone, handsomely cut and provided with a plated wire handle. It is a foot-warmer, madam. I have sold seven hundred and eighty in two days to the most fashionable ladies of this city, and the cry is——"

"You great beast! If you don't take yourself out of here I'll warm your whole body for you!" she shrieked; and she picked up a rolling pin and assumed such a threatening attitude that he speedily retreated. The only ray of sunshine and profit coming to him the long forenoon occurred as he entered a bakery on Catherine street. The woman in charge had her shoes off and her feet on the stove hearth; and she promptly admitted that she had cold feet, and that his foot-warmer and a bag of pop-corn in her stocking would be all the Christmas present she could hope for.

I have sold over nine hundred to the very first ladies in Detroit," he remarked by way of encouragement.

"Yaw, dot is drue!" she calmly replied.

"It is an awful comfort these cold nights," he went on.

"Yaw, I pelieve dot—shust like gospel."

"And the price is very low, madam. You keep your feet warm all winter for the trifling sum of one dollar."

"Yaw, dot is shust so," she mused.

"And will you take one?"

"O, nein!"

"But you say you have cold feet, madam?"

"Yaw."

"And how will you get along without one of these foot-warmers?"

"I schall schleep mit my feet on my husband's pack!" she tenderly answered, and the agent could say no more.

Enumerating.

Here I sit me sore debating,
All my sorrows imprecating,
All my limbs, so irritating,
Mitigating.

Poulticed so I'm suffocating;
Porous plasters cultivating;
Spine my brain is penetrating,
Coagulating.

Fire-works see I, celebrating,
All the stars precipitating,
Everything illuminating
And gyrating.

Ouch! my rib is extricating
From my lungs, eradicating,
And the pains, excruciating,
Predominating.

For the pain so penetrating,
Is my head annihilating,
And my back bone's dislocating—
Hear it grating.

I had better now be stating
Why I sit here wildly rating,
And my Doc. bill calculating—
I've been skating.

ONE THAT WILL BEAR TELLING AGAIN.

A certain fort in the far West, so the story goes, was in command of a major of artillery who constantly lamented that his favorite arm could not be more frequently used against the Indians. Finally, one day he took one of the small howitzers, which defended the fort, and had it securely strapped to the back of an army mule with the muzzle projecting over the animal's tail. With this novel gun carriage he proceeded in high feather with a captain and a sergeant to a bluff on the bank of the Missouri, near which were camped a band of friendly Indians. The gun was duly loaded and primed, the fuse inserted and the mule backed to the edge of the bluff. The major remarked something about the moral effect the exhibition was like to proproduce upon the Indian allies, and stepped gaily forward and applied the match.

The curiosity of the mule was aroused. He jerked his head around to see what was fizzing away there on his neck, and the next second his feet were all bunched together and making forty revolutions a minute, while the gun was threatening everything within a radius of ten miles with instant destruction. The captain shinned up the only available tree. The sergeant threw himself flat on the ground and tried to dig a hole with his bayonet to crawl into, while the fat major rolled over and over in agony, alternately invoking the protection of Providence and cursing the mule. Finally the explosion came, the ball going through the roof of the fort. The recoil of the gun and the wild leap of the terrified mule carried both over the bluff to a safe anchorage at the bottom of the river. The discomforted party returned sadly to the fort.

Shortly after the chief of the Indians appeared and announced briefly: "Injun go home."

Questioned as to why, he thus explained: "Injun ver' brave, help white man. Injun use gun, use bow, arrow, use knife; but when white man fire off whole jackass, Injun no understand, no think right. Injun no help um fight that way."—Toronto Herald.

SUPERSTITIONS ABOUT INSECTS.

The Koran says all flies shall perish save one the, bee fly.

It is regarded as a death warning in Germany to hear a cricket's cry.

The Tapuya Indians in South America say the devil assumes the form of a fly.

Rain is, in some parts of our country, expected to follow unusually loud chirping of crickets.

Flies are sometimes regarded as furnishing prognostications of the weather, and even of other events.

Spaniards, in the sixteenth century, believed that spiders indicated gold, where they were found in abundance.

Although a sacred insect among the Egyptians, the bettle receives but little notice in folk lore. It is unlucky in England to kill one.

In Germany it is said to indicate good luck to have a spider spring his web downwards toward you, but bad luck when he rises towards you.

The grasshopper is a sufficiently unwelcome visitant of himself in this country, but in Germany his presence is further said to announce strange guests.

A Welsh tradition says bees came from Paradise, leaving the garden when man fell, but with God's blessing, so that wax is necessary in the celebration of the mass.

The ancients generally maintained that there was a close connection between bees and the soul. Porphyry speaks of "those souls which the ancients called bees."

It is said that upon the backs of the seven year locust there sometimes appear marks like a letter of the alphabet. When this looks like a W it is thought that war is imminent.

German tribes regarded stag beetles as diabolic, and all beetles are detested in Ireland, more especially a bronze variety known as "gooldie." It is also believed that to see a beetle will bring on a rainstorm the next day.

There are said to be no spiders in Ireland, nor will spiders spin their web in an Irish oak nor on a cedar roof. A spider is said to have saved Mohammed from his pursuers by spinning its web across a cave where he sought refuge. The same is said of David in the cave of Adullam.

IN A HURRY FOR HIS PAY.—Just as a friend of ours, who lives in Winslow, had completed a watering trough by the roadride and stood watching it as it filled with clear, cool water from the spring above, an elderly couple of well-to-do appearance stopped for their horse to drink.

Noting the delight of the animal, and realizing the benefit of the contrivance to the public, the lady remarked to Mr. D—, "The Lord will reward you for this."

"I have no doubt about it, madam," said D—, with a low bow and a twinkle in his eye, "but I shall make out my bill to the selectmen."—Waterville Mail.

Six Little Turkeys.

Six little turkeys, all in a row!
Now what they were hatched for, they didn't know;
Our grandma did, but she would not tell;
She watered and fed them every day well.
But not one of the six heard her say
She was fattening them for Thanksgiving Day.

Six little turkeys! From morning till night
They would run away and hide out of sight.
Grandma's sun-bonnet scarcely at all
Found time to hang on its peg on the wall;
For they kept her all summer watching about
The by-ways and hedges, calling them out.

Six large, fat turkeys, and all in a row
On Thanksgiving morn! One was to go
To Sam, one to Tom, another to Lu
(Dear little grandchildren, loving and true;)
One was to be sent to poor Widow Gray,
With six helpless children to feed that day;

Our Betty cooked one for lame little Joe—
His mother is sick and feeble, you know.
Grandma was so happy, she didn't mind
Running all summer the turkeys to find;
She knew when Thanksgiving Day came round
The very best place for each would be found.

GRANDPA HARRIS' INVESTMENT.

It was a bright summer afternoon, and on a quiet hillside a sexton was busy filling in a grave, while a meagre funeral train was leaving the gate, and two men stood gazing sorrowfully at him as he worked.

One of the men had silvery hair, and he leaned heavily on his staff, while his frame shook with emotion as he ever and anon wiped his eyes with a coarse handkerchief. The sun was shining brightly, a soft south wind stole through the leafy branches of the trees, and the tall weeds nodded to each other above the grassy hillocks, the crickets chirruped mournfully in the grass, and the drowsy hum of the locusts came from the grainfields near by.

"I'm desprit sorry for you, Mr. Harris," said the younger of the two men, a rough looking farmer, as he drew the back of his hand across his eyes. "It's hard to bury so good a woman as Mrs. Harris was."

"Yes, Polly Ann was a good woman and we'd lived together fifty years in our little home yonder. We've had a good many sorrowful days," and he pointed to half a dozen little hillocks near the new-made grave. "We had some hard times, but amidst it all we had a deal of comfort, and somehow it seems as if the light had gone out of my old life now," and with a sob he turned from the mound the sexton was just smoothing off.

Down the hill slowly went the two in silence till they came to a little red house covered with flowering vines; the wooden gate stood open, and as the old man entered it, the other said kindly:

"Well, keep up good heart, neighbor; it's never so dark but what the sun shines somewhere, you know; good-bye," and he passed on. The old man passed up the cobble-stone walk bordered with beds of bright flowers; roses bloomed under the windows, tall hollyhocks stood like groups of sentinels in the corners of the yard, while a fragrant honeysuckle clambered over the porch, and one ambitious vine had reached the low eaves, and shook its plumes from the corner of the wooden spout around which it had twined. A narrow entry-way led into a cheery kitchen, where the sun was peeping in through the clustering vines, and lying in flocks of silvery light on the yellow painted floor, and the snowy curtains drawn to either side of the tiny windows swayed in the breeze. Hanging his hat on a wooden pin behind the door, the old man sat down in a tall arm-chair by the window, glancing piteously at the vacant one opposite him. A large matronly cat came purring around his chair, then jumped into his lap; the old man buried his wrinkled face in her soft fur and sobbed like a child.

"Now don't feel so bad, Mr. Harris," said the kindly voice of a woman, one of the neighbors, who was quietly getting things to rights; "you know it's all for the best or the Lord wouldn't have done it."

"Yes, I know, but oh! there's a soft spot in my poor old heart to-day. I know, too, she is better off. I'm not weeping for her but for myself." And he raised his head and wiped away the tears.

"Where is Betsey Jane?" he asked.

"O, she went straight home; said she couldn't stop nohow; she'd got to churn, and Pete had some hay to get in."

The old man sighed. His wife was dead, and his only child so immersed in household cares as not to have time for one sympathetic word to her aged father in his sorrow.

Slowly the sun went down the western sky, twilight gathered over the scene, the little cat was enveloped in shadows, and on the brown hillock on the hillside the damp dews fell. Mr. Harris was not left alone. A kind neighbor and his wife remained with him, and in the morning when he arose he found breakfast waiting. After the house was put in order, the neighbor went home and the old man was alone sitting in the sunshine, when a wagon rattled up to the door, and a woman of some forty years came bustling up the walk.

"I'm in a great hurry this morning, father, but I came up to secure the silver teaspoons, and some other things mamma gave me, before any one else got their clutches on to them."

The old man looked up half indignantly. "I think your mother didn't design you to take them until I was done with them."

"What do you want of them, I'd like to know? You won't live here alone, will you? besides there are some pewter ones you can use."

Opening the pantry she began to count out the half-dozen little teaspoons, and select a few articles of old china and glass ware, that had been carefully kept and prized by the late mistress of the house, together with a few snowy tablecloths and towels. The old man watched her with sorrowful eyes as she went about the small rooms, selecting whatever was of value and packing them up for removal, saying, "mamma gave them to me." When she had finished he said: "Sit down, Betsey Jane, I want to talk with you a bit."

"I haven't time, father; I must go home and get dinner. Pete and the hired man will be in a desperate hurry."

"But who will get dinner for me now?"

"Well, I don't know. I reckon you can get in with some of the neighbors to work for your board. You know we can't have you up to our house, we've got so large a family. If you hadn't squandered your means, you'd have had something to help yourself with, and you might have hired a housekeeper. As it is now, I 'spose Squire Prince will serve a writ on you to-morrow and attach what little stock you have. Jones has failed to pay that note you was fool enough to sign with him, and of course you must pay it. I never could see what ever possessed you to do so foolish a thing."

"Poor Jones was in trouble, his wife was sick, his crop had failed, and he was going to lose his place, and I helped him raise some money."

"Yes, and now you'll lose your own home. Mamma's sickness was dreadful expensive, and what with doctor's bills, hired help and funeral expenses, it will take all Squire Prince don't gobble up to pay them."

The old man signed: "Well, Jones is honest and he will pay the amount of the note if he lives; he has a large family to support and I'm all alone now. It won't matter much what becomes of me the few days I stay here now, but it will be hard to give up the old home where I have taken so much comfort?" And he brushed away a tear as he spoke.

"Then there was that Charley Dill you brought up, and threw away five hundred dollars to save him from going to jail, and the ungrateful scamp has never paid it back, and the Lord only knows where he is now. I'd have seen him rot in jail before I'd have done it."

"He was young, and it was his first offence, and he went west and became a respectable man, and he wrote me two or three times how grateful he felt. The good book says: 'Cast your bread upon the waters, for thou shalt find it after many days.'"

"I haven't much confidence in such old saws," responded the daughter, as she picked up her bundles and carried them out to the wagon, mounted her seat, and as she was gathering up the reins, said, "Well good-bye, father. I hope it won't be as bad as I feared." She drove off, leaving the old man standing in the sunshine, looking wistfully after her. Re-entering the house, he took his hat and staff and went slowly up the hillside, and seated himself by the new-made grave, leaned on a mossy stone, and for an hour wept silently. He was aroused by the voice of children. "Grandpa Harris, ma' has sent us to tell you dinner is ready, and you must come right to our house and eat with us." It was the same kind neighbor who had spent the night with him, who now called him to her hospital board.

With feeble steps he followed his little guides, who prattled merrily as they danced along, looking back every few steps to see if "grandpa," as they lovingly called him, was coming, too.

So the summer glided away and Mr. Harris remained alone in his little cottage. Squire Prince had taken the stock to liquidate the note given by Mr. Jones, and he had been obliged to part with his few acres of land to meet the other demands, but the little house and garden plot were still his own. He managed to cook his frugal meals himself, though the neighbors were very kind, and many a loaf of bread or crisp pie found their way to his table. The children delighted to see grandpa Harris, and do little chores to help him, or share some little delicacy with the lonely old man.

Every pleasant day he passed an hour or two by the little hillock on the hillside. Mr. Crane, the carpenter made a rustic bench, and put it under the shade of an elm whose branches drooped over the tiny grave near, and here the old man would sit thinking loving thoughts of the one gone from him. The grave always bore fresh flowers, and he had planted some hardy plants to bloom yearly in memory of the infant sleepers. Occasionally, his daughter would come bustling along on her way to the little village about a quarter of a mile distant. She would only pause for a few moments' chat, always pleading her work as an excuse for being in a hurry. She did not seem to care how her father fared, or whether he was comfortable. All her thoughts seemed to center in herself and family. When the chill winds and cold rains of autumn came, old Mr. Harris was lonely indeed; his visits to the hillside had to be abandoned for days together, and he would sit quietly by the little window that looked toward the spot now so sacred to him, with no company but the cat; he recalled the pleasant hours of the past, and with a heartache remembered when she was the light of his home.

November had come, with its wailing winds, beating rains and lowering skies. Now and then a balmy day like summer would tempt the old man forth, and through the crisp dead leaves that rustled under his footsteps he would pass to his resting place, but the chill air would soon drive him to his chimney corner again. One day his daughter called on her way to the village to dispose of her butter and eggs. It was only a week before Thanksgiving, and the old man had been thinking of the many pleasant festivals of the past and how lonely the day would be to him, and he said something like this to his daughter.

"You must be used to it by this time," she said. "Peter's folks have invited us to spend Thanksgiving with them this year. I couldn't think of going to the trouble to get up a dinner at home. I presume some of the neighbors will invite you to dinner." And she hurried away, while her father wiped away a tear from his eyes, as he looked up the hillside.

A day or two after a lady with an invalid daughter of eight years arrived at the little hotel, and after securing a room and seeing the little girl made comfortable, she summoned the landlady.

"Do Mr. and Mrs. Harris live near here?"

"Lawk, marm, Mrs. Harris has been dead five months or more."

"I'm sorry," said the lady, in a disappointed tone.

"Was she any relation to you, marm?" asked Mrs. Burgess, in a sympathizing voice.

"No, but Mr. and Mrs. Harris were friends of my husband."

"Well, the old man is living, and a pretty lonely life he has of it, I can tell you." And the voluble little woman detailed all the gossip about him and his loneliness.

The lady listened quietly, then said:

"I have a plan for making that old man's life more comfortable; can I depend upon your co-operation?"

"I don't know what that big word means, but if you want somebody to help you do anything for Grandpa Harris's comfort, I'm the woman for it," responded Mrs. Burgess, heartily.

So the two women had a long talk, and when the landlady left the room her rosy face was all smiles, and she clapped her fat hands softly together, ejaculating:

"Well, I never; who'd have thought it? I'm desprit glad I'm sure."

Thanksgiving morning dawned bright, clear and cold. Mr. Harris rose shivering, built his fire, and after milking old Crumple, the cow, prepared his frugal breakfast which he shared with the cat, then sat down to read until church time.

As the faint ding-dong of the bell sounded on the frosty air, Mr. Harris put on his overcoat, drew his muffler close around his face, took up the striped mittens knit by the fingers now stiff and cold, and grasping his staff set out for the little church where good Parson Moses was to hold forth.

As he trudged on over the frozen ground the brown leaves rustling under his tread, they seemed to whisper to him of decay. He had scarcely got ensconced in his own front pew, when a light market wagon passed the church. Perched on a seat in front was Mrs. Burgess, sitting very stiff and with an important air. In the rear was a small invalid chair, in which, wrapped in shawls, the little girl reclined, and Mrs. Dill, the strange lady, sat on the trunk by her side, and sundry parcels, baskets and pails filled every inch of space. It was an unique looking load, but as nearly everybody was at church it passed through the streets without comment. Old Gray, who was at the helm, evidently thought there was occasion for haste from the demonstrations his mistress made with a leather thong tied to a stick, which she flourished over his back in a very harassing way, and ejaculating:

"Get up, Gray, go'long with you, don't be all day about it. We're in a hurry."

The little girl looked on amused, and a sweet laugh burst from her as she said:

"Oh, mamma, ain't it all so funny?"

They reached Grandpapa Harris's domicile and gained admittance, for there was neither bolts nor bars, he had nothing to tempt one's cupidity. Mrs. Burgess carried in the parcels and then bustled around, her heart rejoicing for the surprise in store for the lonely old man.

Parson Moses was long in his sermon, and many of the careful old Marthas were anxiously watching as hands pointed to a quarter to one. As soon as the benediction was pronounced they all hurried out, sure that their turkeys and chickens were overdone.

Grandpa Harris took his way home as fast as his tottering limbs could carry him. The sermon had done him good; it told of the Heavenly Fathers' care for all his creatures, and he felt that care would be over and around him.

But as he neared his own door he remembered what day it was, and as he glanced up at the hillside where the brown leaves were piling over the little hillocks, the tears rushed to his eyes, blinding him so that he did not see any one as he entered the kitchen, and mechanically hung his coat and hat on the wooden pin behind the door.

He felt a sense of warmth and comfort, and there were savory smells in the room.

He turned toward the stove and paused in perfect amazement. A bountifully spread table was in the middle of the room, a pot of coffee on the stove sent forth an aromatic steam, while the half-open oven door disclosed a turkey and other appetizing eatables. A lady of some forty years stood smiling at him, while a sweet, pale-faced child looked up trustfully from the depths of her chair.

"Pardon, Mr. Harris, the liberty I have taken," said the lady, advancing with outstretched hand. "I am Mrs. Dill—you remember Charley Dill, who used to live with you?"

"Yes, indeed. where is he?" And the old man's face lightened.

"He is dead. I am his widow; but sit down and let me explain why I am here," and she drew the large easy chair to the stove and then seated herself opposite with her hand resting on the arm of the invalid chair.

"You did my husband a great service once. He committed a youthfull error which would have sent him to prison and probably ruined his life. By paying five hundred dollars you got him released."

"I knew the boy didn't mean to do the deed, he was not himself when he committed the theft, and he was so sorry and promised me he would never drink again," interrupted the old man.

"A promise he sacredly kept; he went West and became an honest, upright man, an honored citizen and a Christian, and he said he owed it all to you. If he had gone to prison he would have come out with a blackened name and become discouraged and reckless. As soon as he could earn more than enough to carry on his business, he began to lay aside an amount weekly to pay his indebtedness to you, and every year the interest was added to the sum. When we were married I had some property, but he never would take one cent of my money toward it; he said it must be all his own earnings, and he hoped to surprise you some day with the amount of your investment. He died three months ago, and left two thousand dollars in your name, and made me promise to come and tell you all about it. You can get the money by sending to his lawyer, who will attend to the matter whenever you demand it. He always spoke with affection of you and your estimable wife, and on his deathbed prayed a blessing upon you."

The widow paused to wipe away a tear.

"My little girl met with an accident a year ago; injured her spine, and will never be able to walk again the physician says. He thought a change of climate with country air and country food would do her good, so I came on here. At the hotel I learned of the death of your wife, and that you were living here alone, and I thought I would surprise you, and with the co-operation of the landlady have provided a Thanksgiving dinner, and Alice and I want to eat with you, then if we can arrange it we would like to remain here for a while. I think this is a charming cot. I want quiet and seclusion, and perhaps my little girl and I can cheer your solitude. I have plenty of money and your two thousand dollars will make you perfectly independent now, and I think we will get along nicely—what do you say?"

The old man reverently lifted his hands, and while the tears rained down his withered cheeks, exclaimed:

"Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all His benefits," then stooping he kissed the little girl. "You'll love me, deary, won't you!"

"Yes, ever so much; you're my prandpa now—I adopt you."

Mrs. Dill smiled, and with quick, deft fingers placed the dinner on the table, and they gathered around the daintly spread board. How Mr. Harris enjoyed having company on the day which promised to be so lonely; and though his heart ached as he thought of his wife, and how she would have enjoyed the little fortune that had come to him, he said with quivering lips:

"She'll be glad for my sake, and that I won't be lonely any more."

Mrs. Dill was very social, and liltle Alice sportive notwithstanding her misfortune.

After dinner Mr. Harris built a fire in the little rustic parlor, and though the night set in dark and rainy, and the sleet dashed against the windows, there was light and cheer within. Mrs. Dill produced an interesting book from her trunk and read aloud, while the little girl played with her doll, much to the delight of the old man, who stroked her sunny curls and called her "deary."

It was a week before Betsey Jane heard of her father's good fortune, and by that time Mrs. Dill was settled in her new quarters. She had bought some new furniture for the two rooms she and the little girl were to occupy, and a few needful articles for housekeeping, but tried to keep Mr. Harris's room and the kitchen looking as near like home to him as she could. She had a cabinet organ, and often the old man was beguiled into a nap in his easy-chair as he listened to her music.

"Well, I do declare, father, you're in your dotage," exclaimed his daughter; "you've allowed that Charley Dill's wife to wind you around her finger, and she's settled here for life."

"Well, it's very pleasant for me, and I was so lonely, and the little girl is a good deal of company for me. She's a smart little thing, I tell you."

"I should think you would rather have had one of your grandchildren to pet than a stranger."

"So I would, Betsey Jane; but you would not let them come to stay with me. I asked you to let me have Mary part of the time, but you couldn't spare her or Dick either, and all the others were to young to be away from you."

"Well, I hope when you get your two thousand dollars, you'll remember you have a daughter and grandchildren of your own, and not squander it on strangers!"

"Betsey Jane, you know you have not cared for my comfort or welfare all the months when I needed your love and care so much. The neighbors have been very kind to me, and I shall make them some return now that I have the means."

"You'll do as you please, I suppose, but I think you'll be a very unnatural father if you give to strangers what your own flesh and blood ought to have. I'm not sure but you ought to be judged insane and treated accordingly." And she flounced out of the house in a pet.

The winter passed pleasantly. Mr. Harris received his money in season to make his neighbors some nice presents, which were highly appreciated, nor were his daughter and her children forgotten; but that lady declared he was real stingy not to give her more.

Mrs. Dill was quite a fine reader, and the long winter evenings passed quickly by.

When spring came the old man was able to tend his garden, and every pleasant day he would wheel little Alice in her chair up and down the grassy lanes, picking wild flowers from the green banks and gathering bright pebbles for her from the brook. The neighbors styled them the "two children," and greeted them kindly as they passed.

Mr. Harris is passing quietly down the declivity of life, and often gratefully refers to the investment he made by helping a fellow mortal in trouble, and which had brought him such rich returns.

"I can stand a joke as well as any man," says David Bennett Hill, "but when these Cleveland sluggers hit me in the back of the head with an ax and say, 'Tag, you're out,' I don't think it is much of a joke."—Chicago Journal.

UNCLE SANDY.

It was when winter was just closing in, and the frost was making the planks crack and snap that I met Uncle Sandy. He was of real old African stock, with a smile always covering his face, and he laughed heartily as he stopped me and said:

"I was jist a-finkin'! I was jist a-finkin' dat if I should meet de angel Gabr'el, an' he should ax me to walk wid him, an' dese butes should frow me down, how 'shamed de ole man would be of hisself—yah! ha! ha!"

He held up one foot and then the other. I could see his black toes peeping through the holes. I gave him some money to get repairs made, and it was three months before I ran across him again. Then I met him one biting cold day. He was without an overcoat. He remembered me, and he burst out laughing as he said:

"Got dem butes all fixed, but Gabr'el didn't dun cum along yit."

"You couldn't walk far with him without and overcoat."

"Dat's so, mas'r. If Gabr'el should cum I'd hev to take him in whar' dar' was a flah—yah! ya! ya!"

Between Uncle Sandy and myself and a second-hand dealer the old fellow got an overcoat—the first he ever had. If you give to charity you like to give to those who neither demand it or seem to expect it. That gives you a chance to surprise them, and a word or two of gratitude is ample recompense.

When spring came I met Uncle Sandy for the third time. It was slushy and sloppy, and the old boots were rent and worn. There is an end even to old boots. You may peg and patch and cobble, but the day comes when the leather loses its life.

"Looking for Gabriel?" I asked, as he was about to pass by.

"Oh! dat's you, is it? Yah! ya! ya! No, I isn't lookin'. I'm jist hopin' he won't cum. Dese yere ole butes hev gone at las'. Doan' want to make Gabr'el 'shamed of me, you know."

He was fixed up for boots, and one day, two months later, a boy came after me and I went with him to find Uncle Sandy on his dying bed.

"Gabr'el ar' cummin' purty soon!" he said, as he gripped my hand.

"And are the boots out of repair?" I asked.

"Tain't de butes dis time, mas'r. It ar' de soul! Ize ready to see him an' to walk wid him long de dark road. Kneel down yere, Ize ole an' pore an' dyin', an' dar's only one way I kin pay ye for what ye hev dun fur me."

And he put his black hand on my head and prayed:

"Oh! Gabr'el, dis yere white man shod me an' clothed me an' fixed me up, dat I might walk wid ye if ye happened dis yere way. 'Scuse his faults, forgive his sins, an' when de ho'n blows an' he cums up to walk in at de gate, doan' stop him. I'll be dar' to guide him in, an' I'll tell de Lo'd all about it, an' please doan' make no mistake—amen!"

A HARMLESS COMEDY OF ERRORS.

Morris E. Ward, formerly of the press of this city but now agent of a paper car wheel concern on the Hudson, is charitable, gallant, and absent-minded.

He has a poor relative up the country to whom he sends all his old clothes. There are many ladies in the city to whom he sends invitations for the theater.

The other day he wrote to his poor relation: "I send you my last pair of pants but one; they may be a trifle small, but you can let them out in the waist band. If they are too long you can turn 'em up. Don't mind the patch."

The same day he wrote to a lady:—

"Since you were kind enough to accept my invitation to the theater, leaving it to me to select the play and evening, permit me to say the Columbia, this evening."

In an hour Mr. Ward received the following from his lady acquaintance: "As you did not send the pants by the messenger who delivered your note, I am, of course, unable to do anything to them. However, this need not interfere with our engagement for the theater."

Mr. Ward went to the theater but he was very uneasy.—Chicago Mail.

THIMBLES.

The thimble was originally called a thumb bell by the English, because worn on the thumb, then a thumble, and finally its present name. It was a Dutch invention, and was first brought to England in 1695. Thimbles were formerly made only of iron and brass, but in comparatively late years they have been made of gold, silver, steel, horn, ivory, and even glass and pearl. In China beautiful carved pearl thimbles are seen, bound with gold, and with the end of gold. The first thimble introduced into Siam was a bridal gift from the king to the queen; it is shaped like a lotus bud, made of gold and thickly studded with diamonds arranged to spell the queens's name.—Good Housekeeping.

A LEWISTON BOY.

They tell of a very diminutive Lewiston boy in the spelling class the other day, whose ways of wisdom were grotesquely disproportionate to his pounds avoirdupois. He was spelling potatoes and made a miss. "Johnnie," said the teacher, "I am surprised. You seem to be falling off in your scholarship, especially in your spelling." The boy's reply was worth repeating. "I'll tell you what it is, teacher," said he, "it amounts to about this. They keep changin' the spellin' so much of late years that a person cannot really tell where he is one week after another." The teacher yielded the argument to the seven-year-old Johnny, and let him pass.—Lewiston Journal.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 23, 1888.

Congressman Perry Belmont of New York has been appointed minister to Spain. He is a rich young man who has made something of a mark in the House, possessing brains as well as money, and the appointment is merited, though his official life there will probably be brief.

Catholic taxpayers at Janesville, Wis., have been trying to stop the reading of the King James version of the Bible in the public schools, but the courts have decided that such reading is not sectarian education, and must be continued, the authorities having decided upon it as one of the text books for schools in the state.

West Virginia's vote is yet undecided, and is so close that the result will hardly be known with certainty until the official count is announced. There is a holding back of returns in some counties which looks rather suspicious. It is fortunate, any way, that the result of the presidential election does not hinge on this state.

The young men's Democratic club of this state has published a statement showing how much money was received and just how it was spent in the last campaign. Every other political committee ought to do the same thing. The light of publicity would tend to keep expenses in legitimate channels and within reasonable bounds.

November has given a sharp twist to the weather this week, carrying the mercury down within a few points of zero hereabouts, and below that in the colder latitudes, while the snow storms in Canada and the West are warnings of the winter which will soon be upon us in all its severity. We hope all our readers have full coal bins.

Next Thursday comes, once more, Thanksgiving Day, with all its hallowed memories and its happy reunions of families and loved ones. Few hearts there are which have not some cause for thankfulness for the mercies of the year, and few also which cannot make themselves happier and carry joy to some less favored one by some kindly remembrance. May it be indeed a day of thanksgiving to all!

The Boston Herald sizes up the Democratic account with the mugwumps pretty accurately after this fashion:—

> The Democrats tried to elect a president six times (from 1860 to 1884) without their aid without success. That aid was afforded in 1884, and success followed. Four years later, having scolded a lot about the mugwumps in the interim, and induced their president to do considerable to drive the mugwumps away, defeat again overtook them. These really are about the cold facts and figures in the case, and there seems to be a lesson about them.

Iowa appears to be getting along tolerably well, considering the disastrous results prophesied four years ago, when prohibition went into effect in that state. The vote of the state has increased over 25,000 in the four years, indicating a gain of 150,000 in population. The increase possibly might have been greater if prohibition had not been in force, but the state has no reason to complain on this score, and may have much to be thankful for in other ways as a result of her prohibitory law.

Keely, the famous Philadelphia inventor, who for a dozen years or so has gulled the people and capitalists with his wonderful motor, spent last Sunday in jail for refusing to obey a court order commanding him to divulge certain information concerning his machine to a committee of experts. He was released Monday on bail, and will keep right on with his motor—which is always going to, but never does "mote"—as long as capitalists are found to contribute of their funds in return for his experience.

C. T. Parsons of Northampton, a contractor of cheap foreign labor who has been in court before for abusing his serfs, is once more in trouble. A young Polander was found chained to a wagon in Holyoke Wednesday morning, thinly clad and numb with the cold, who had been brought from Northampton in this manner by Parsons, who was afraid the fellow would run away before he could be shipped back to New York. Parsons was arrested, and had his trial to day. It has been supposed that slavery in this country ceased to exist some years ago.

Sad stories of suffering come from western Kansas, in what is known as the new country. Where two years ago were several towns of from 500 to 2000 inhabitants each, are now empty streets, and villages almost entirely deserted. The few people who remain cannot get away. A year ago settlers passed a winter almost without coal. Already the fatal blizzards have set in, and one storm has killed many cattle. The people are discouraged and heartbroken. They raised no crops this year, and have been compelled to leave their homes for fear of starvation.

Boston liquor dealers are not pleased with the new law which will reduce the number of places licensed to sell liquor in that city from 1582 to about 780, and it is understood that they have agreed to use their influence in favor of no license in the approaching city election. Saloon men in other parts of the state are credited with similar intentions, their hope being, of course, that the law will become so obnoxious that it will be repealed; and they would rather take the risk of selling without a license than to pay the high fee required. We suspect the public can get along very comfortably with their proposed no-license campaign, and be a good deal better off if it should carry. The attitude of the rumsellers is a characteristic one. Their business is to sell liquor. They will do it legally if they can without too much bother, but if the restrictive screw is applied a little too closely they will sell illegally,—sell in some way they will, at all events, and they understand very well the difficulty of procuring evidence which will convict them. More latitude in evidence and more "sand" in officials would be a good thing for all concerned. The saloon keepers ought to be made to feel that the law can and will be enforced.

The dancing school at the Weeks House continues to increase its membership at every session. The class is unusually large, and there has been some talk of dividing it and having two sessions. The attempt to form an evening class proved a failure.

Stillman Ellis has sold his interest in the factory at North Wilbraham, which he has successfully operated for a number of years, to Baker Brothers of Springfield. Superintendent Mack retains his interest in the concern regardless of the transfer made by Mr. Ellis, who will, for a time, lead a retired life.

The newly-organized foot ball team at the Palmer high school is composed of the following members: Captain—William Sullivan, H. Barker, R. F. Twiss, H. Kerigan, William Kerigan, G. Bishop, J. C. Sullivan, Chester Cross, J. H. Dewey, Howard Willis and M. J. Kennedy. The eleven is in good condition, and is desirous of arranging match games with the teams in the surrounding towns.

The locomotive "Chicopee," which has been in service on the New London Northern Railroad 38 years, broke a crank shaft last Saturday and will now probably be discarded, as it is one of the oldest locomotives in use, there being but two others on the road that have been in the service the same length of time, and one of these draws a passenger train daily. Although it is like the boy's jack-knife, which had had several blades and handles, still it was the some old knife, so this locomotive is the same old shell in which steam was made 38 years ago.

The "Wigwam" is the name of the new debating society which was organized this week with the following officers: President, Arthur Holden; vice president, F. E. Cady; secretary, W. E. Breckenridge; treasurer, Cyrus Stimpson; directors, Arthur Holden A. C. Merritt and B. P. Morse. A constitution and set of by-laws was adopted, and the new organization will meet every Monday evening at the high school room, where some interesting discussions are likely to occur. There are at present twelve members, and many more are expected to join. The first subject for debate will be, "Is a lie ever justifiable?"

Juvenile Burglars.

Five juveniles, who burglarized the store of Shaw Brothers at Three Rivers Sunday night, taking from the stock jewelry. knives, cigars, confectionery, etc., were arrested Wednesday afternoon and gave their names as Bruno Lebeau, Eusebe Ourmette, William Rivers, Charles Vient and George Rogers, and said that they had all been employed in the Palmer mills. Their ages range from 15 to 17 years, and their destitute circumstances, they allege, prompted them to commit the crime. They all furnished sureties and had a preliminary hearing yesterday morning, but they will be arraigned before the state agent next Wednesday.

Fire District Matters.

A meeting of the fire district will be held shortly to see what action it is deemed advisable to take in regard to paying for the system of electric lights recently put in.

They have been given an unusually long test, and have worked very satisfactorily, being all that was represented to the district at the time it voted to adopt them. Many of the citizens have examined and carefully watched the workings of other systems, but find the Thomson-Houston to be superior to any they have yet seen, and a system which is generally in use in the larger cities and towns. The warrant which calls this meeting will also contain an article to see if the district will vote to put in a light at the corner of Central and Pleasant streets, and at Blanchardville, and in other places in the village that are not at present properly lighted. Another article will be to see what action the district will take toward extending the water-main to the works of the Palmer Wire Manufacturing Company, while the attention of the voters will also be called to the matter of bringing suits against delinquent tax payers.

The Tramp Must Go.

Seven of the ten tramps who applied for lodging and were placed in custody here by Sheriff Healey Saturday night were identified as the missing rioters who attacked a train on the Boston & Albany Railroad at Indian Orchard the same day and escaped from the Springfield authorities, who arrested a part of the gang after the melee. The officer obtained their names as follows: John McCarthy of Fall River, John Moran of Boston, Charles Duncan of Philadelphia, George Joiner of Hyde Park, John H. Hopkins of New York, William Bemis of Troy, Frank J. Merrill of Providence, R. I. Sheriff Healey notified Marshal Clune at Springfield of his capture, and he telephoned back to hold them. In accordance with that request they were all held until Sunday, when, about 4 p. m., a special train came from Springfield conveying a posse of officers, the station agent at Indian Orchard and the trainmen who were in the combat the day before. There was considerable excitement and a crowd gathered at the union station and followed the officers to the tramp room, where no time was consumed in identifiying seven of the prisoners as among the number engaged in the riot. They were handcuffed and taken to Springfield, where they were arraigned in court the following morning, but had their cases continued until later. The other three victims, whom the officers and trainmen failed to identify, were at once liberated.

What Rum Will Do.

Robert Melvin, a brick mason who has been employed upon the new high school building, was arrested in front of the Converse House Wednesday afternoon by Officer Dawson, charged with drunkenness and abusing his wife, who has been boarding with him at the Converse House for a short time. The prisoner resisted the officer and a struggle ensued which caused quite a sensation for a time, but the officer soon landed his victim in the "cooler," where his wife had wanted to see him placed early that morning, but later in the day she took pity on his uncomfortable position and furnished the required sureties, and he was released for appearance in court the following morning, when he was discharged on payment of costs. Previous to his arrest he was ordered to leave his boarding place, and the sympathy of all was with his wife, who held the wages due her husband, which were paid to her, unknown to him, by the contractors of the high school building. When he learned this he returned to the hotel, assaulted and abused his wife in a shameful manner, and, for further revenge, with his jack-knife slashed a silk dress belonging to her, cutting the garment into innumerable pieces. The couple had been married but four months, and they left for Worcester yesterday morning.

The one political topic that has out-lived election day is, "who will be the lucky man to get the post office?" The leaving of it in its present hands—however efficiently it may be managed or however well the public may be accommodated—does not seem to be thought of by any one, so far are we advanced toward an honest, non-political civil service, and there are said to be already from three to six aspirants after each of the post offices in town.

BRIMFIELD.

Rev. Mr. Ball, from Hartford Theological Seminary, preached at the First Congregational church last Sabbath.

Almost a Centenarian.

On Monday Walter Haynes of this town passed his one hundredth birthday and entered upon the one hundredth year of his age. Mr. Haynes is the son of Daniel and Hannah (Webber) Haynes, and was born at Monson Nov. 19th, 1789. When 18 months old he was brought to Brimfield to live with his grandfather, Jonas Haynes, at the place where he now resides, and where he made it his home until 21 years of age, his grandfather giving him his time when 18 years old, allowing him to serve an apprenticeship of three years to learn the clothier's trade, commencing with Rufus and Alvah Flynt, and finishing with Thomas Wells, at the works at the foot of Danielson Hill. After leaving them he worked for a few months at Brookline, Mass., when he returned home. While here one day an alarm bell was rung; looking for the cause smoke was seen issuing from the clothier's works where he learned his trade. Hastening with others to the fire they were able to save the dyeing works, but the carding machines and building was destroyed. Of this fire Mr. Haynes relates the following incident: While talking about the fire and its results to the owner and the community, much regret and sorrow was expressed. Maj. Nathaniel Parker, who was present, said he was sorry to the amount of $50, which he would give to the owner, and from this offer enough was there subscribed to largely reimburse him for his loss. The act of Maj. Parker was more noticeable from the fact that he was interested in the rival works of his brother-in-law, Theodore Field.

From Brimfield Mr. Haynes removed to South Brimfield, now Wales, where he resided several years, and while here worked at the carpenter business with his wife's father. From Wales he removed to New Hampshire, where he resided three years, and in 1816 removed to Olney, Oswego county, N. Y., where he lived until 1842, when he returned to Brimfield, where he has since resided. While residing at Olney he carried on the business of carpenter, putting up many buildings in the village. Since his return to the old homestead of his grandfather, now his own, he has devoted himself to farming, in which he has been quite successful. The past summer it has been no unusual occurence for him to drive to the village and transact business at the stores and other places alone and unaided, and once drove alone to Palmer. When asked if it was not unsafe for him to do so, he replied he did not feel that it was. At the last election he drove to the town hall alone, and unattended walked into the hall, up to, and upon the platform and deposited his vote, and as he turned to leave was greeted with cheers. Mr. Haynes married in May, 1810, Sally, daughter of Oliver and Seba Rogers of Wales. She was born May 12, 1791, and died in 1830. They had seven children, four of whom are living. He again married, May 31, 1843, Lucinda, daughter of Hezekiah and Hannah (Fisher) Ferry of Palmer. When called upon by the writer he was reading a newspaper sent to him from where he lived in the state of New York, and said he had received a number of letters of congratulation this week. He is in good health, has a good appetite, and bids fair to complete the 100 years, and we hope more.

MONSON.

The public schools closed last Friday.

The roof of the new Universalist church is being put on this week.

Rev. I. A. Priest will exchange pulpits with Rev. J. H. Farnsworth of Westfield next Sunday.

Dr. G. E. Fuller, the G. A. R. inspector, will inspect the posts at Ware and Warren this month.

Harry Miller has taken a position as foreman in the lamp department at Gage & Reynolds's shop.

The sociable of the Universalist society, held at Central Hall Tuesday, was a very enjoyable one.

The query now is: Who did that Democrat who was obliged to cheer the Harrison and Morton flag bet with?

Dr. G. E. Fuller, under the Grand Army staff, inspected the post at West Brookfield last Tuesday evening.

Nothing is too rich for the Harrison men since election. A certain grocery clerk wears a light plug hat on the order wagon.

The Republican farmers of East Hill celebrated the election of Harrison and Morton by a torchlight parade Saturday evening.

Miss Lottie Moulton has resigned her position as clerk at the Boston store, and has accepted a position with Gage & Reynolds.

The Christian Endeavor Society of the Methodist church conducted a meeting in the Pease district school house last Sunday afternoon.

A lively runaway took place on Green street Tuesday evening. The horse knocked down a picket fence and cut himself badly, but no further damage was done.

The roller skating craze is being revived in Monson. A rink has been opened in Green's hall, and will be open every afternoon and on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday evenings, until further notice.

Rev. Ira A. Priest and wife, Marvin Bradway and wife, Mrs. Orrin Shaw and Charles G. King were the delegates sent by the Universalist church to the meeting of the Union association of the parishes in Western Massachusetts, held in Orange Wednesday.

Thirty-five of the friends of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. King surprised them last Friday evening. Many others who had expected to participate in the frolic were detained at home by the rain. A tapestry lounge and spring rocker were presented by Justin Carew for the others, and the gifts were accepted by Mr. King with a few words in the best of taste. The musician of the evening was Miss Louise Smith of Fort Valley, Georgia, a guest of Mr. and Mrs. Fred S. Smith. The collation was exceptionally fine. The plan was set in motion by Mrs. E. A. Lull.

Officers Underwood and Thompson raided the Monson House Saturday evening and secured part of a bottle of beer. When the officers reached the place they found the door locked and a man braced up against it. They were not expecting everything their own way, however, and were determined to go in, and in they went, door and all, and Jack Howe, who was against it, felt the floor rise in his face with considerable force. Then ensued a scramble for bottles. The barkeeper had thrown them against the wall, and as he supposed had smashed them all, but a bottle of beer had only the neck broken off, and this the officers secured, thus obtaining enough to make a case against the proprietor.

WARE AND VICINITY.

Cyrus Sturtevant received by freight, Wednesday, an addition to his livery stock. It stands about three feet high and measures a little over two feet from tip to tip of ears, measuring directly across the head. Seems to be perfectly kind and safe.

The Young Men's Catholic Union is to give a grand social entertainment at the Town Hall Thanksgiving evening, which will consist of music, singing and literary exercises, and a broom drill by the young ladies. A number of noted singers from out of town will take part in the programme. There will be refreshments, and after the entertainment there will be a social dance.

The officers of Eden Lodge, F. and A. M., are: George S. Marsh, W. M.; Geo. H. Winslow, S. W.; William H. Morgan, J. W., Dr. D. W. Ainsworth, Treas.; Herbert T. Cummings, Sec.; Rev. E. Hitchcock, chaplain; W. V. Howard, Mar.; Elgin R. Foster, S. D.; A. A. Green, J. D.; William Jameson, S. S.; W. N. Newcomb, J. S.; E. W. Lawton, sentinel; John Lashua, tyler.

A rare concert is to be given at the Town Hall next Tuesday evening, and the proceeds are to go to assist the Social Science Club in their work. The artists to apppear are D. M. Babcock, basso, and Heindrich Schnecker, solo-harpist of the Boston Symphony orchestra. Tickets are now on sale at Blood's. Patrons of this concert will not only have a rich musical treat, but assist a worthy object.

The union gospel service at the Town Hall Sunday evening was more largely attended, and more interest was manifested than at the first meeting. The sermon was by Rev. E. Hitchcock of the Methodist church, from Revelation 3: 20—"Behold I stand at the door and knock." He was followed in a earnest exhortation by Rev. A. T. Terry. It is hoped and expected that much good will be done by those meetings.

The officers of the camp of the Sons of Veterans elected Monday evening are: Captain, Charles Sargent; 1st Lieut., E. L. Pierce: 2d Lieut., J. E. Truesdell; Sergt., Herbert H. Turner: Quartermaster Sergt., F. S. Cushman. They will be mustered in as soon as arrangements can be made. Regular weekly meetings are to be held Tuesday evenings and those who apply before next Tuesday evening will be entered as charter members of S. V. Bond camp.

Fire was discovered about half past four Saturday morning in the wood shed of Henry F. Barnes's new two-story house, next to his own residence on West Main street. The fire soon communicated to the main part, which is considered a total loss, although the walls are standing. The house was occupied by John O. Deslauriers and Milton Perry, whose furniture was mostly saved, but in a damaged condition. The house was insured for $2,000. It is supposed that the fire caught from a barrel of ashes.

The annual thank offering meeting of the Young Ladies' missionary society of the East Congregational church was held, Sunday afternoon, at the chapel. The amount realized from the thank offering and mite boxes was $60, which is to be divided between the French Protestant society, foreign missions and mission work on the frontier. Mrs. Baldwin of Nebraska was present and related many thrilling incidents of mission work in the West, showing the great need of more men and means to carry on the work in that part of the country.

The work on the East Congregational church is progressing rapidly. The contract has been closed for the decorations, which are to be done by L. Haberstroh & Son of Boston, the same party who did the beautiful work in the Town Hall. The work in the church is to be in the colonial style, in rich colors to harmonize with the pews, that are to be of oak. The stained glass windows are being made by Redding, Baird & Co. The carvings on the exterior and interior are the work of William F. Waterson of Springfield. It is expected the church will be ready for occupancy early in January.

The chapel of the East Congregational church was well filled at the first social of the season Friday evening. The costumes were antique, quaint and queer, representing all varieties that were worn in Revolutionary times and since, and seemed to open the doors of sociability in a way that made it one of the most enjoyable ever held here. The ladies' costumes were especially noticeable for their richness, some of them being the wedding dresses of grandmothers. Some of the most noticeable costumes were the most simple. The plain gray dresses, with white cape and apron were especially neat. There were but few men in costume, but enough to show how becomingly our great grandfathers dressed. The dining room was lighted by candles in glass and brass candlesticks of long ago, and the tables set with crockery of the most curious patterns, some of it very valuable on account of its antiquity. The flax wheel occupied a prominent place, and near it was the old high candlestick, as far as can be known, over 150 years old. Sociables are to be held during the winter, and other attractive features are to be introduced to make them interesting.

THERE will be one colored man in the next Congress,—Henry P. Cheatham, who will represent the 2d North Carolina district. He is a Republican.

Another bank clerk has gone wrong, George L. Lewis, 19, employed by the City National bank at Springfield, but fortunately his plans were discovered before he found an opportunity to execute them. The young man's fertile brain had originated several schemes to rob the bank, but he knew no "crooks," and thought the acquaintance of one necessary to his plans. In seeking information of such from a Springfield man he got hold of one who informed the bank officials of the matter. The youth was put under detective surveillance for about a month, was confronted with the evidence Monday, and discharged upon signing a written statement of his intentions.

Springfield had a taste of Western borderism last Saturday. Tramps have long made a rendezvous of a piece of woods just east of the city, and 20 of them boarded the local freight east last Saturday, about noon. They were obliged to get off while the train was switching at Indian Orchard, and in attempting to get on when the train started were beaten off by the train hands, whom they stoned as long as they were within reach. They then proceeded to terrorize the community, threatened the life of the station agent, and besieged him in the station. He finally got word to Springfield and a special train was sent out, accompanied by a force of policemen. Six of the tramps were captured, a seventh being shot dead by the accidental discharge of Marshal Clune's revolver, who stumbled and fell as he was running after his man. The dead man was the ringleader, and has been identified as George Boucher, of Johnstown, Pa.

JOTTINGS FROM THE HUB.

From our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, Nov. 21, 1888.

The passing of the national election does not by any means clear the air of politics. The city election is on, but more important than that to the state as a whole is the election of speaker of the House of Representatives. Of cousre the election of the president of the Senate is of as much importance as the election of speaker, but there is no good reason to doubt that Senator Hartwell of Fitchburg will be elected. In this part of the state there is general concurrence in the opinion that he is the man best qualified for the high position, and that he has also secured enough support to put his election beyond a doubt. But it is all uncertain about the speakership, and the position is to be of importance this year because there are large corporate interests which will be affected by the make-up of the committees. The water gas fight will be brought forward again; there are interests of an important private nature which will affect the public which will be disclosed when the time comes, and there is the issue of parochial schools which will be brought to the front at the coming session, and there will be inevitably the usual mass of matters requiring great discretoin and firmness for their proper disposal. In view of all these weighty concerns, it is disgusting to hear some of the talk about the formation of the committees. Committee positions are spoken of as places to be had for the purpose of trading and for political advancement of the members, totally without regard to the welfare of the state or the rights of private persons. Of one of the most competent candidates for the speakership the prediction is made that he will not be elected because he is not enough of a "hustler," as the modern expression goes, and the man who hustles about among his fellow members the most lively is supposed thereby to have the best chance of being elected. It seems to be taken for granted that the candidate who is most importunate for votes will get the most members pledged for him, and that when the House meets it will be found that he has so much of a lead that the others will give up their candidacy as useless. The whole affair is a cheap scramble for office. In all the list of candidates, however worthy the best of them may be, there is not one of such commanding fitness that the members or the public turn to him with confidence that he will be the best, and so there is a grand scramble, and the most persistent engineering is thought to be the best guarantee of success. It would be a worthy move if the strongest members of the House should simply refuse to pledge themselves for any one, should look the field over very carefully and determine who would be the best for the public, wholly apart from selfish ambition, and then set on foot a strong movement which would result in his election.

The list of candidates, as revised by the latest additions and withdrawals, includes Messrs. Slocum of Newton, Wardwell of Haverhill, Barrett of Melrose, Wyman of Hyde Park, Pinkerton of Worcester and Bottum of Northampton. It does not seem as if Pinkteron had a good chance simply on the ground of locality. With the president of the Senate from Worcester county they would not be likely to take the speaker from the same locality. It may not be good reasoning on the merits of the case, but it is the way men are sure to think, all the same. Bottum in the west cannot bring much numerical strength to the fight, even if he has the four western counties solid for him. Wyman, so I am told by one of of his neighbors, is being fooled badly. Some of his supposed friends tell him he had better go on and that he has a fighting chance, while they really know he has no chance at all, and are guying him. It comes to Slocum, Wardwell and Barrett as the leading men. But there is plenty of time for a complete change of circumstances before the House meets.

In city affairs the Republicans have nominated the candidate for mayor who has stood for them in that capacity for two years already—Thomas N. Hart. He has an excellent record as alderman, and is thoroughly conversant with city affairs. The Republicans are hopeful of electing him, and it would doubtless be for the good of the city if he should be chosen. The Republicans profess to have some hope, in the Republican revival this year, that he may be elected. But I have heard the same sort of talk for three or four years, and still Mayor O'Brien is returned year after year. Some Republicans vote for him, and then he has a strong hold upon his party, and they stand so solidly for him. The crowd in the city hall ought to be turned out, but there is no special reason to expect it this year.

It does not seem as if the enormous assessment of women for the city election would be productive of a correspondingly increased vote. They seem to have the idea that if they were assessed that was enough, and that now they can go to the polls and help elect the school committee for whom all the tumult was raised. They are not being registered nearly fast enough to enable all of them to be put on the voting list before registration closes.

The Catholic agitation has but just begun, according to the plans of the Protestant agitators. The committee of one hundred has made a strong point against the new school history which the school committee put into the public schools of Boston in place of Swinton's history, because of the teaching of the latter on the doctrine of indulgencies. It has compared the old edition of Anderson's—which took the place of Swinton's—with the edition which has been put into the schools, and has found several passages which show beyond question that the book was altered so as to suppress those facts of history which were unfavorable to the Catholics. The whole force of history is weakened greatly by the changes, and it is evident that children who have no other information will miss some of the essentials of our past career as a race. A passage of the old book which said that a certain reign was noted for the "persecution" of the Albigenses has been made to read for the "rise" of the Albigenses. The statement that in the massacre of St. Bartholomew's day 10,000 were slain in Paris alone and 30,000 in the other parts of France has been changed to read that it is said that ten thousand were slain in Paris, but that it is impossible to determine the result with accuracy. Other instances are as glaring as this. The truth of history has been deliberately suppressed in order that nothing invidious shall appear against the Catholics. Rev. Dr. Duryea, pastor of the Central church (Congregational) was the author of the report, by general understanding, and it is no wonder he prefers to accept a call to Omaha in order to escape the feeling against him for his course.

One of the events of the week has been the reappearance here after an absence of ten years of Clara Louise Kellogg in English opera. But it would have been well for her reputation if she had not come. She has fallen off pitifully from her former standard, and the most that generous friends can do is to let her down with considerate criticism. Her singing is out of tune, and the company with which she appears does not at all come up to the standard which Miss Kellogg has set for public taste in her better days. It is a great pity that she should thus change the impression and remembrance which the public will have for her. Had she made the most of her halcyon days, her fame would have been secure.

LANDON.

The announcement of another Thomas concert will be hailed with delight by the music loving portion of our readers. The prospectus which our advertising columns give indicates a grand treat by the orchestra, and when completed with such vocal artists as Mme. Fursch-Madi, Miss Emily Winant and Mr. George Prehn, the wonder is how such a combination can be afforded at the price. Mr. Thomas has only this one evening at liberty, and with kindly remembrances of Springfield and vicinity derived from the magnificent successes of last season, he is desirous to fill that time, Saturday evening, Dec. 1, by a concert in City Hall. The concert will be given in Mr. Thomas's best style; the program will be of about two hours' duration and will be new to Springfield; and it is confidently expected that the concert, including as it does the introduction to this section of three such artists, will be an event of great importance to musical circles. In all of Mr. Thomas's undertakings we have come to feel a great sense of reliability and confidence, for he never disappoints his audience, either in his orchestra, his programme or the accompanying artists. This will positively be the only chance to hear Theodore Thomas's grand orchestra this season, and possibly for a long time, and we trust our readers will improve the opportunity. Messrs. C. N. Stimpson & Co., the well known music dealers to whom we are indebted for so much in the past, bring them here this time, and all communications can be addressed to them or to their regularly advertised ticket agents.

CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA.

For three weeks I was suffering from a severe cold in my head, accompanied by a pain in the temples. I tried some of the many catarrh remedies without any relief. Ely's Cream Balm was recommended to me. After only six applications of the Balm every trace of my cold was removed. HENRY C. CLARK, 1st Divison New York Appraisers office.

Ely's Cream Balm gives satisfaction to every one using it for catarrhal troubles.—G. K. MELLOR, Druggist, Worcester, Mass.

Bucklen's Arnica Salve.

The best salve in the world for cuts, bruises, sores, ulcers, salt rheum, fever sores, tetter, chapped hands, chilblains, corns, and all skin eruptions, and positively cures piles, or no pay required. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction, or money refunded. Price 25 cents per box.

For sale by LeGro & Lynde, Druggists.

Merit Wins.

We desire to say to our citizens, that for years we have been selling Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Dr. King's New Life Pills, Bucklen's Arnica Salve and Electric Bitters, and have never handled remedies that sell as well, or that have given such universal satisfaction. We do not hesitate to guarantee them every time, and we stand ready to refund the purchase price, if satisfactory results do not follow their use. These remedies have won their great popularity purely on their merits.—LEGRO & LYNDE, Druggists.

A Safe Investment.

Is one which is guaranteed to bring you satisfactory results, or in case of failure a return of purchase price. On this safe plan you can buy from our advertised Druggist a bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption. It is guaranteed to bring relief in every case, when used for any affection of Throat, Lungs, or Chest, such as Consumption, Inflammation of Lungs, Bronchitis, Asthma, Whooping Cough, Croup, etc., etc. It is pleasant and agreeable to taste, perfectly safe, and can always be depended upon.

Trial bottles free at LGero & Lynde's drug store.

Do You Wish

To regain your health if you are all broken down and suffering from nervous prostration? I will tell you what cured me after suffering for months. I used two bottles of Sulphur Bitters, and now I am a well man.—C. STILES, Bookkeeper, Canton.

Oriental Beauties

Secured delicate complexions and soft skins centuries ago, by use of Cream of Mecca. Send address of four lady friends and 10 cents in stamps to W. E. & W. P. Thayer, 231 Savin Hill avenue, Boston, for sample box and book.

The Excitement Not Over.

The rush on the druggists still continues and daily scores of people call for a bottle of Kemp's Balsam for the throat and lungs for the cure of coughs, colds, asthma, bronchitis, and consumption. Kemp's Balsam, the standard family remedy, is sold on a guarantee and never fails to gives entire satisfaction. Price 50c and $1.

Would You Believe

The proprietor of Kemp's Balsam gives thousands of bottles away yearly? This mode of advertising would prove ruinous if the balsam was not a perfect cure for coughs and all throat and lung troubles. You will see the excellent effect after taking the first dose. Don't hesitate! Procure a bottle to-day to keep in your home or room for immediate or future use. Trial bottle free at all druggists. Large size 50c and $1.

Vindicating Its Character.

We have already referred to the fact that on the day following the late election, the Boston Globe printed and sold 424,230 copies. Later came the announcement from the Boston Herald that its sales on the same day aggregated 441,738. This brought out an ungracious reference from the Globe, in which ill concealed chagrin was coupled with an implication that the Herald was putting forth a bogus claim. No attention being paid to this bit of churlishness, the Globe once more addressed itself to the subject, and in its issue of yesterday more than intimated that the Herald was a liar. It published what purported to be a comparative statement of the circulation of both papers in some of the leading towns and cities of New England, from which it figured out that the Globe's circulation was 20 per cent in excess of its competitor's, and that on the face of this showing it was only fair to presume that a like ratio would hold true with the grand aggregate. The very peculiar manner in which the Globe made up its returns is exposed by the Herald to-day, in the course of a dignified article in which it vindicates itself from the infamous charge of an envious rival:

> These figures were furnished to the Globe by its correspondents under a circular letter from the home office instructing them to find out "in a careless way just how many Heralds and Globes were sold all day on Wednesday, the day after election." They were told "to do it in a way that would not indicate that you intend reporting it, but as if you simply wanted to know out of curiosity. You might assume, just for purposes of drawing out the story, that, of course, the Herald led."

To illustrate the worthlessness of information procured "in a careless way," the Herald lets in a little light upon the statement made by the Globe to the effect that one buyer alone—the Hotel and Railroad News Company—bought on Wednesday, the 7th inst., 68,110 copies of that paper, against 67,620 Heralds. As a matter of fact, the Herald's sales to the company aggregated 89,462 copies, a clear lead of over 21,000 in this one quarter alone. Finally, the assailed paper says it is not lying for circulation. It is not lying for advertising. It does not do business in that way.

And the News believes it is telling the truth.—Salem News, Friday, Nov. 16, 1888.

An Eminent

Temperance lecturer in New England, Mrs. John Barton, says: I was subject to deathly sick head aches and also dispepsia. Sulphur Bitters cured me when all other remedies failed. Mrs. Barton is the wife of John Barton, Superintendent of Repairs, Pacific Mills, Lawrence, Mass.

CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA.

Mothers.

Remember that Castoria does not contain Morphine, Opium, or any other narcotic substance, in any quantity, shape or form. It is entirely vegetable, pleasant to take, positively effective, and perfectly harmless. It is not a secret remedy; the formula is printed on the wrapper. Your physician will recommend it. Paregoric, Bateman's Drops, and many so-called Soothing Syrups, are composed principally of Opium or Morphine; in any quantity they stupify, and in large quantities are deadly poisons. Castoria assimilates the food and regulates the bowels, cures diarrhœa, allays feverishness and fretfulness, soothes the pains in teething, relieves constipation and kills worms. It brings refreshing and natural sleep to the child, and gives rest to the mother.

"Castoria is so well adapted to infants and children, that I recommend it as superior to any other known remedy." DR. H. A. ARCHER,
111 South street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

March 8, 1888.

"From personal knowledge and observation I can say that Castoria is an excellent medicine for children, acting as a laxative and relieving the pent up bowels and general system very much. Many mothers have told me of its excellent effect upon their children. DR. G. C. OSGOOD.

Advice to Mothers.

Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of cutting teeth? If so, send at once and get a bottle of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures dysentery and diarrhœa, regulates the stomach and bowels, cures wind colic, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING is pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female nurses and physicians in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price 25 cents a bottle. 1y23

Satisfaction to buyers, that is what people want—satisfaction; and they go where they can get it. We let everybody know, near and far, that we want nobody's money except on terms that nobody else in this region ventures to make, viz., trade back next day if you want to. Nobody thinks it possible to sell dry goods on such terms, and so, many make haste to buy of us.

Well, how is it turning out? Is it as great advantage as people think? Does the liberality of the terms bring disaster on the store? It is so great an advantage that thousands buy of us rather than at home.

Just see how it works. It brings your trade, and it insures fair dealing. It is making our business great by making it true.

But let it be twice as great, we could do the trade.

CALL AND SEE THEM.

The Alphabet's Thanksgiving.

'Twas well in November, the time of the year
When people are thinking of Thanksgiving cheer,
That the Alphabet family, little and great,
Sat down by the fireside in busy debate,
To see in what manner the day they should spend,
To make it delightful to every dear friend.
And soon they decided on this much at least,
To have a reunion and make a great feast.
They'd worked all the year, their duty they'd done;
And now for one day they'd have pleasure and fun.
So all went to work with hearty good will,
And brought to their aid taste, bounty and skill.
They searched through the forest, the garden, the field,
For everything nice that their treasures could yield.
They sent to the rivers, the sea, and the air
For all their best daintes, delicious and rare;
Then called upon Nature, and Science and Art
In dressing the viands to each take a part.
If but their dessert you hear me relate,
You'll wish you had shared in this dinner of state;
With apples and almonds A stood at the head,
Then B with bananas and berries next led.
With cocoa and coffee and chocolate-drops,
Cakes, candies and custards and clear crystal cups,
Cheese, cherries, and all the rich cream for the treat,
C carefully came, the third of the suite.
D claimed some fine damsons that helped out the feast,
Then brought his full quota of dates from the East.
E all of the extracts and essences brought,
The purest and sweetest that ever were bought;
Yet envying others came loaded with eggs
That filled a large basket, a box and two kegs.
F's filberts were fine, and his figs could but please
When part were well dried, part fresh from the trees.
With grapes in great clusters, green ginger preserved,
And guava for jelly, G all the guest served.
H helped out his honey with liberal hand,
And fine huckleberries brought on to the stand.
I furnished the ice, clear, solid and cold,
And isin-glass too, so easy to mold.
But J claimed the jellies, and all the jams too,
And said his jujube was a jucy fruit new.
K's kisses and knick-nacks took up a large space,
But lemons and limes gave L the most grace.
M's melons and mangos were greatly enjoyed.
Brisk N at the nuts kept nine crackers employed;
Then nectarines, finer then any rich peach,
He placed on the table in every one's reach.
O's oil, and his olives, and oranges sweet,
By epicures old were pronouced a fine treat.
P profoundly prepared the whole crowd to surprise
With new-fangled puddings and old-fashioned pies,
Pears, peaches, plums, prunes persimmons, papaws,
Pomegranates, pine apples, he brought for applause.
Pecans and the peanuts all went in his name;
To preserves and to pickles few doubted his claim.
Q quiet and quaint the quinces sat down,
And R ran for raisins, the best in the town.
S searched for strawberries luscious and large,
And then to sweet sugar he gave them in charge,
While for sardines and sauces from over the sea,
He went to T's ship that brought tam'rinds and tea.
U, bland and urbane, set out a fine urn
And said for some use "'twould do them a turn."
V came with vanilla, and vowed that the wines,
The grapes and the berries were all from his vines;
But W winked at the walnuts and wine,
Declaring without them he never could dine.
And then warbled sweetly a Temperance glee:
"Cold water, cold water for you and for me."
X said the expense and the excellence too
Of most of the viands were justly his due.
That yapon made tea, Y ventured to hint,
And offered his yams without measure or stint,
Though down at the foot Z ranked with the best.
For he gave the dessert a zeal and a zest.

A HILLSIDE SKETCH.

Our favorite drive the past summer has been over to see the sunsets from what was known in "ye olden time" as "Springfield Mountains," and there are few places near commanding so extensive and at the same time so beautiful a view as the old roads across the mountains. Among the many charming spots is a ravine on the hillside, where the banks rise eight to ten feet on each side of a noisy brook, not the babbling, singing brook of poetry and song, but a rushing, roaring mountain torrent, hastening along on its course over sharp stones and around abrupt corners, pausing occasionally for a few moments to rest from its wild turbulence and impetuosity in a quiet nook under the rocks, where a few golden rays of the sun shining through the cool, dark green of the foliage overhead, touch the water, lighting up the deep shadows of the trees which are pictured in its mirror. Beautiful at any time, it is indeed an attractive place on a warm summer day, its enticing coolness and deep shade breathing out a cordial welcome. The boughs and trunk of an old white birch tree, twisted together and shaped by nature in the form of a rude rustic seat, bend invitingly over the cool stream, which is fed by a never-failing spring of water from Wigwam Hill near by. In the alcoves under the rocks, the bright, glistening little "shiners" dart about in the clear water which reflects the fresh green ferns and mosses growing in the crevices of the overhanging rocks, while near the center is the reflection of a wee bit of blue seen through the branches of the trees which frame it in, and deep below for a background the white quartz pebbles. Here one may sit, and, dreaming, almost believe the Indian legend of the spot, told by one of the old inhabitants of the town.

A lovely, dark-eyed daughter of the forest, Agiokeek by name, once used this secluded nook as her boudoir, according to tradition, and here it was that one day as she was contemplating the graceful lines of her oval face in the brook, a deadly rattlesnake glided silently along to her side and fixed its bright eyes upon her. Soon she leaned back upon her elbow, and, lost dreams, in which young and idle maidens will sometimes indulge, did not perceive the reptile which was crouched so near her. In a few moments bright and many-hued rays flitted before her eyes, the brilliant prism-like colors of which seemed to proceed from the ferns upon which her gaze became intently fixed. She was slowly and surely becoming fascinated by the magic power which this reptile can exert at will. Soon he raised his head, his two bright, star-like eyes never wavering in their steady intensity of gaze. Agiokeek now became conscious of her danger, and tried to break the charm, the spell which was upon her. She endeavored with all her strength to raise herself, to withdraw her eyes, but in vain. It was too late. All power seemed to have left her limbs, they refused to obey the dictates of her will. Slowly those wondrous eyes came nearer and nearer. The dazzling, bright-hued rays wavered to and fro, to and fro, before her excited vision, and the snake gave the warning rattle preparatory to plunging his deadly fangs into the shapely, rounded arm of the frightened maiden, when an arrow, sent with unerring, deadly aim, pierced him through the head. In two minutes more he was writhing and twisting on the rocks in dying agony, while Agiokeek lay fainting in the arms of her lover, a brave young warrior by the name of Wequaugan. Here the legend ends, and we hear no more of Agiokeek, though the old squaw who lived alone in her solitary wigwam on these hills so many years after civilization had driven her tribe away, and then, the last of her race, mysteriously disappeared, leaving no trace behind, may have been she. Of Wequaugan we may read in the earlier local records that he it was who sold much land to the white man from Minnechaug (the Indian name for this mountain.)

The ravine opens toward the west, and from it can be seen, first the meadow, its green carpet dotted with bright-hued flowers: below, the quiet village nestling tranquilly at the foot of the protecting hills, with its white spires pointing silently upward, ever present lessons to the passer-by. Beyond, the peaceful farm-houses, sprinkled over the landscape among the trees, outlining the irregular wanderings of the white country roads; at the left, the old village cemetery of the fathers, where the wild sweet violet and the pure, white beauty of the daisy unfold themselves and drop their petals on the graves of many loved ones, and where the voices of the birds mingle in sweetest anthens of praise to Him through whom "Death is swallowed up in victory."

At the right we see the heavy hemlocks and pines of the newer resting-place for the dead on the wooded hillside, and directly in front, forty miles away over this wide valley are the Blandford hills and Mts. Tom and Holyoke, with the towns and villages scattered along the Connecticut river just east of the distant range, South Hadley, Holyoke; Chicopee, Springfield, Longmeadow and others. From a point not far away seventeen church spires have been counted.

It was a warm October day, "the one bright day in all the week of rain," when we drove over to the mountain the last time. The foliage was all ablaze with color. The vivid reds of the sumacs and maples, the bright yellows of the birches and willows, the white misty glory of the clematis, the brilliant berries of the bittersweet, all lent their fascinations to add to the enchantment of the spot. The jagged edges and fantastic outlines of the few clouds in the sky were transformed and glorified by the mellow light of the setting sun. There was a restful, peaceful influence in the very air. Our thoughts were unconsciously lifted to a higher plane, and the cares and vexations of our everyday life were for the time forgotten. As we drove slowly homeward through the hazy softness of the autumn sky and watched the rich color slowly fade from the brilliant scene, our thoughts instinctively reverted to that saying of Fletcher Reede, "Winter is our sculpture, while spring—spring is a pencilled sketch delicate and fresh; summer is a picture in water-colors, and autumn the great Artist's masterpiece in oils."

A SURPRISED ENGLISHMAN.

A few months ago an Englishman ambled into a jeweler's store in Lampasas, Tex., when the following conversation ensued· "Ave you got h'any good, hold English timepieces in the nature of clocks?" asked the Englishman. "We have nothing but American-made clocks," replied the jeweler. "They are by far the best, and of superior workmanship." "Ho, no, you are mistaken. If I cawn't get me a Henglish clock I must send hover to Hengland and 'ave me own family piece sent hover by steamer, you know." The jeweler said very well, and the Englishman went home and wrote for this marvellous family timepiece. In due course of time it arrived, and as the Englishman was conveying it up from the express office he dropped into the jeweler's to exhibit it. "Aw, now," he said with his face wreathed in smiles, "look hat this for a minute. 'Ere's a timepiece which has been in our family many a year, and has always kept perfect time. Look hand see hif you don't consider hit superior to American clocks." The jeweler examined the exterior of the clock, and then opened it. Brushing the dust from a dimly printed label in the back, he revealed to the astonished Briton the following label: "Seth Thomas, Bridgeport, Conn., U. S. A.—1859."—Texas Siftings.

NOTT vs. SHOTT.

We have received from a correspondent the following account of a duel which was fought in his neighborhood. Some way or other, we are half in the dark about the result of the duel in question, but we shall leave the decision to our readers: A duel was lately fought in Texas by Alexander Shott and John S. Nott. Nott was shot and Shott was not. In this case it is better to be Shott than Nott. There was a rumor that Nott was not shot, and Shott avows that he shot Nott, which proves either that the shot Shott shot at Nott was not shot, or that Nott was shot notwithstanding. Circumstantial evidence is not always good. It may be made to appear on trial that the shot Shott shot shot Nott, or, as accidents with firearms are frequent, it may be possible that the shot Shott shot shot Shott himself, when the whole affair would resolve itself into its original elements, and Shott would be shot and Nott would be not. We think, however, that the shot Shott shot shot not Shott but Nott; anyway, it is hard to tell who was shot.—Exchange.

"Mr. Hankinson has a fine, intellectual face but—pardon me, dear,—are not his trousers somewhat baggy at the knees?" The mercury fell out of sight as Miss Kajones replied: "It is possible that you do not know that Mr. Hankinson is one of the heaviest stockholders in the bagging trust?"

"Good day, lady; have ze kindness to excuse my sudden appearance," remarked the Frenchman who had accidentally fallen from a seven-story building and on the trip down had noticed a friend standing at a window in the fourth story. The apology was accepted.

A FAIR TRIAL

for scrofula, salt rheum, or any affection caused by impure blood, is sufficient to convince any one of the superior and peculiar curative powers of this medicine. The following statement is right to the point.

"My daughter Mary was afflicted with scrofulous sore neck from the time she was 22 months old till she became 6 years of age. Lumps formed in her neck, causing great annoyance, and two of them, after growing to the size of a pigeon's egg, broke and discharged. One became a running sore for three years. We thought we would give Hood's Sarsaparilla a thorough trial. We began with it in January, and in a few months, after she had taken five bottles, all supperation had ceased. We then waited three months, when, as a new lump was beginning to form, we again gave her Hood's Sarsaparilla. After she had taken less than two bottles the lump and all indications of scrofula had entirely disappeared, and now she seems to be a healthy child."—J. S. Carlile, Nauright, N. J.

CLEVELAND'S

SUPERIOR

BAKING POWDER.

The Purest and Best.

Is made only of strictly pure grape cream of tartar, strictly pure bicarbonate of soda, and a small portion of flour as a preservative, nothing else whatever, and is warranted entirely free from alum, ammonia, phosphates, lime, and all other adulterations frequently found in baking powders. The character of materials used, their purity, and the nicety of their combination, render Cleveland's superior baking the most healthful and most economical in use, and it always affords wholesome, nutritious, and delicious food.

It is recommended for purity, healthfulness and efficiency by government and state chemists, chemists of boards of health, and professors in institutions of learning throughout the country.

Sold only in cans. Full weight.

VOLUME XXXIX. PALMER, MASS., FRIDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 23, 1888.---SIX PAGES. NUMBER 34.

AS GOES TEXAS, SO GOES THE COUNTRY.

The following convincing and enthusiastic lines, written by a resident of the "Lone Star" state, are copied from a Texas paper, and will be read with interest and pleasure by thousands whose experience enables them to vouch for the fact that there is as much truth as poetry in the composition:

THEY ARE COMING.

They are coming from the mansions of aristocratic "swells,"
Where the merry music maketh delectation for the belles,
They are coming from the houses of the merchants, and the men
Who are preachers, teachers, scientists and those who wield the pen;
They are coming from the villas where bankers love to dwell,
From the happy, smiling cottages in dingle and in dell;
From the cities, towns and hamlets, and from every home and haunt,
To buy EMERSON PIANOS, which will "fill a long felt want."

They are coming, the mechanics, each a man who toils and strives,
They are coming, the wage-earners, with their children and their wives,
They are coming, careless cowboys, dapper clerks, and drummers, too,
Each one bound to buy an EMERSON—no other make will do.
For solid happiness and peace each from its tone derives
And poetry begins to smile into prosaic lives,
And they troop to GOGGAN BROTHERS or to one of their four branches.
Those men who live in cities and those dwellers upon ranches.

And the EMERSONS are coming from the city by the sea,
The town that had a picnic when they spoiled King George's tea;
They are coming by the car-load to fill the great demand;
They are coming down to Galveston, by sea as well as land;
They are coming, too, to Waco, and to Houston, and to San Antonio, and Austin, always foremost in the van—
Five citadels of EMERSON, upheld against all others,
By the Texas "Gog and Magog," but known here as GOGGAN BROTHERS.

Galveston, October, 1888. VIOLAS TOUT.

MASON & HAMLIN.

The cabinet organ was introduced in its present form by Mason & Hamlin in 1861. Other makers followed in the manufacture of the instruments, but the Mason & Hamlin organs have always maintained their supremacy as the best in the world.

Mason & Hamlin offer, as demonstration of the unequalled excellence of their organs, the fact that at all of the great World's Exhibitions, since that of ORGANS $22 to $900. | Paris, 1867, in competition with best makers of all countries, they have invariably taken the highest honors. Illustrated catalogues free.

Mason & Hamlin do not hesitate to make extraordinary claim for their pianos, that they are superior to all others. They recognize the high excellence achieved by other leading makers in the art of piano making, but still claim superiority. This they attribute solely to the remarkable improvement introduced by them in the year 1882, and now known as the "Mason & Hamlin Piano Stringer,"

PIANOS Grand & Upright | by the use of which is secured the greatest possible purity and refinement of tone, together with great increased capacity for standing in tune and other important advantages.

A circular containing testimonials from three hundred purchasers, musicians, and tuners, sent, together with descriptive catalogue, to any applicant.

Pianos and organs sold for cash or easy payments; also rented.

SPECIAL.

YES, you go to Springfield to trade because you do much better there, and they have larger stocks from which to select. Those are points. Now when there, drop into SAXTON'S jewelry store and have a rich treat, looking at diamonds, watches, solid silver ware, clocks, etc., and find yourself welcome, even though not desiring to buy. You see elegant things on every hand, and more than likely see a new novelty, just the present for Christmas, or other occasions. Buying a ladies' solid gold watch, handsomely engraved, for $25 (twelve styles to select from) is worth your thought. You can go very much higher. Finger rings, engraved and plain band, $2.50 and up, with tiny rings of solid gold for baby, 50c. and upward. Cuff holders a pair, 50c.; so much better than the common pin. Think of these useful presents:

Gold thimbles, $3.50 up.
Solid silver thimbles, 25c. up.
Napkin rings, name engraved, 50c.

The boy wants a watch—natural enough—a stem-winder; silver $10, nickel $2.50, isn't hard on your pocket. A silver-toned clock for $6 and upwards adds a charm to home at small expense. A silver or gold-lined cup at $1.00 would make the child's face more radiant than any cup. If we should speak of bracelets, cuff buttons, studs, knives, forks, spoons, etc., you would lack time to read of them, so you will have to visit our large store with its first-class stock, feast on its elegant novelties, and purchase, if you desire, what you may find cheaper and better than elsewhere.

Those That We Loved Long Ago.

Dreams of the solemn night linger yet o'er us,
Visions that bring back our young life before us,
'Tis but in sleep that the grave can restore us
Those that we loved long ago.

Sweet thus to slumber, but sad the awakening,
When the cold light of the morning is breaking;
What the night gave us of joy, the day taking,
Those that we loved long ago.

Lone heart, take comfort; the cold light of morning
Kindles to sunshine, the glad world adorning;
Look heavenward, not graveward, to see them returning—
Those that we loved long ago.

WARE WEDNESDAY EVENING CLUB.

Inaugural Essay, at the Beginning of 1888-89, November 13th, 1888, by its President, F. D. Gilmore.

The Wednesday evening club, at present, may be regarded in the light of an experiment; the succes of the experiment will depend wholly on the efforts of its members. In its initial season of last winter, a wide range of topics was considered, each essayist selecting his own subject, thus giving an opportunity for the free play of each individual's fancy. First, we listened to a decidedly interesting paper whose salient feature was the mission of our own country to so mould and guide the thought of that great mass of humanity now pouring in upon us from the highways and by-ways of the old world, that here may be found the highest exemplification of that great truth, "the universal Fatherhood of God and the universal brotherhood of man." Then came an exhaustive paper on the industrial agitation, with copious extracts from various writers, showing the direction and tendency of the movement as disclosed by the discussions now occupying so large a share of public attention. Following these were two essays on the tariff in which, I fear, the essayists were forced to combat the predjudiced as well as the convictions of their hearers. The subject of the next essay was "the American Newspaper." This brought out a very profitable interchange of ideas as to the true function of the public press and the mission of the journalist. The position of the writer was well maintained, endeavoring, as he did, to show that the newspaper is not to fashion public opinion but, rather, to be the exponent of the already established sentiments of its constituents; that it is not its place to stand as sponser for the morals of the community, but to portray them just as it finds them; that it is to furnish the news of the day served in the style best suited to the tastes of its clientage; in a word, a newspaper, being in the strictest sense a purely business affair and dependent for its financial success upon the ability it displays in catering to the wisdom or the folly of the patrons it seeks, its place is to remain passive rather than to lead forward to loftier heights of attainments. Competition, constructive and destructive, was the central idea of the next paper submitted to the club. In it the essayist set forth vividly the selfish attitude hitherto taken by the winners in life's race toward those of their fellows physically, or morally, incapacitated to bear their full share of the burdens of humanity. Following this was an article on "metals and their influence on man." The consideration of this topic brought out an interesting talk about the peculiar power and wonderful influence exerted upon civilization by the precious metals, especially gold. The concluding essay dealt with our common school system. Inasmuch as the education of the young is of a vital importance in a people's government, and in the hurry and rush of the present day is apt to be lost sight of by those who should have a fostering care over it, it would seem to be a fitting thing that this subject is to be presented again this season, following the line of thought indicated by the writer of that paper.

Thus, briefly, have I endeavored to remind you of the feast of good things enjoyed last season, in order that you may be incited to enter heartily and earnestly into the work planned for the coming winter. I think that for some time there has been a certain, undefined feeling, among those of us who are engaged in the active business of life, that we pay too little attention to the study of those important problems which the men and women of this generation must solve. In that grand progress of events whose unfolding began with the advent of man upon the earth, and whose onward march is like the continuous flow of a mighty river, every individual of the race, however humble or obscure, has had a place, every generation its post of duty. To try to find just what position in this unfolding we, men of Ware, are to take and hold is, I take it, one of the aims of the Wednesday Evening Club. At the outset, I would call your attention to what may be considered a weakness of our national life—the glorying in the achievements of the past, at the expense of present duty. This indulged to excess begets national decay. Every people must imbibe fresh life from living springs. In the stagnant pools lurk disease and death. The pilgrim and the puritan, the patriot of the revolution and the Union volunteer, all had their task to do; they completed it and have passed on, leaving to us, their children, new questions of public policy to settle as grave as ever confronted the people of the times of a Bradford or a Winthrop, a Franklin or an Adams, a Garrison or a Lincoln.

There is, undoubtedly, a peculiar fascination, to men of Puritan ancestry, in tracing the hand of Divine Providence in the development and spread of New England idea of personal liberty throughout these American states and the weaving of it so inextricably into our national life. If, however, we acknowledge the guiding and the leading in the one case, are we not equally bound to admit that it is the same hand which is pointing to our shores that great multitude of every tribe and kindred and people who seek here to find and enjoy those inalienable rights with which every man is endowed by his Creator? In that broad spirit of toleration inherited from our fathers, we have bidden the stranger welcome within our gates; we have urged him to take up his abode with us, to make our land his home—all that we have is his, freely to employ for himself and his children. In return, this large influx of foreign life has aided materially in developing the natural resources of our country, and more especially, has enabled New England to pass from its agricultural simplicity to a strong and properous industrial community; it has, also, brought with it grave responsibilities and threatens serious dangers to the fundamental principles of our government. It is in our town life that we first notice the frictions caused by the discordant element; this is natural, for here is the source from whom proceeds the life of our entire political and social organism. Therefore, I believe we have chosen wisely in selecting as our topic for this winter, "A study of local institutions as illustrated in the upbuilding of the town of Ware." In the plan presented, the sub-divisions are so arranged as to give ample opportunity for as large an amount of original research as each essayist may see fit to make, with the certainty that the results will prove interesting and valuable as a means to the end we seek. As affording an opportunity for the general treatment of the topic, and in order to indicate in a brief way a line of thought that may serve to start us in the desired direction, I ask you to consider the origin and growth of the New England idea of local self-government and our present needs as an industrial community.

As the limits of this essay will only permit of a very summary treatment of the subject matter, I wish here to refer you to the authorities used in its preparation from whom you will gain more adequate ideas than I can hope to impart concerning it. They are as follows: Narrative and critical history of the United States, edited by Justin Winsor; Studies of local institutions, edited by Prof. H. B. Adams of John Hopkins; Green's history of the English people; The English people in its three homes, by Edward Freeman; Democracy in America by Tocqueville; Oration on the founding of the North West, by Senator Hoar of Mass.; Industral liberty, Bonham; Wealth and progress, by Gunton; Clifford's lectures and essays; Study of a New England factory town; Political essays by Herbert Spencer; The Union, an oration by Chauncey M. Depew; Is our social life threatened? by Bishop Spalding; Essay on Arnold Toynbee, by Prof. H. B. Adams.

Aristocle says: "The nature of every thing is best seen in its smallest portions." It is only through an intelligent analysis of the principles involved in the right adjustment of the relations of the individual units of society, that we are able to obtain a comprehensive idea of the ethics of human government. In that miniature republic, the New England town, is contained the fundamental portions of our body politic, a knowledge of which is a prerequisite to good citizenship. Our free local institutions are not a spontaneous generation, the result of exceptional conditions in the soil and climate of New England; neither are they a mechanism, specially contrived to meet the social necessities of the puritan and pilgrim colonists. They are a growth, and as such they imply an antecedent germ, from whence they are endowed with all the vitality of organic life, and through which they are enabled to propagate after their kind. For the origin of those social and political principles to-day dominant in the United States, we naturally turn to the home of our ancestors in the mother country; it is not there, however, but in the German fatherland, among the barbarous tribes once domiciled on the peninsula dividing the Baltic from the North sea, that we find the first historical trace of the germ that has borne the fruit of civil and religious liberty to all the English-speaking people. The transplanting of Teutonic manners and customs to the island of Britain forms one of the most important chapters in the history of our race; it partakes both of the nature of a conquest and a migration, being a part of that great westward movement of the German people that took place in the fifth century of the Christian era and ended in the wrecking of the Roman empire. The mere physical conquest of the continental portions of Europe by the Germanic tribes was of little moment compared with the intellectual subjugation of the conquerors to Roman thought. For, notwithstanding the land of the Spaniard, the Italian and the Gaul was ruthlessly spoiled by the northern barbarians, and the people subjected to the yoke the invaders, such was the vitality of the Roman national life, in spite of the corruptions ingrafted thereon by the enervating influences of oriental luxury, that the entire social and religious structure remained distinctively Roman. Now the basis of the Roman polity was the supremacy of the state and the subordination of the individual. The socialistic fallacies of the present day are but the projections of the politics of ancient Rome into the modern world.

The conquest of Britain, however, by the tribes of the Baltic (the Engle, the Saxon, the Jute and the Frisian) presents a very different aspect. Although for three centuries a Roman province, the pressure of the babarian world on her frontiers had caused the early withdrawal of the Roman legions from the island, leaving it again in the hands of its native inhabitants, so that when our kindred's keels touched its shores, the memory of Rome had passed away and, before its influence was again felt, the fusion of the conquering tribes into a distinct national life in the conquered territory and the establishment of their ancient forms of communal villages had become too far advanced to be arrested thereby.

The early history of the English in their new home is not stainless; it is scarred by all the cruelties that mark a barbarous people, yet out of all, after ten centuries of civil strife and religious dissensions, emerged that bright star of hope, the Puritan commonwealth. Puritanism, as a factor in English politics, died with the century that gave it birth; transplanted in the soil of a new continent by the genius of the men of the Mayflower, it preserved the germ of the Germanic idea of a social organism, whose central thought is to so adjust the principles of individual liberty and restraint that thereby may be reconciled the liberty of all with the liberty of each. The religious element in the founding of New England, if the plans of our club are carried out, will be fully presented in a future essay; there can, however, be no serious questioning of the fact that differences of faith in the mother country and the desire to obtain freedom of conscience in spiritual matters were the primal motives of the migrations of the Pilgrims and determined in a large degree the character of the New England colonies; yet, closely allied with the religious incentives, and coexistent with them, was an inherited sense of the necessity for a well ordered civic community; so we find in the compact drawn on board the Mayflower, as she rested in the quiet harbor of Provincetown, a simple declaration of political faith that has met the test of two and one-half centuries of human progress almost without a change. The kernel of this first written constitution is found in these few lines:

> "We whose names are undersigned, do by these presents solemnly and mutually, in the presence of God and of one another, covenant and combine ourselves together into a civil body politic, for our better ordering and preservation, and the furtherance of the ends aforesaid; and by virtue hereof to enact, constitute and frame such just and equal laws, ordinances, acts, constitutions and offices from time to time as shall be thought most meet and convenient for the general good of the colony, unto which we promise all due submission and obedience."

The founding of a commonwealth, based upon this emphatic declaration of the rights and duties of men as they live together in society, marks the first stage in the growth of our political liberty; the declaration of independence, the adoption of the constitution of the United States, and the proclamation may be justly regarded as beacon lights, marking the successive stages of that growth.

Prior to 1860, the character of the prevailing race had been sufficient to impregnate our broader national life with the New England idea of local self-government and the political equality of all men before the law. But the phenomenal activity of the present age, stimulated by the applications of the discoveries and inventions of modern science to the industrial arts, have completed that greatest change in all history, the supplanting of military spirit of the age of chivalry by the spirit of industry. In these closing years of the nineteenth century, our country has become a radiating center of this far-reaching change in the social organism, and when we reflect that, with the present ratio of increase in population, the time is near at hand, as history reckons time, when there will be in the United States two hundred millions of people all dependent upon industrial conditions, and a majority of them wage-workers, the effect of this new condition of affairs upon the local institutions of the Republic demands of every thoughtful citizen serious consideration.

It is too late now for us to debate the question, "Can a democratic country safely lend its influence to the building up of popular industrial centers?" We have already crossed the threshold, and by the direction we have given to our industrial system, have deliberately persuaded men to abandon the simple village life of the fathers and mass themselves in centers of population. We must rather concern ourselves with that larger question: "Out of these new conditions, what kind of a world are we making for posterity to live in?" Bishop Spalding, in a recent magazine article, answers the question thus:—"The modern industrial system, in spite of the philanthropic efforts of individuals, churches, and governments, is a sacrifice of human beings to capital, a consumption of men, which by wasting of the vital forces of individuals, by the weakening of whole generations, by the breaking up of families, by the ruin of morality and the destruction of the joyousness of work, has brought civilized society into imminent peril." I presume that all of you, who have given any thought to the tone of the current discussions of economic questions, can recall scores of statements of like tenor to the above made by equally acute thinkers in all parts of the land. An indictment like this is not to be met lightly, for if a tithe of the counts contained therein can be sustained by competent evidence, it would seem that the legacy which the nineteenth century is to bequeath to the coming generations, will be a curse rather than a blessing.

The Wednesday Evening Club, during its coming session, is to concern itself with this question as it relates to the political and social life of the town in which we live; and this is practically all that it has any business to concern itself with; for, as Dr. Adams very forcibly points out in a recent lecture, "The only possibility for the uplifting of the masses and for social and political regeneration lies in the work that is nearest home. It is from constant improvements in the local situation, by the establishment of local connections in our towns and cities with the great moral, social and educational ideas of the time that general reform is to proceed." It is not necessary for us, certainly, to go away from home in search of opportunities for work. In the town of Ware every phase of the economic and social questions, now attracting the attention of thoughtful men presents itself to whosoever will have eyes to see, ears to hear and a mind to understand the signs of the times. As it would be impossible, within the limits of one season, to consider all that is embraced in the study of the questions, it has been deemed expedient, as indicated by the published list of topics, for us to confine ourselves at this time to that phase of the subject having particular reference to the principles and methods of social and industrial reform." As we proceed with our discussions and investigations, I suspect we shall abandon as inadequate many of the popular remedies prescribed for social diseases. Under this head, for reasons the enumeration of which time forbids me to touch in detail, should be placed all that class of methods for the correction of industrial abuses known as socialistic, such as stated socialism, colonization, coöperation productive or distributive, profit sharing, the control of rent, interest, profits and the like, by legislative enactments. All these are but attempts to reach the social millennium at a single bound instead of awaiting the slow but natural process of social evolution. Here, also, should be placed that erroneous notion that industrial improvement is to be sought in the pulling down of the existing order of the state, that is to say, in political change. While it is true that efficiency of all devises of men, to regulate the movements of society, depends upon their being in harmony with the progressive demands of that society at every stage, we must not forget that it is only through material prosperity that political and social well-being is to come. Poverty and liberty cannot exist side by side, hence all efforts to secure temporal prosperity by changing political conditions are unsound and visionary.

This is also true of the idea that intemperance can be eradicted by any form of law. For the last twenty-five years, at least, earnest persons have been endeavoring to crush this evil mainly through prohibitory legislation. Successfully? I fear not. For are we not to-day more that ever deploring the alarming growth of the power and influence of the saloon and whisky interest, not only as factors in our local affairs but in state and national as well? By fighting the saloon, you may succeed in diminishing public exhibitions of drunkenness, but you are contributing comparatively nothing to the diminution of the drinking habit. My own experience, during the past eight years as criminal magistrate in this town, confirms the soundness of this conclusion. "Men do not drink rum because saloons abound, but saloons abound because men drink rum." Drunkenness is a disease of the social organism that originates in the same unwholesome sanitary conditions that breed physical epidemics and pestilences, that is to say, in the atmosphere that poverty and ignorance makes possible; consequently, when we are dealing with drunkenness we are dealing with an economical condition. As confirming this position, I quote from a recent public utterance of Chauncey M. Depew; he says, "I stood last summer in the streets of London and saw pouring out of the brilliantly lighted gin mills that are there, a crowd of dirty, wretched people who made your heart sore to look at them. There were father, mother, son and daughter all staggering in union. They were beastly drunk. A stranger touched me on the shoulder and said, 'Sir, I see you are an American. These results come from appetite. They come from these open hells, but not alone from these hells. They come from the fact that the wretchedness of these people is hopeless. There are no other conditions for them or their children higher, better or more comfortable than they now have." The conclusion, to my mind, is inevitable, that no permanent cure can be hoped for, of this most pressing evil of the present time by any method that does not primarily aim to broaden and elevate the character of the people.

But you say, "If not by these methods where are we to look for a remedy for the present maladjustments of the social organism?" I would suggest, as being in harmony with our proposed line of study, this answer; "The enlarging of the social opportunities of the masses." A century ago the principle business of the world was war; today the great struggle is for industrial supremacy. All the interests of our little community are centered in this contest. How shall it endure except it be by the superior knowledge, skill and intelligence of its working people? In this connection, are not these words of Justus Liebig emminently true? "The nation most quickly promoting the intellectual development of its industrial population must advance as surely as the nation neglecting it must retrograde." The thought then comes at once, that the first step for us to take toward the enlarging of "social opportunities must be in the direction of a higher education, having in mind, always, Herbert Spencer's definition, that "Education consists in fitting persons for right living."

Work in this direction has already begun to occupy more and more the attention of thoughtful and sympathetic men and women, and as we in Ware come to realize the important fact that the true health of this community depends upon the wise ordering of local affairs infinitely more than upon a brilliant national administration, the importance of inaugurating here some means for the clear and intelligent presentation of social and economic questions to the minds of the working people will become forcibly apparent. There is no valid excuse why work of this kind may not be successfully carried on by the united efforts of the members of this club. It is by band work alone that significance is given to individual acting. The greatest hindrances we shall have to encounter will be, not so much from the opposition or indifference to those we seek to benefit but more from that optimistic torpidity within ourselves that is almost akin to criminal neglect. Are we willing to do what we can? Let us carefully consider these words of one whose life was spent in self forgetting efforts to uplift humanity:—"Languor can only be conquered by enthusiasm, and enthusiasm can only be kindled by two things, an ideal that takes the imagination by storm and a definite, intelligent plan for carrying that ideal into practice."

Nigh Unto Thanksgiving.

The chill November days have come
With weather strips and grates;
The careful housewife bustles 'round,
The boys look up their skates;
And on the tables in our homes,
The buckwheat's sun-burnt cheek
Reflects the joy the youthful hearts
May know that cannot speak.

The Ague and the "Rheumatiz"
Are playing side by side,
And in the open fire-place
Crackles the Anthracite.
The dead dry leaves go rushing by,
The doctor smiles again,
And thinks of colds and cramps and coughs
Which come in winter's train.

The farmer looks his apples o'er
And puts the prices higher;
The flies just give their legs a shake,
And nestle near the fire,
The rabbits sniff the "coming man"
And leaves his wonted haunts,
The bicyclist puts by his steed
And dons his larger pants.

Upon the fences far and near
We read our inward chill,
"For all Malarial Disease
Use Sniffer's Duplex Pill;"
The plumber dreams of sudden frost,
And twills his massive chain;
The gouty man proclaims a storm,
His feet proclaim a rain.

The schoolboy, with the calendar,
Sits counting up the days,
To see what time Thanksgiving comes,
And then goes out and plays;
The prudent housewife counts again
The cost of sealskin sacque;
Her husband takes his fall coat down,
And has her pad the back.

With cider juice from ruddy fruit
The press is running o'er,
The gentle grocer doctors up
The lot he has in store.
The coal man adds an extra "half,"
"As the supply is short,"
And far and near, with wondrous ills,
This wondrous month is fraught.

But never mind, we've still enough
And good things now abound,
So let's be thankful every day
Till Thanksgiving comes round.

THE EARLIEST THANKSGIVING.

It is true that the thanksgiving which we celebrate at the end of every harvest has a smack of classical flavor, and is a festival that recalls the religious rites of ancient ages and nations. Three thousand years ago witnessed the Jewish Feast of Tabernacles, with its magnificent rituals, melodious choirs, and picturesque festivities. The festival was one of the most important of the many held by the Hebrews. It occured annually, at the end of the harvest, when the whole of the chief fruits of the ground, the wheat, and the oil was gathered in, and continued eight days, from the fifteenth to the twenty-second of the month Tisri, which corresponded nearly with our month of October.

During the feast of in-gathering, the nation assembled in Jerusalem and its environs. No work was done, the people feasted, and sent portions to the indigent, and made great mirth. Seven days they lived in booths or huts formed of the branches of the olive, pine, myrtle, and palm, and decorated with fruits and flowers. According to Rabbinical tradition, each Israelite used to tie the branches into a bunch to be carried in his hand, to which the name of lulab was given. In the Mishna there are many directions given for the construction and dimensions of the booths. They were to stand by themselves, and were not to be lower than ten palms, nor higher than twenty cubits. On the last day of the feast they were dismantled, and the people again took up their abode in their houses.

Each day had its ceremonies. August and impressive were the pomps and pageants. The booths and the lulabs must have made a gay and striking spectacle by day, and the lamps, the flambeaux, the music, and the joyous gatherings in the court of the temple must have given a more festive character to the night.

There were magnificent processions, Hosannas were sung, while lulabs waved, and the silver trumpets led the stately march of choruses in the grandest oratorios the world has ever heard. The psalms of thanksgiving were sung, and the altars groaned under costly sacrifices. The sheepfolds of Manasseh and Judah were ravaged for rams, lambs, and goats, and the bullocks of Bashan and the pigeons of Sharon were offered by the score. Besides these public sacrifices, there were private peace-offerings made. Every household had its worship, its sacrifice, and its banquet, in addition to the grand public pageants.

Though all the annual Hebrew festivals were seasons of rejoicing, the feast of Tabernacles was, in this respect, distinguished above them all. It was the harvest feast, and thanksgiving seemed most appropriate at this season. The labors of the year were over, and men could enjoy the relaxation that the festival afforded, now that their crops had been gathered. The pomps and splendid rituals of the festivity were the outcome of a spirit prone to worship to and over-fond of barbaric gorgeousness; but these did not detract from the great gladnesss that especially honored this day.

The glory of the great Hebrew festival has long since passed away, though it is still partially observed by the Jews in all lands. Disraeli, in "Rancred," gives a glowing description of its modern observance by the dispersed congregations of Israel. The spirit of the festival, however, has entered into the harvest observances of most Christian lands.—Demorest's for November.

TRIBUTE TO WOMAN.

True, she cannot sharpen a pencil, and, outside of commercial circles, she can't tie a package to make it look like anything save a crooked cross section of chaos; but land of miracles! see what she can do with a pin! She cannot walk so many miles around a billiard table with nothing to eat, and nothing (to speak of) to drink, but she can walk the floor all night with a fretful baby. She can ride five hundred miles without going into the smoking car to rest (and get away from the children). She can enjoy an evening visit without smoking half a dozen cigars. She can endure the distraction of a houseful of children all day, while her husband sends them all to bed before he has been home an hour. A boy with a sister is fortunate, a fellow with a cousin is to be envied, a young man with a sweetheart is happy, and a man with a good wife is thrice blessed more than they all.—Bob Burdette.

CHARMING FOR CHARMERS.

Simplicity is never vulgar; lavishness usually is.

Whatever men may be to themselves, they like gentleness, modesty and purity, in act and thought in women.

One of the canons of good society is, briefly, "Do not contradict." Difference of opinion is of no cause of offence, but downright contradiction of a violation of true etiquette.

It is a great mistake to set up your own standard of right and wrong, and judge people accordingly; "live and let live."

Every woman who to-day goes out into the world with a truth, who has not herself become possessed of that truth, had better stay at home.

The young women who marry men to reform them, find that it is a life work, with very little to comfort them, unless it be the fact that it is unending.

Do not expect too much of common humanity; but remember where others fail, we might have made a double failure.

If you do not want to make yourself disagreeable—in short, if you do not wish to to be a bore—never interrupt. To cut a person short in the middle of his or her story is unpardonable.

Never be withheld from entertaining from the mistaken idea that you must follow the example of richer friends and neighbors, even it be far beyond your means and inclination.

Sisters can make a heaven of their homes if they only knew it. Put on your brightest bows and most becoming dresses, sing your best songs, and tell your best stories for the brothers and the loved ones at home.

No trait of character is more valuable in a woman than the possession of a sweet temper. Home can never be made happy without it. It is like the flowers that spring up in our pathway, reviving and cheering us.

A loud girl may attract attention and have ha'f an hour of popularity, but she is a type of shortsightedness of some of her sex. Men of the baser sort may amuse themselves with her, but no man worth having would think of marrying her.

Push is a characteristic worth having, but should be reserved until one is out of a crowd. A woman pushing and elbowing about, endangering men's ribs, and children's heads, is anything but a pleasant picture of lovely woman.

There is a liberty that makes us slaves, and the girls who take liberties with modesty of speech and manner, and who cross over the boundry into masculine territory, are not more free but more enslaved than before. And the approbation of men, which is the end in view, is lost by the means taken to gain it.

Try, when you have a story to tell, not to go into tedious details and branch off at any word; be direct, compact and clear, and reach the point as soon as you can. Do not indulge in the habit of continually talking on one subject, but select as topics of conversation matters in which people are generally interested.

Entertain according to your circumstances, but gracefully and cordially, thus following the example of one of the most admired society women of New York, whose narrow purse permitted but the most frugal table, and who, therefore, offered at her weekly lunches the two accomplishments of her cook; good coffee and bread and the delicious fish hash, in the making of which she excelled.—Ann Sawyer in Good Housekeeping.

CANDIED ROSE LEAVES COME HIGH.

"Have you candied rose leaves, you know?" asked a young man about town of the pretty girl in a fashionable candy store.

"Yes, sir; how much would you like?"

"One pound, aw—in a nice box, you know."

"Oh, certainly, sir. We put them up in French bon bon boxes. Here it is, sir, $4, please."

"What? Four dollars for one pound of candy? Impossible."

The young man was frightened into speaking good English. The pretty girl smiled.

"The candy is only $3 a pound. The bon bon box is $1—that makes four."

"I—I—don't think I'll take it. You can give me a pound box of mixed candies at the regular price, if you don't mind."

"There are plenty of young men who do buy them," said the girl. "Some take sweet violets, some like the candied rose leaves, and others prefer pinks done in sugar."

"What is the object of eating candied flowers?"

"To perfume the breath. All young society ladies carry perfumed sweets with them to the theatei and to parties, everywhere they go, indeed."—Detroit Free Press.

RIVERS FROZEN IN JULY.

"Talk about sudden cold snaps," said Pete Smith, last evening, "what we are now having is nothing to what I have seen up in the mountains. Why, one July, about eight years ago, I was up at Independence Lake on a fishing trip. One day when it was so hot that all the matches I had in my pocket took fire spontaneously and the gravel stones hissed when water splashed on them, the wind suddenly whirled about and came from the north. A trout had just made a spring out of the water after a fly, and before it got down the lake was frozen solid. I walked out on the ice and picked it up. It was as stiff as a railroad spike. Of course there are tolerably sudden days here, but they are nothing to what we sometimes see up in the mountains."

"Ah," she said, with tender sadness, as they strolled along beneath the trees on K street, "nothing but leaves." "Yes," he replied, "and somebody autumn make arrangements to take them away." "I was not speaking of chestnut trees," she said, softly, "though summer around here." "I will go winter the house," he painfully murmured, and with a backward spring, he left her struggling with the problem whether life is worth living or not.—Washington Post.

Young man, it is most proper to let the lady precede you, going down stairs, especially if she is a Chicago lady. She might step on you.—New Orleans Picayune.

Thanksgiving Day.

The corn is in the barn, and the fruit is in the bin,
And the workers are away;
The world is cold without, but the fire is bright within,
For 'tis Thanksgiving Day.

The children's glowing cheeks are like apples round and red;
In their eyes mirth has its way;
In vain the elders shake the wise, reproving head—
It is Thanksgiving Day.

The mother smiles with pride on the tall son at her side,
Watching his babies at their play;
A daughter, lily fair, sings a good old meeting air,
For 'tis Thanksgiving Day.

Around the table, spread with wondrous meats and bread,
Long time the revelers stay;
The nuts and games come last, while the old folk read the past,
For 'tis Thanksgiving Day.

Now in the Holy Book they all together look,
And the grandsire kneels to pray;
Then most, when on the air falters that trembling prayer,
It is Thanksgiving Day.

AMONG THE PARAGAPHERS.

EXPERIMENT TEACHES.

"Sue," said Tom, "did you hear this?"
(Could it be he meant to trick her?)
"The concussion of a kiss
Always make the gas-flame flicker."

Then experiments they tried
In the interest of science,
And their lips as she complied,
Soon had formed a close alliance.

After trials two or three,
Happy as a man in liquor,
"See it flicker, Sue!" said he;
Quoth the maiden, "Let it flicker."

Littell's Living Age.

IN 1889 THE LIVING AGE enters upon its forty-sixth year. Approved in the outset by Judge Story, Chancellor Kent, President Adams, historians Sparks, Prescott, Ticknor, Bancroft, and many others, it has met with constant commendation and success.

A WEEKLY MAGAZINE,

it gives more than three and a quarter thousand double-column octavo pages of reading matter yearly. It presents in an inexpensive form, considering its great amount of matter, with freshness, owing to its weekly issue, and with a completeness nowhere else attempted,

The best Essays, Reviews, Criticisms, Tales,
Sketches of Travel and Discovery, Poetry,
Scientific, Biographical, Historical and Political Information, from the entire body of Foreign Periodical Literature, and from the pens of the

FOREMOST LIVING WRITERS.

The ablest and most cultivated intellects, in every department of Literature, Science, Politics, and Art, find expression in the Periodical Literature of Europe, and especially of Great Britain.

THE LIVING AGE, forming four large volumes a year, furnishes, from the great and generally inaccessible mass of this literature, the only compilation that, while within the reach of all, is satisfactory in the completeness with which it embraces whatever is of immediate interest, or of solid, permanent value.

It is therefore indispensable to every one who wishes to keep pace with the events or intellectual progress of the time, or to cultivate in himself or his family general intelligence and literary taste.

OPINIONS.

"No man who understands the worth and value of this sterling publication would think of doing without it. Nowhere else can be found such a comprehensive and perfect view of the best literature and thought of our times."—Christian at Work, New York.

"It is one of those few publications, weekly or monthly, which seem indispensable. There is nothing noteworthy in science, art, literature, biography, philosophy, or religion that cannot be found in it. It contains all the good literature of the time. Such a publication exhausts our superlatives."—The Churchman, New York.

"Replete with all the treasures of the best current thought, the best fiction, and the best poetry of the day. It stands unrivalled."—The Presbyterian, Philadelphia.

"It maintains its leading position in spite of the multitude of aspirants for public favor."—New York Observer.

"Biography, fiction, science, criticism, history, poetry, travels, whatever men are interested in, all are found here."—The Watchman, Boston.

"By the careful and judicious work put into the editing of THE LIVING AGE, it is made possible for the busy man to know something of what is going on with ever increasing activity in the world of letters. Without such help he is lost."—Episcopal Recorder, Philadelphia.

"In it we find the best productions of the best writers upon all subjects ready to our hand."—Philadelphia Inquirer.

"The readers miss very little that is important in the perodical domain."—Boston Journal.

"It may be truthfully and cordially said that it never offers a dry or valueless page."—New York Tribune.

"It is edited with great skill and care, and its weekly appearance gives it certain advantages over its monthly rivals."—Albany Argus.

"It furnishas a complete compilation of an indispensable literature."—Chicago Evening Journal.

"For the amount of reading matter contained the subscription is extremely low."—Christian Advocate, Nashville.

"In this weekly magazine the reader finds all that is worth knowing in the realm of current literature."—Canada Presbyterian, Toronto.

"It is indispensable to all who would keep abreast of our manifold progress. It is absolutely without a rival."—Montreal Gazette.

Published weekly at $8.00 a year, free of postage.

☞To new subscribers for the year 1889, remitting before January 1st, the numbers of 1888 issued after the receipt of their subscriptions, will be sent gratis.

CLUB-PRICES FOR THE BEST HOME AND FOREIGN LITERATURE.

"Possessed of THE LIVING AGE and one or other of our vivacious American monthlies, a subscriber will find himself in command of the whole situation."—Philadelphia Evening Bulletin.

For $10.50, THE LIVING AGE and any one of the $4 monthlies (or Harper's Weekly or Bazar) will be sent for a year, postpaid; or, for $9 50, THE LIVING AGE and the St. Nicholas or Scribner's Magazine. Address, LITTLE & CO., Boston.

HARPER'S BAZAR.

ILLUSTRATED.

HARPER'S BAZAR will continue to maintain its reputation as an unequalled family journal. Its art illustrations are of the highest order, its literature is of the choicest kind, and its Fashion and Household departments of the most practical and economical character. It pattern-sheet supplements and fashion-plates alone will save its readers ten times the cost of subscrition, and its articles on decorative art, social etiquette, house-keeping, cookery, etc., make it indispensible to every household. Its bright, short stories, and timely essys, are among the best published; and not a line is admitted to its columns that could offend the most fastidious taste. Among the attractions of the new volume will be serial stories by Mrs. Francis Hodgson Burnett, Mrs. Alexander, William Black, and Thomas Hardy, and a series of papers on nursery management by Mrs. Christine Terhune Herrick.

HARPER'S PERIODICALS PER YEAR.

A Mother's Love.

Some day,
When others braid your thick brown hair
And drape your form in silk and lace,
When others shall call you "dear" and "fair,"
And hold your hands and kiss your face,
You'll not forget that far above
All others is a mother's love.

Some day,
'Mong strangers in far distant lands,
In your new home beyond the sea,
When at your lips are baby hands
And children playing at your knee—
O then, as at your side they grow,
How I have loved you you will know.

Some day,
When you must feel love's heavy loss,
You will remember other years
When I, too, bent beneath the cross,
And mixed my memory with my tears;
In such dark hours be not afraid;
Within their shadow I have prayed.

Some day,
Your daughter's voice, or smile, or eyes
My face will suddenly recall;
Then you will smile in sweet surprise,
And your soul into mine will call
In that dear unforgotten prayer
Which we at evening used to share.

Some day,
A flower, a song, a word, may be
A link between us strong and sweet;
Ah, then, dear child, remember me,
And let your heart to "mother" beat;
My love is with you everywhere—
You cannot go beyond my prayer.

HELEN OF TROY.

Helen of Troy bent over a long table in the city of her nativity and ironed, ironed, ironed, hour after hour, all day long, silently pushing aside with red and swoolen hands the polished white cuffs which found their way to every part of the civilized world.

For the modern Helen was a "Troy Laundry Girl."

Had you told her that the work done by her hands was actually sent not only to every part of her own land, but to Europe and the islands of the sea, she would have stared dully at you without in the least comprehending the scope of her work.

For in the curriculum of the school in which her education had been shaped, the only geography known was that of the streets.

The whole world outside of Troy was labelled and set aside as "Unexplored Territory."

The thoroughfare on which stood the tenement in which she was born, was of that order common to our older cities in which the proportions had long since been lost between the number of inhabitants, human, canine, and feline, and the visible supply of clothing and food—as had that also between the Christian graces, and the degradation and filth.

Duke's Alley was, in point of fact, the "Five Points" of thrifty, Christian, modern Troy.

Helen was a child of the alley. Twenty years before our story opens she had been born the child of a thief, the first offspring of a marriage with a feeble minded girl, as poor and degraded as herself.

Not a parentage calculated to endow its children with shining virtues by any known laws of heredity.

For ten years she had fought and scratched and sworn her way through life in Duke's Alley, and "held her own with the best of them," which interpreted by the outer world would have read, "the worst of them."

In the 10 years, almost as many little brothers and sisters had successively come, wailed out for a shorter or longer period their feeble protest against the hard conditions of their environment, and gone the silent way.

Only one had survived the struggle; Rhoda, four years younger than Helen.

The neighbors had been known to say, "It's lucky Bill's folk's young 'uns dies off, for I don't know how they'd ever raise 'em, 'n' they wouldn't be good for nothin' if they did raise 'em."

"Bill's folks" were not held in high esteem even in Duke's Alley.

"Don't let any on 'em lick ye, Nell! Let 'em know ye're as good as any on 'em," had been the parental counsel.

Bill's idea of "goodness" was not, perhaps, that held by his Christian and philanthropic fellow citizens in the broader and less crowded streets near by.

To Bill its metes and bounds were, grit—muscle.

In the society of the alley, "I'm as good a man as he," freely translated would have been. "He can't lick me."

Helen's leanings toward "goodness" had been developed solely on this line.

Untaught, defiant, stupid, the one tender spot in her heart was her love for Rhoda.

"Lay a hand on Rhody, 'n' I'll scratch yer eyes out," was an edict frequently issued against her companions of the alley, and they knew that safety lay in obedience.

An epidemic swept over the city, and Duke's Alley was decimated.

When the health officers invaded Bill's domicle and carried out its stricken inmates, kind Mistress Murphy next door took Nell and Rhoda into her own room behind the saloon to stay until their parents' return.

But an adversary "better" than Bill had at last tested strength with him, and he was forced to yield.

What could be expected of Bill's wife but that she should do now what she had unquestionably done through all her wedded life, follow Bill.

So they never came back to the tenement in Duke's Alley.

Mistress Murphy told the orphans their parents were dead.

To Nell's dull intellect it meant little beyond a cessation of kicks and blows. She had not yet grappled with the problem of the food and clothing supply.

Mistress Murphy solved it for her.

"It's here ye'll stay and ye'll help me in the saloon for the bit of a bite and a sup ye'll nade; and as for Rhody, why, what'll kape one 'll kape two."

"But I'm thinkin' what I'll do wid her at all to kape her out o' the way, for it's no earthly use she is for the work, and she'll be in the way in the saloon."

"It's thinkin' I am I'll jist sind her around to the public school to kape her out o' the way."

School for Rhody!

Nell seized upon the idea greedily, as something which in a dim, mysterious manner was to differentiate Rhoda from the denizens of the alley and give her a place among the children she had seen outside; the children whom in her envy she had jeered at as "big bugs."

She, Nell, was to continue, unquestioningly, a part of the life of the alley; but Rhoda was to take her place in the world outside.

The heart of poor depraved Nell swelled, not with envy, but with pride.

Three years more passed. In school Rhoda easily outranked the children of her age.

Absorbing unconsciously something of respectability, the saloon with its brawling men and women, the saloon, which was to Nell the incarnate idea of life and pleasure, became to Rhoda intolerable.

"I hate it, Nell; the drinking and the fighting! I wish we didn't live here."

The words sank deep into Nell's heart, though she could not sympathize with the feeling which prompted them.

Day by day she pondered. She settled her plan doggedly before she ventured to unfold it to Mistress Murphy.

"I'm goin' into a laundry to work. Me an' Rhody is going to take a room and live. You're good to us, but it's the drinkin' an' the cussin' an' all, Rhody can't stand."

Now Mistress Murphy's theory that "what 'll kape one 'll kape two," while plausible enough as a theory, had failed in the testing. She had not only consented to Nell's plan; she helped her with such disabled furniture as she could spare.

And now for seven years Helen of Troy had been the bread winner.

It had been no light struggle, but somehow it had been done, and Rhoda had never known that the dinner-box Nell carried daily to the laundry was often carried empty.

"Rhody is goin' to graduate next week; I'm havin' her a lovely new dress made, 'n she'll look as good as any on 'em," said Helen to the girl who worked next to her in the laundry.

"Yes; an' ye'll drop down dead in yer tracks before the day, if ye don't stop. It's worked to the bone ye are now wid sindin' Rhody to school! She's no better to come into the laundry an' earn her livin' 'n ye are."

The old spirit of "Lay a hand on Rhody 'n I'll scratch yer eyes out," flashed from the eyes of Helen. It was only for a moment; the years had taught her to conquer.

"Rhody's goin' to be a teacher. The Board has promised her a place soon as she graduates. She won't never have no such struggle as I've had. I'm goin' to take it a little easier, too, when she gits so she can take care of herself."

"Yes," muttered Bridget, "if ye're alive. It's many's the day I've seen ye iron all day wid an empty stomach. I'll warrant Rhody didn't study widout a bit of somethin'."

"Rhody didn't know, Bridget. I would not want she should."

Commencement day it was whispered that the girl who led her class was Bill's daughter; that by hard study she had worked herself up from the life of the slums.

But what mention of Helen? "Any more of Bill's family living?" inquired a guest.

"Yes, one. She's only a laundry girl. Can't read nor write. I should hope, if I were Rhoda, she would not find it convenient to be present to day."

It had not "been convenient." With fevered face and glassy eyes she lay on her poor bed at home.

"I guess I fainted or somethin', to-day, Rhody. It was hot ironin' and I was so tired."

She never went back to the laundry. Three months later, when Rhody was fairly installed as public school teacher. Helen of Troy, Nell of the alley, folded her tired hands, no longer red and swollen, and went to rest—a humble, unknown life went out. With patient toil she had lifted a human life to a higher plane. "They also serve who only stand and wait." Who shall estimate her work? "Only a laundry girl," but her influence may be felt through the ages.—Olive Green in New York Observer.

A MINE THAT CAN'T BE WORKED.

The ground on which Philadelphia is built is one of the richest gold fields in the world. This is a fact. The only difficulty is that the field cannot be worked. Nearly the whole city is underlaid with clay to the depth of about ten feet—an area say ten miles square. A cubic foot of clay, weighing 120 pounds, taken from a depth of 14 feet when the cellar of the Twelfth-street market house was excavated, was practically demonstrated to contain seventeen-tenths of a grain of gold, or one pound in 1,224,000. The experiment was repeated with about the same results with clay taken from a brickyard in the suburbs. Supposing the whole mass of clay to be 4,180,000,000 pounds (and it is really much greater), the amount of gold would reach in value the enormous sum of $126,000,000. The gravel is much richer in gold than the clay, but there is not so much of it. Undoubtedly $200,000,000 worth of gold lies within 15 feet of the surface that cannot be used.—Philadelphia Times.

A Brilliant Success. "Just try to frighten me, will you?" said B—— to M——." "What for?" "I have got the hiccough, and if you frighten me it will make it go away at once." "Very well, then; here goes, (shouting at the top of his voice), Lend me 500 francs!" "Ah! thanks, it is gone!"—Figaro.

CALIFORNIA NOTES.

ANDERSON, SHASTA CO., COL.,
November 20th, 1888.

I wonder how many of the readers of the PALMER JOURNAL ever saw old Mount Shasta. I can see it now by raising my head, towering above all else, a very monarch; its head white with snow, glistening in the sunshine; a picture worth seeing, truely. I used to read of it before I came to California, but one cannot half realize by reading how beautiful it is. It lies directly north of our town, and all along toward the south, as far as the eye can see, are mountains, the largest of which is Lassen Butte. The snow has disappeared from this, the past summer, and many fear it means an eruption, as it has once been a volcano, I believe. It would be a beautiful sight, if no danger were feared from it, but there are many homes in the foot hills, and it would be sure destruction to them.

It would seem strange to New England friends, to sit, on a hot summer day, with the mercury 100 in the shade, with snow in plain view, yet we do that every summer. It makes us wish sometimes that the snow was no farther away than it looks to be. It is about nine miles, while it looks to be six or eight. Still we do not feel the 110° as much as you do 90°, it is such a different atmosphere here, clear and dry, while you have such sultry heat that it is a great deal more oppressive. One never hear of a sunstroke here, Our nights are always cool, and it rests one so much that the heat of the day can be endured better.

Our little town is in a basin in the Sacramento valley, Sierra Nevadas on the East, the Coast Range on the West, and these meeting 20 miles north of us, place us in a complete circle, protecting us from high winds and severe storms, while from the south we get the invigorating breezes from San Francisco Bay. On the east, a half a mile away, flows the beautiful Sacramento river, where plenty of fish both large and small are caught daily. I have seen a sturgeon weighing over 300 pounds pulled out. Our woods are full of all kinds of wild game, from quail to deer and bear. Of our fruit I will tell you some time in the near future; it would take too long this time. There are many things here to interest one who has never visited this far-off land, and I will try and tell you of some of them, and perhaps something more interesting, next time. C. E. T.

SCHOOL-CHILDREN'S ENGLISH.

A Western newspaper recently took its turn in the unhealthy fashion of the day, at stimulating school-children to write stories for a prize. The poor little creatures made the editors a deal of amusement, and the paper afterward printed about a column of gems from the rejected manuscripts, and here are a few:—

"Cora Brown was fortunately the possessor of a birthday, for she was the daughter of rich friends."

"But all this time a cloud was gathering over Mrs. Delaney, which grew large as the years went by, and that cloud was full of grasshoppers."

"But they knew they had something in their hearts better than a Christmas tree. They had Jesus in their hearts and they had only a few potatoes and some salt."

"The Jews celebrate Christmas in the summer."

"She forgot the Lord and all his blessings, and after that she went and got married."

"I will remark to satisfy the reader that these years were spent amid the sorrows and sunshiny joys by which everybody's childhood is interspersed."

"My father desired me to marry a bank president, a handsome, reckless man, fond of naught save the gambling table."

In the year 1779 Mrs. R—— was given a sewing-machine."

"Vat I dell you, vat I dell you?" shouted the Irishman."

"As she entered the room a cold, damp smell met her sight."

"Do you think, little reader, that Jesus hung up his stocking Christmas eve to be filled by Santa Claus? If you do, you are much mistaken. And why did he not? One reason was that he had none. And why had he none? Because he was born in the torrid zone, where stockings are never used, nor are they to this day."

"Lelia, without a moment's hesitation or cowardly contemplation, proceeded to turn a graceful somersault on the long-suffering lounge. [Age of Lelia 19 years.]

HIS CURIOSITY SASITFIED.

Small man (writing letter to his wife)—It would afford you some amusement, my dear, if you could see the freckle-faced, long, lean, gamble-shanked, knock-kneed, sneaking, impertinent, ill-bred, half-baked specimen of a backwoods gawky that is looking over my shoulder as I write this,—

Large man on seat behind (fiercely)—You lie, you little scoun—

Small man (turning around)—Beg pardon, sir, are you speaking to me?

Large man (confusedly)—Y-no! No! I didn't say anything. I wasn't speaking, I—I—

Small man resumes his writing. The large man goes back to the rear platform of the last car on the train and relieves his mind by swearing volubly at the flying landscape.—Chicago Tribune.

Mr. Isaacstein—"Abraham, mine son, vat makes you look so flustered?" "A feller shoost shot at me mit a pistol." "Holy Isaac! Und did he vound you!" "No, mine fader: der pullet stroock mine vatch." "Oh, Abraham, Abraham! Und I bet a haluf a tol'ar it shpoiled dot elegant sdem vinding, hoonting gase vatch!"—Lincoln Journal.

"Can you tell me what the 'golden rule' is?" asked the Sunday school teacher. "Yessm," promptly replied the jeweller's offspring, "It's 24 grains make 1 pennyweight, 20 pennyweights 1 ounce, 12 ounces 1 pound."—Jeweller's Weekly.

Meat For Babies.

Stuff the school children; fill up the heads of them;
Send them all lesson-full home to the beds of them;
Blackboard and exercise, problem and question,
Bother their young brains and spoil their digestion.
Stuff them with 'ologies, all they can smatter at;
Fill them with 'ometries, all they can batter at;
Crowd them with 'onmies, all they can chatter at;
When they are through with the labor and show of it,
What do they care for it, what do they know of it?

Feed them and cram them with all sorts of knowledges;
Rush them and push them through high schools and colleges;
Keep the hot kettle on, boiling and frothing;
Marks count for everything, death counts for nothing;
Rush them and push them while they've the will for it;
Knowledge is great, though you may kill for it;
Pile on the taxes to pay you the bill for it;
Urge them and press them to higher ambitions;
Heed not their minds' or their bodies' conditions.

Stick to the system you long have been cherishing,
Careless of those who are fading and perishing;
Strong meat for babies! is the age's last motto;
Drop the weak souls who can't learn as they ought to;
Feed them and fill them, no end to the worrying;
Push them and press them, no stop to the hurrying;
Parents at home will attend to the burying;
Strong meat for babies! is the motto of progress,
Knowledge a fiend is, ambition an ogress.

INVENTOR OF ROLLER-SKATES.

There is an interesting history as to the invention of roller-skates, says the St. Louis Globe. In Richmond, Ind., lived Micajah Henley, a poor young man who sawed wood for a livelihood, but who was energetic and always looking around for a chance to trade and barter and make an honest dollar. Another poor man of the town invented a roller-skate which was crude in construction and not a success. Young Henley fortunately possessed an inventive genius, and he saw in a twinkling that the skate could be improved upon, or rather, that it was merely an idea to work out to a full and complete invention. He purchased the right for a trifle, and set to work to perfect the invention. When he had worked out the idea and demonstrated that he had made a successful invention, he found he had no money to procure a patent on his improved model, which was entirely different from the patent right he had purchased. Henley tried to interest several moneyed men in the invention and get them to establish a manufactory, as he was confident of making a fortune out of it, but he was answered with laughter. His invention was looked upon as a foolish thing—a trifle too small for a digniged capitalist to become associated with, but Henley, with a wonderful will and a firm confidence that a fortune lay ahead of him. managed to scrape together a few hundred dollars and then began the manufacture of roller-skates in an old barn. As the profits were immense—from 200 to 500 per cent—he soon increased his trade and capital many fold. The craze started over the entire country, and orders poured in upon him so fast that in a few months he had no trouble in securing financial backing from the very men who had formerly laughed at his invention as foolish. He erected an immense brick building, than which no one commercial building of that state has more square feet of roofing, and established the greatest roller-skate manufactory in the world. He prospered, and but two years after he had been sawing wood for a living was worth $250,000, and owned one of the most costly and beautiful residences in the little town in which he lived. His phenomenal success inspired others to enter the business, and, American-like, there was an over-rush. No less than 27 roller-skate manufactories went up in the city and it became the great center of the trade. But when the craze died they petered out with it. Henley's manufactory is the only one remaining, and it is now principally devoted to the manufacture of patent wire fencing and other inventions.

THE PARADOXES OF SCIENCE.

The water which drowns us, a fluent stream, can be walked upon as ice. The bullet, which, when fired from a musket, carries death, will be harmless if ground to dust before being fired. The crystallized part of the oil of roses, so graceful in its fragrance—a solid at ordinary temperatures, though readily volatile—is a compound substance, containing exactly the the same elements, and in exactly the same proportions, as the gas with which we light our streets. The tea which we daily drink, with benefit and pleasure, produces palpitations, nervous tremblings, and even paralysis, if taken in excess; yet the peculiar organic agent called theine, to which tea owes its qualities, may be taken by itself (as theine) not as tea, without any appreciable effect.

The water which will allay our burning thirst augments it when congealed into snow; so that it is stated by explorers of the Arctic regions, that the natives "prefer enduring the utmost extremity of thirst rather then attempt to remove it by eating snow." Yet if the snow be melted it becomes drinkable water. Nevertheless, although, if melted before entering the mouth it assuages thirst like other water, when melted in the mouth it has the opposite effect. To render this paradox more striking, we have only to remember that ice, which melts more slowly in the mouth, is very efficient in allaying thirst.—Blackwood's Magazine.

Dullard—"Can a man get damages when he is kicked out of a house?" Brightly—"I guess so, I did." Dullard—"How much did it amount to?" Brightly—"Well, I had a busted pair of pants, a battered hat, a lame spine, doctor's bill, and a few other trifles I don't recall. Oh, you can get damages enough if you are only kicked enough."—Lowell Citizen.

Mrs. Hashcroft—"I think I'll make some mottoes to hang up in the boarders' rooms, Mr. Billings. Can't you suggest something?" Billings—"'Turn the rascals out' wouldn't be bad."—Terre Haute Express.

THE HOUSEHOLD.

DESSERT RICE.

One cup of rice, half cup of currants cooked with a cup of diluted warm water and milk. Eaten with egg sauce.

EGG SAUCE.

Beat the white of one egg till stiff, then add the yolk, and beat well; one cup of sugar, with a teaspoon of lemon or vanilla, then add half a cup of cream or rich milk.

QUICK PUDDING.

Three eggs, one small cup of flour, four tablespoonfuls of milk, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder; steam in small cups for twenty-five minutes; this quantity will make five.

SAUCE FOR PUDDING.

One cup of sweet milk, one egg, two tablespoonfuls of sugar, one spoonful each of butter and corn starch; let all boil a few minutes, being careful to keep from burning; flavor with lemon.

POTATO BUNS.

Boil four good-sized potatoes, mash and sift through a sieve; add 1½ pints of flour, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one pint of cream or milk; form in small cakes and bake in a greased tin.

GINGER SNAPS.

Three tablespoonfuls of melted lard, three of boiling water, one teaspoonful each of salt, soda, and ginger, put in a pint cup and fill up with molasses, stir in flour to make dough, roll and bake quickly.

SPONGE PUDDING.

One egg, one cup of sugar, a small piece of butter, one-half cup of water or sweet milk, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, and flour enough to make a good batter. Bake in a long tin pan in a quick oven.

STEWED VEAL.

Lay a knuckle of veal in a saucepan with two blades of mace, an onion, a small whole pepper, and some salt, with two quarts of water; cover it close, and let it simmer for two hours.

OATMEAL COOKIES.

One cup of sugar, two eggs, one cup of flour, one cup of cold boiled oatmeal, one teaspoon of soda, two teaspoons of cream tartar, one tablespoon of butter; roll thin, and bake in a quick oven.

APPLE DUMPLING.

One quart of flour, one tablespoonful of lard, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder wet with milk, roll out an inch thick, and place on it eight apples, sliced thin; put in pudding bag, and boil one hour.

GINGERBREAD.

One cup of molasses, one teaspoonful of salt, one cup of sour milk, one heaping teaspoonful of soda, one-half cup of beef drippings or lard, one heaping tablespoonful ginger, and flour to thicken.

DOUGHNUTS.

One cup sugar, one cup of sweet milk, two tablespoonfuls each of butter and lard, three eggs, three teaspoonfuls of baking powder, flour enough to roll wet. Cut into shape, and fry in boiling lard.

PASTE FOR PIES.

Mix one quart of loose flour with two heaping teaspoons of baking powder; rub in half a pound of butter, wet it with cold water; work as little as possible after the water is in; roll it out. Use less shortening if you choose.

ORANGE PUDDING.

Put in a baking dish three sweet oranges peeled and sliced; pour over one cup of sugar; one pint of milk, yolks of three eggs, one tablespoon of corn-starch boiled until thick. Whip the whites, pour over the top, and set in the oven to stiffen.

SOUR MILK BISCUITS.

One quart of flour, two cups of sour milk, two level teaspoonfuls of soda and two large tablespoonful of lard. Mix with the hand as bread dough, only not so stiff. Roll out about an inch thick, cut, and bake in a moderate oven.

RYE GEMS.

Three cups of rye meal, two cups of flour, 2¼ cups of sweet milk, one large tablespoonful of sugar, one teaspoonful of salt, one egg, one teaspoonful of cream of tartar, and one-half teaspoonful of soda. Have your gem pans very hot and well greased, and bake twenty minutes.

BEEF PIE.

Line a dish with a rich crust. Put in a layer of cold beef cut up fine, then one of onions, one of potatoes, then another layer of meat. Season with pepper and salt. Dredge with a little flour. Put on water enough to make a gravy, then a top crust. Bake one hour.

FRUIT CAKE.

One cup brown sugar, half-cup butter; beat together one cup sweet milk, half cup molasses, two eggs, three cups flour, one teaspoonful each of allspice and ground cloves, one tablespoonful of cinnamon, half a nutmeg, one pound of raisins, one cup currants (rub them in flour before using), two tablespoonfuls of cream tartar, one of soda.

SLICED APPLE PIE.

Line pie pan or plate with crust, sprinkle with sugar, fill with tart apples, sliced very thin;—sprinkle sugar and a very little cinnamon over them, and add a few small bits of butter and a tablespoonful of water, dredge in flour, cover with the top crust, and bake about three-quarters of an hour; allow four or five tablespoonfuls of sugar to one pie.

GINGER CAKE.

One cup of brown sugar, one cup of cold water one-half cup of butter, one cup of molasses, one heaping teaspoonful of soda, one quart of sifted flour, one heaping teaspoonful of ginger. A little salt must be added unless salt butter is used. Bake well in a quick oven. By steaming two hours this recipe will answer for a pudding. Serve with sweet sauce.

BEAN SOUP WITHOUT MEAT.

Parboil one pint of beans, drain off the water, and add fresh, and let boil until tender, season with salt and pepper, add a piece of butter the size of a walnut, or more if preferred; when done skim out half the beans, leaving the broth and the remaining half of the beans, now add a teacup of cream or rich milk, a dozen or more crackers broken up; let it boil up and serve.

The Journal.
FRIDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 30, 1888.

Congress will meet next Monday.

Parsons, the Northampton slave dealer who recently kept a young Polander chained to a wagon seat, thinly clad, for over two hours with the mercury only 18° above, has been held in $2000 bonds for the grand jury, and unfortunately secured bail.

I. V. Williamson of Philadelphia distinguishes himself nobly among his fellowmen by the princely gift of $12,000,000 for the establishing of an industrial school near that city, where boys rich and poor, white or black, may learn the old-fashioned trades.

Barnum has retired from the circus business. Barnum is in the circus business on a 50-years' contract, "dead or alive." Such are the two reports spread abroad during the past week, and between them the shrewd old veteran has managed to get enough advertising to last him well into the winter.

Mr. Powderly has been reëlected grand master workman of the Knights of Labor, and the adoption of all the measures proposed by him makes him practically dictator of that organization. If the Knights will now stand by their chief they may accomplish more in improving the condition of the workingmen than they have done yet.

The Massachusetts Senate will have to elect a new clerk this winter, as E. H. Clapp, the present incumbent, is going into business in Philadelphia. B. L. Beal, legislative reporter of the Boston Journal, is a prominent candidate for the position, though Assistant Coolidge hopes his youth will not be a bar to his promotion.

Our government last year coined over 33,000,000 silver dollars, and succeeded in getting 39,000 of them into circulation, or about one in a thousand. The rest of them joined the other millions in the vaults of the treasury, where the millions more to be coined will follow. Could anything be more ridiculous? We hope the next Congress will have backbone enough to stop this senseless work, but are by no means confident of it.

It is almost time for another census of the United States, and yet the report of the last one, in 1880, is only just completed, the twenty-first volume having been issued within a few days. Such an elaborate work has never before been undertaken in any country, and probably will not be again here for some time. The entire work comprises 19,304 pages, and has cost about $5,871,456, but the delay in publishing it has greatly diminished its value.

The weather bureau is sadly out of joint. It entirely failed to give warning of last Sunday's violent storm along the coast, as it did of the blizzard last March, and it is this sort of weather, if any, that seafaring men want to know about. What is needed in the bureau is less militarism and more meterological knowledge. A man may be an excellent soldier, but that no more qualifies him to foretell the weather than would a knowledge of the Chinese language.

"If there is any honesty in politics the Republican party is pledged to use discrimination in removals from office, as well as in appointments thereto, and to use both primarily for the public welfare rather than for supposed party advancement." So says the Indianapolis Journal, which is supposed to reflect the views of Gen. Harrison, and it no doubt expresses the conviction of the president-elect. The politicians who are anxious for a clean sweep will need a good many admonitions of this kind to keep them within bounds.

South Carolina, with a population of some 1,300,000, cast a total vote of only 80,000, practically all Democratic, in the recent election. Twelve years ago the total vote was 183,000, of which 92,000 were Republican ballots, but it has decreased steadily since that time. The Democrats have clearly made the negroes feel that it is safer for them to stay at home on election day than to vote the Republican ticket. This, of course, has been done simply by reasoning with them, for it is next to high treason now-a-days to intimate that there is anything like dictation in Southern politics; but figures like the above speak louder than words.

Rev. "Sam" Small, the fiery Georgian preacher, aroused quite a tempest at a temperance gathering in New York the other day by pronouncing the Prohibition party a failure. He said in part:

> I don't believe in national Prohibition politics. Hereafter I am going to have something practical about my principles, about my vote and about what I do. Principle is worth more to me than all the parties that ever tramped the globe. The liquor dealers don't care for party. They elect the man that will favor their cause, of whatever party they may be. I don't believe in letting the devil's crowd get ahead of me on a proposition of common sense. We Prophibitionists have held the balance of power in fifty-two Congressional districts, and we might have used our power to have men put into office favorable to prohibition. But the Prohibition party has constantly run independent tickets, instead of joining with some other party, and as a consequence we have no representation. We have also held the balance of power in several of the states but we have lost our opportunity because we have placed party above principle. When we begin to do something the newspapers will be talking about it, the politicians will be hustling on the account of it, and we will be getting some victories. Nationally, I think all the flower, roseate ideas of having a Prohibition president, and our marching up to the White House and drinking his health in pure cold water, will not be realized for a long time.

A More surprised set of tramps was never seen, we venture to say, than the fellows who carried things with such a high hand at Indian Orchard a couple of weeks ago, when they were set free by the police court on a technicality, including even one who had pleaded guilty. Judge Wells evidently had a bad attack of mental dyspepsia that day, and the tramps appeared to him like angels in disguise. His course can hardly be accounted for on any other hypothesis. The Republican voiced the indignation of the community over the matter vigorously and justly, among other things saying:

> If in any case justice fails to be done, because either of flaws in the law or failure in evidence, it should be manifest that the judge's aim has been justice. If he shows himself regardless of the moral aspects of a grave case, if he is manifestly unconcerned whether rascals go free, if he exhibits an almost boastful indifference to the righteous sentiment of the community—he shows himself unfit for the place. No man—whatever his other merits may be; though he may be intelligent, honest and a "good fellow"—no man who in his judicial capacity shows a reckless and divil-may-care temper is fit for the judge's seat.

PALMER AND VICINITY.

The schools will resume duties Monday.

A. E. Fitch has been appointed a justice of the peace.

A civil term will be held at the district court to-morrow.

A few sleighs were out Monday, but the snow did not last long.

The Thorndike Company has its new grist mill at Forest Lake nearly completed.

The school committee has appointed Miss Mina Ball teacher of the school at Forest Lake.

Miss Cora E. Brown has resigned her position as teacher in the Blanchardville school.

Raffles have been numerous of late, and many Thanksgiving turkeys were secured in that way.

The Palmer Wire Manufacturing Company were shut down Monday for repairs upon the boiler.

The car scales in the yard of the New London Northern Railroad have been repaired this week.

The Mission Circle of the Second Congregational church netted about $40 by its recent entertainment.

The annual meeting of the Eastern Hampden Agricultural Society will be held at the Weeks House next Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

About thirty couples attended the dance at Nassowanno House hall last Friday night, and greatly enjoyed the evening's programme.

The annual meeting of the Eastern Hampden Agricultural Society will be held at the Weeks House, next Monday afternoon, at 2 o'clock.

Good Cheer Lodge, Daughters of Rebekah, will hold a sociable at the residence of Mrs. G. B. Kenerson on Park street next Thursday evening.

The gravel train, which has been at work filling in the yard of the New London Northern Railroad, was taken off this week, the job having been completed.

D. B. Holden's agency has disposed of a 60-acre tract of land, owned by J. S. Loomis, to John Chalk, formerly an employe of the Palmer Carpet Company.

The work of constructing the North Main street sewer is nearly completed, and the selectmen consider it the best job of the kind that the town has ever had done.

An authoritative person states that as near as he can estimate there are over 100 unlicensed dogs in town, and the majority of these are owned by mill operatives at Thorndike.

The Theodore Thomas concert occurs at Springfield to-morrow evening and quite a number from this place have secured seats and will attend. Good seats can be secured by leaving orders at this office to-morrow.

George E. Wood of Monson, who sued the town of Palmer for injuries which he claims to have sustained while walking near the bridge on Commercial street last February, has been paid $550 by the selectmen.

There was no session of the dancing school at the Week's House hall this afternoon, it having been omitted so as to accommodate those who spent Thanksgiving out of town, and would not return in time to attend.

A milk car attached to a freight train on the Boston & Albany road was disabled at Warren last Saturday evening. The wrecking train at Springfield was dispatched and arrived there about 9 o'clock and soon had the tracks clear.

There was a largely-attended social of the Baptist church at the residance of C. B. Fiske last Friday evening, at which the people surprised their faithful pastor, Rev. A. W. Weeks, with a gift of over $60 in cash and other useful articles.

George W. Ely has bought D. F. Holden's insurance business and removed to the latter's office in Clark & Hastings's block. Mr. Holden will give his attention to his official duties more closely, and continue his real estate business for a time.

A large number attended the match game of pool at the Brunswick Billiard Parlors last Saturday evening, between William Smith of Springfield and John Dawson of this place, the wager being $50, which was secured by Smith. The games were well contested, and at the finish the score stood 11 to 10.

The cry of "murder" which was heard about 11.30 o'clock last Friday night near the Converse House, awakened quite a number of the villagers and caused a sensation for a time, but an investigation revealed the fact that some one was tormenting a drunken man, who took that means of obtaining assistance.

The arrangements for the much-agitated leap year ball will be perfected next week, and the event promises to surpass anything of the kind ever attempted in town. Miss Gould, the dancing mistress, will probably be engaged to prompt, and the committee in charge of the matter is now trying to find a female orchestra.

The selectmen are authority for the statement that since May 1, of the current year, about 75 sheep have been killed in this town by dogs, Charles F. Smith, residing in the north part of the place, being one of the heaviest losers. The total valuation of the sheep is estimated at nearly $400, and this amount will have to be paid by the county.

Rev. J. Temple of South Framingham, who is at present engaged in writing the history of Palmer, recently attended a meeting of the committee and stated that the work was progressing rapidly, he having already reached the point of the revolutionary war. Those who have heard the manuscript read pronounce it very catching and instructive.

A serious affray, between two men employed by the W. N. Flynt Granite Company, occurred near the Boston & Albany Railroad bridge on Main street last Friday evening. The names of the participants are unknown, but the officers believe they can identify them if seen about here again. No weapons were used by either of the principals, yet both were badly cut and bruised.

The "Wigwam" held its first meeting for debate at the high school room Monday evening, with a good attendance. Howard Willis was chosen temporary chairman and an interesting debate took place on the subject: "Is a lie ever justifiable?" The leaders were N. W. Chandler for the negative and J. J. Farrell for the affirmative, the weight of the argument being with the negative side. The next subject for debate will be: "Is foreign immigration for the best interests of this country?"

The officials of the Boston & Albany Railroad Company have notified the selectmen that the work of constructing a new concrete walk from the Main street bridge over their tracks to the office of the Flynt Building and Construction Company will be commenced as soon as possible, and as the telegraph and electric light poles are obstacles, the selectmen have ordered them removed and relocated, and as soon as that is done no doubt the railroad company will begin the work of building the proposed walk, which will be set with a good quality of curbing stone.

Levi Cleveland, living at South Belchertown, was struck by the express freight and instantly killed while walking on the New London Northern Railroad in the vicinity of Old Barretts early yesterday morning. His body was in a terribly mutilated condition, and beside it was found a bottle, indicating that the unfortunate man was in a state of intoxication when he met his death. The body was viewed by Medical Examiner A. A. Miner of Ware, succeeding which it was removed to South Belchertown. The deceased was about thirty years of age and unmarried.

Business at the district court has been rather quiet this week, and few cases have been brought up for trial. Samuel Stevens and L. G. Cushman of Monson had hearings Monday, charged with illegal liquor selling. They furnished sureties for appearance Dec. 8. The liquor seized at Cushman's Hotel, Monson, was ordered forfeited. John Doherty of Monson and Richard Sweeney of Ansonia, Ct., were arraigned for drunkenness Tuesday, the former being discharged by paying $3 and costs, while the latter found his pocket-book insufficient to meet the court's demands, and was obliged to go to the county jail for thirty days.

Probate Court.

Probate court was held at Palmer Wednesday and the following business transacted: Administration was granted on the estates of— Eleanor S. Aldrich, late of Monson, Charles F. Aldrich administrator; George O. Church, late of Springfield, Mary A. Church administratrix. Wills were probated of— Oren Shaw, late of Monson, Julia Shaw executrix; Frederick G. Cooley, late of Springfield, Charles E. Cooley executor. Guardians were appointed of— Minors: Emma G. Fairfield of Springfield, George W. Fairfield guardian; Edith C. Hayden of Springfield, Georgianna L. Hayden guardian; Anna B. Kyle of Chester, Mary J. Kyle guardian. Accounts were rendered in the estates of— Eliza W. Smith, late of Springfield; David K. Paine, late of Ludlow; Leroy De Tyler, late of Springfield. Elizabeth W. Robbins, widow of Isaac H. Robbins, late of Monson, was assigned a homestead and a dower from the estate.

Crops Harvested at the State Primary School the Past Year.

The close of the harvesting season at the state primary school is an event always welcomed by those who have the care of the agricultural interests, for it is an important factor in the management of this institution. The farm connected with this school cannot be excelled in this section for growing all kinds of vegetables, for the land is at present in a high state of cultivation, the soil naturally being very rich and productive. The crops harvested in the fall make an enormous aggregate, when under shelter, yet there are so many little ones to feed that the supply is usually insufficient for the year. One unacquainted with the workings of the establishment cannot accurately estimate the great daily consumption by the 300 and upward of children placed in the state's care. While the children are out of school they are kept at work upon the large farm, which contains 230 acres of land, divided into mowing, tillage and pasturage. The amount of farm produce harvested this year is as follows: Early apples, 636 bushels; winter apples, 200 bushels; asparagus, 12 bushels; beans, 25 bushels; beets, 161 bushels; cabbage, 2800 head; carrots, 1000 bushels; celery, 950 bunches; cucumbers, 32 bushels; currants, 116 quarts; ensilage, 125 tons; hay, 150 tons; Indian corn, 200 bushels; lettuce, 77 bushels; mangolds, 2000 bushels; oats, 150 bushels; onions, 218 bushels, potatoes, 1154 bushels; parsnips, 80 bushels; quinces, 15 bushels; radishes, 100 bunches; rutabagas, 200 bushels; rhubarb, 40 bushels; rowen, 30 tons; rye, 40 bushels; strawberries, 634 quarts; raspberries, 18 quarts; spinach, 26 bushels; squash, 2526 pounds; sweet corn, 128 bushels; tomatoes, 89 bushels; turnips, 2000 bushels; watermelons, 1300 pounds. Providing this produce was converted into money it would bring the state over $16,000, that is to say, everything raised on the farm the past year. The live-stock consists of 58 cows that gave 124,813 quarts of milk during the year, an average of about 351 quarts daily, and this enormous quantity allows each inmate nearly a quart of milk a day. There are also among the live-stock four yoke of steers, one yoke of oxen, seven horses, 37 swine and a large number of young cattle. The institution at present contains the large family of 330 inmates, and of this number 234 are boys, 77 girls and 19 women. An annual appropriation of $4000 is made by the legislature and allowed the institution for boarding out a portion of the children, while the State Board of Lunacy and Charity, which has inmates there, appropriates $14,000 for a like purpose. A system of normal training for the children is advocated, and the chances are that one will be adopted ere long. The hospital is being repaired, improved and enlarged at quite an expenditure. The sanitary condition of the institution is excellent, for which much credit is due Superintendent Andrew, who was appointed by Governor Robinson. An inventory recently taken by J. B. Shaw and Enos Calkins placed the property at $207,536.

Personal.

Milton Holdsworth spent yesterday in town.

Miss Hattie Plumley spent Thanksgiving at Enfield.

Charles E. Fish and family, visited relatives at South Hadley Falls Thanksgiving day.

Charles H. Breckenridge, wife and child of Fitchburg, are visiting Mrs. E. W. Breckenridge.

A. R. Cook of Lenox has accepted a position as clerk in the Central street grocery store.

John Litchfield and wife of Southbridge were registered at the Converse House, Friday afternoon.

Miss Cora Norris of Southbridge spent Saturday and Sunday as the guest of Miss Hattie Plumley.

Mrs. M. B. Carpenter and son of Warren were the guests of F. N. Carpenter and wife yesterday.

The annual meeting of the Young Men's Library Association will be held at the reading room Monday evening.

Mrs. A. P. DeWitt of Brattleboro, Vt., has been the guest of Mr. and Mrs. C. P. Stone at the Converse House his week.

Harry Hodgkins, of Moody's school at Northfield, has been spending the week with his parents at the Converse House.

Representative Bottum of Northampton, candidate for speaker of the Massachusetts House of Representatives, was in town Tuesday afternoon.

E. E. Hart, wife and two daughters of Easthampton, and Frank B. Pope and family of Somerville, were the guests of John S. Holden this week.

Miss Addie L. Rogers is spending Thanksgiving with friends in Boston. She succeeds Miss Ingraham as teacher of the intermediate school in this village the coming term.

BRIMFIELD.

Both Fiskdale and Brimfield are short of district school teachers.

Edward Bliss intends to remain at his home in Brimfield until spring.

The Village Improvement Society was not heard from the past week.

Mr. and Mrs. N. S. Hubbard will spend the winter in Washington with their daughter, Mrs. Orms.

Rev. E. E. Wheeler, of Hartford Theological Seminary, preached at the First church last Sabbath.

The high school scholars were granted a Thanksgiving recess until Tuesday. Mr. Pratt visits his former home, Meriden, Ct., and Mr. Cole is at his home in Seakonk.

W. Johnson Brown has a contract to draw to the mill three million feet of timber near Norwich, Ct. George Stebbins, Frank Locke and George Sibley will assist him.

Ernest Hayden, Brookfield's merchant tailor, visited "East Corner" last week with an assortment of patterns. The boys improved the opportunity, and several of them appeared with new Thanksgiving suits.

A town meeting was held Saturday to see if the town would take measures to provide for the custody and proper care of its insane poor at the almshouse. There was a small attendance, and the subject was referred to a committee, to examine and report at an adjourned meeting Dec. 10.

Wednesday was the fifteenth anniversary of the marriage of Amos Munroe and his wife, Betsey (Gifford) Munroe. Although Mrs. Munroe has been quite feeble for some months, she is now so much more comfortable that about 75 of their relatives, friends and neighbors called upon them on the evening of that day and presented Mr. Munroe with a gold-mounted cane, and his wife a nice reclining chair, also a purse of $25 in gold and other tokens of their friendship and esteem. The presentation was made by Rev. W. K. Pierce, S. W. Brown responding for Mr. and Mrs. Munroe. Refreshments of cake, tea, coffee, ice cream, tropical and other fruits were furnished by the genial hosts.

THORNDIKE.

James Loftus shows a handsome stock of Christmas goods.

The stores in the village are already putting on their holiday attire.

Edward McKelligett will soon build a new house on his land near Gay avenue.

The proposed walking match has been postponed until about the middle of January.

The Thorndike Orchestra is ready for engagements, and is getting a good share of the work.

Hamlin's Wizard Oil Concert Co. will commence a week's engagement at Union Hall next Monday evening.

The "Country Girl," a drama in five acts, will be presented by the Young People's Dramatic Club New Year's eve.

W. F. Fillmore has gone to Three Rivers to work, being yard boss at the Palmer Mill. Levi Wheaton succeeds him here.

The parties who have been at Union Hall the past two weeks selling goods at auction, departed for West Warren this week.

The skating season will open at Union Hall next Friday and Saturday, with fancy and trick skating. Good music will be in attendance.

Rosco Milliken, who has been boss dyer for the Thorndike Co., goes to Three Rivers as foreman of the dyeing and finishing departments of the Palmer Mill.

The work on the No. 2 Mill canal has been somewhat delayed for the present, on account of the recent snow storm, and the number of hands has been reduced.

Proprietor Clifford of Union Hall is corresponding with several good theater companies, and proposes to have some first-class troupes here the coming winter.

A. P. Adams is mentioned as a possible candidate for the office of postmaster. The location is good, and no doubt Mr. Adams would make a good man for the position.

There seems to be no doubt about the ability of the Emmet Club to draw good houses, as was shown by the attendance at Union Hall Wednesday evening, to witness the border drama "Nevada." Every seat was taken, and standing room was at a premium. Space will not admit of the individual mention of each actor, and it is enough to say that ample justice was done each part. A dance followed the drama, which was largely attended, many being present from the neighboring towns.

MONSON.

Dr. N. W. Rand is building an addition to his barn.

The stores closed at noon, and the mills shut down all day Thursday.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society met with Mrs. Gilbert White Monday evening.

The Flynt Granite Company have diminished part of their force of men owing to the severe weather.

It is expected that Mr. James H. Tufts of Yale University will occupy the pulpit of the Congregational church next Sunday morning.

The Young Ladies' Working Club will hold its annual "bakers' supper" in the Congregregational church parlors next Tuesday afternoon.

The storm last Sunday was the nearest to a blizzard ever experienced in this town and kept the attendance at churches down to small audiences.

There was a union service at the Congregational church Thursday morning. Addresses were made by Revs. Hatch and Emerson and Mr. J. H. Tufts.

There will be a meeting at the Gage district school house Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock, under the auspices of the Christian Endeavor society of the Methodist church.

There will be a special meeting of Marcus Keep Post, G. A. R., at their headquarters next Wednesday evening. Inspector Davis of Belchertown will be present and examine the post. All members are requested to be present.

John Orcutt, who went to KoKomo, Ind., with the intention of settling there four months ago, has returned, pretty thoroughly satisfied that Monson is a good place to live in. Mr. Orcutt reports the place as growing fast, and the natural gas wells have increased rapidly. He brought home five fine horses, one weighing 1400 pounds.

Twenty-fifth Anniversary.

A large number of the friends and neighbors of Mr. and Mrs. Joel Tucker called upon them last Friday evening to remind them of the 25th anniversary of their marriage. The presents were numerous and useful, among which was a ton of coal, French clock, hanging lamp and a purse of money. The evening was passed in an unusually happy manner and the guests broke up at an early hour, with many congratulations to the couple.

Personal.

Edward H. White of Springfield was at home Thursday.

Daniel Corkery has gone to Philadelphia on a business trip.

Miss Lottie Nichols of Stafford Springs, was in town this week.

Miss Carrie White spent Thanksgiving with a friend in Ludlow.

Robert Cushman of Amherst College spent this week at home.

F. E. Walker of North Brookfield was at home over Thanksgiving.

Edward Morris and a college chum spent Thanksgiving at his home.

John A. Orcutt, Jr., who went to Kokomo, Ind., with his father has returned.

Edwin Penniman, of the Worcester Technology School, was at home a few days this week.

Miss Julia Leary, formerly of the New England school of short-hand and typewriting, has accepted a position at the Boston store.

The Sale of Fay, Peck & Co's. Straw Shops.

The assigned straw works of Fay, Peck & Co. was sold at auction, by Geo. H. Newton, Thursday afternoon, to J. Zimmerman of New York city, for $3005 above the mortgage, which was $12,000, and was held by the purchaser. After the firm failed the property was apprized at $25,000, and the price it sold for is considered very low. There was several parties from New York and Boston present who wanted the property, but only one done any bidding, whose bid was $3000, and if he had secured the property would have sold it out in parts. The general feeling is that the works will be operated this winter by Hodges & Son, the former end of the New York branch of the old firm. The feeling among the help is a little more encouraging, and there now seems a good prospect of the shop starting, though it is probable that only C. L. Peck of the present firm will be retained in the business. And if the shop starts it will undoubtedly be monthly payments. It is earnestly hoped it may be started at once, as there are many of the former help who live in town and who are at present out of employment, which they greatly need.

Academy News.

The lecture by Rev. F. S. Hatch on "Switzerland" at the academy Friday evening was well attended. The lecture was illustrated by views of the beautiful mountain and glacier scenery, and some fine views of the Rhine and its vinyards and castles. The sociable after the lecture was a very enjoyable one.

The fall term of Monson Academy closed Wednesday after a very succesful term. The public examinations were not largely attended owing no doubt to the inclement weather. A large audience gathered, however, to hear the public rhetoricals Wednesday afternoon and enjoyed a rare treat. The recitation, "The Golden Side," by Miss Beebe, the declamation, "A Queer Sermon on a Queer Text," by Thayer, "The Railroad Crossing," by Fields, "Resistance to Oppression," by Shaw, and the recitation, "Little Christel," by Miss Anderson, were rendered in a masterly manner and were much enjoyed. The Philomathean Society that was organized this term by the young ladies has accomplished a great deal and unless the young men in the Linophillian look well to their work the young ladies will out do them. The winter term begins next Wednesday and is expected to be still more successful than the term that has just closed. Several more out of town students are expected, and an increased number from this place. The same force of teachers will remain, and in addition to this Prof. Dustan has secured the services of Prof. Hill, who will have charge of the penmanship department.

The St. Patrick's Church Fair.

The sacred concert held at the St. Patrick's church Sunday evening, was attended by only a small audience, on account of the stormy weather. The concert was carried out however, and was enjoyed by those present. The solos by Messrs. Handlin and Reilly were much enjoyed by the audience, and the duet by Miss Cantwell and Mr. Handlin was heartily encored. Miss Mary Feather received great applause in her rendition of "Just as I am." The Sumner Ladies Quartette sustained their reputation, and the pieces they rendered were probably the most enjoyed of any during the evening, and Misses Cantwell and Coleman won deserved applause in their duet.

The fair began at Central Hall under rather discouraging circumstances, the weather keeping a good many away. The Hall presented a handsome appearance with its decorations and beautiful tables. The tables are in charge of the following: Choir, Misses Kate Cantwell and Jennie Driscoll; Sodality, Misses Nellie Crowley, Minnie Dalton, Mary Murphy, and Maria Shea; Sunday-School, Misses Mary Parker, Josie Cantwell and Mary Stone; parish, Mrs. Michael O'Brien, Mrs. Doyle, Mrs. Cavanaugh, Misses Mary McDonald and Lizzie Jackson; refreshment, Mrs. Collins and Miss Hennessey.

The voting contests create great excitement, the contestants for the gold watch are Misses Annie Brennan and Josie Doyle. The contest for the vestments is close and great things are expected. Saturday night the voting ceases at 10 o'clock, and all the awards will be made at that time. The minstrel performance Monday evening was good, and the jokes were mostly local hits. Ritter's singing and dancing and Cantwell and Keefe's solo were the main features. On Tuesday evening, the concert was participated in by Mrs. J. W. Murphy, who sang "I am Waiting," Miss Mary Coleman, "Sailed," and Miss Alice Cantwell, "Gaily Chant the Summer Birds." Cantwell and Keefe again appeared in their specialties. Prof. Dustin in his banjo playing, singing and warbling, was greatly enjoyed. Wednesday evening there was a large crowd at the grand ball. Thursday evening the popular comic drama "The Irish Broom-maker," was presented by the St. Patrick's Dramatic Association. A turkey supper was served from 6 to 8 o'clock, by the parish. To-night the operetta "Gyp, Junior," will be presented by the Sunday-school children, and Prof. Amellott of Battery B. Band, of Worcester, will appear in his specialties. To-morrow evening the prizes will be awarded.

WARE AND VICINITY.

The Unitarian society cleared $140 at their late prismette.

The Ware boys and girls in college were home to Thanksgiving.

Vigeant and Hoyt are putting up two houses on Eddy street.

The high school closed Wednesday noon for the remainder of the week.

There is an average attendance of over 40 at the reading room each evening.

The painters and decorators are at work on the interior of the East Congregational church.

On account of the severe storm no union meeting was held at the Town Hall last Sunday evening.

Charlie Lewis, formerly with H. A. Smith & Co., has gone into the dry and fancy goods business in Westfield.

The Hampshire House barge has been enclosed with glass, making it much more comfortable for cold weather.

There is a fine clock displayed in Bassett's window that is to be disposed of by ticket by the Y. T. A. L. drum corps.

Rev. C. E. St. John of Northampton will preach at the Unitarian church next Sunday, exchanging with the pastor.

The water commissioners are putting up a new building at the pumping station for the storage of tools, pipe and other supplies.

The firemen's ball was a success, being a large party, excellent music, and all happy, but not quite enough receipts to pay expenses.

The Irish World of Nov. 17, has a portrait of George R. Davis, a former Ware boy, as one of "the generals of the late campaign."

Henry A. Allen, for the past year manager of Trench's five and ten cent store, has resigned his position and is succeeded by William L. King.

Union services was held Thanksgiving day at the Methodist church with a sermon by Rev. E. Hitchcock. Subject, "The cause for Thanksgiving."

The stores are beginning to put on their holiday attire, and as business is good and most, if not all, who wish are employed, they will no doubt enjoy a good trade.

The search for Royal Smith, which was undertaken by a party of volunteers on Thanksgiving day, was without any success, not a trace of him being discovered.

Rev. Selah Merrill will deliver his lecture as the third of the Ware lecture course next Tuesday evening. The subject is, "The Holy City of To-day and To-morrow."

Mrs. Isaac Dawson died Wednesday, Nov. 20, aged 69 years. She leaves two daughters, Mrs. John Lashua and Mrs. Belle Merriam, to mourn the loss of a good mother.

E. H. Gilbert's paper read before the Wednesday Evening Club this week, entitled "History of the Town of Ware, and Character of the People," will be published next week.

The Central Mass. Railroad, commencing next Monday, will make a radical change in their time table. The train that leaves Northampton at 4.35 for Boston, and the train leaving Boston at 5.25 for Northampton will be discontinued.

The Haverly's version of Uncle Tom's Cabin is to be played at the Town Hall next Thursday evening. It is surprising what large houses this old play always draws, and this is said to be one of ths best companies on the road that are playing it.

On Sunday evening next Rev. Mr. Duffield of the Episcopal church will begin a series of four sermons on the book of the Revelation of St. John. The general topic of the sermons is the second coming of Christ, and will therefore be appropriate to the advent season, which begins on Sunday and continues until Christmas.

J. B. Green's tinshop was entered by burglars Tuesday night, they breaking the lock to gain entrance to the office, but nothing of value was taken. The entrance to the shop was made by a back window, under which was found in the morning a fine pocket photograph album, containing pictures probably of the fellow's best girls, who are well known. Mr. Green says he will give a turkey to the owner of the album if he will call for it.

Prof. Churchill gave a reading in the Ware lecture course Monday evening, which was greatly enjoyed by a large audience. The program included "Simpsons Bar," by Bret Harte: Mrs. Stone's old time stories; "How the parson laughed out in prayer time;" "A strange duel," Victor Hugo; Mark Twain's "Address on the weather;" "Father Phil's Subscription"; "Frenchman's first experience in New York;" and "Strike at the Forge."

The Young Men's Catholic Union gave a fine entertainment at the Town Hall Thanksgiving evening, with the following programme:—

The Hampshire Gazette published this week an item in reference to a disturbance in the grammer school, in which there are but very few grains of truth. The teacher, after enduring insult and insubordination in school and insult on the streets, did punish a boy perhaps severely, but no one who knows him would say too much so. This school is the one that before this teacher came, claimed to be boss of any teacher who was placed over it, some teachers holding the position for a few days, and one only for a day. The boy's parents gave directions to punish him if he would not mind, and are reported as satisfied. The committee sustain the teacher in her action, as they should do or give up the school and let the young rebels rule.

New England weather as described by Mark Twain interfered with the attendance at the concert at the Town Hall under the management of Miss Richardson Tuesday evening, but the audience made up in enthusiasm what it lacked in point of numbers. It is of course difficult to so arrange a concert programme as to provide for a high order of music and at the same time meet the popular taste. The approval of the audience on this occasion, however, indicated that Ware can appreciate good music. If entertainments of this class were thoroughly patronized, we might expect a programme which would contain the text of the vocal selections, at least so far as they were in our native tongue—this would supply a felt want, as there are but few, comparatively, who can hope to fully attain the art of enunciating the words of their selections so as to be fully understood and appreciated. This was Mr. Babcock's second appearance in Ware, and it is not too much to say that he surprised even those who heard him many times, by the rapid strides he has made in his art. This was especially marked in the rendering of Schumann's "Three Grenadiers," where the crescendos and dimuendos were surprisingly well done, all the more remarkable considering the nature of a voice of so much breadth and volume; if on the contrary there was something to be desired in the rendering of some of the rapid and tortuous passages of Handel's "Why do the Nations," which was otherwise grandly done, it should be ascribed to the nature of a voice more perfectly fitted for slower movements. It is needless to say that Mr. Babcock was heartily encored, and will always be a favorite here. The harpist, Mr. Schuecker, fully developed the capacity and exquisitness of his instrument in a a number of choice selections, winning ready encores. The soprano, Miss Ida Marshall of Boston, came almost unheralded and was especially successful in Masseuet's "Air de Salome," which was delightful to those musically disposed, and resulted in her recall. This young lady, already a trained vocalist, will undoubtedly occupy a still higher field. Miss Lawton's immediate friends must have been pleased by her warm reception. Her voice, under the watchful care of her teacher, Miss Richardson, shows a decided advance in flexibility and power since her last appearance in concert. Mattia's "Patria," the selection given by her, fully displayed the capacity of her voice in this direction, and earned the encore received. Mrs. West, though seldom seen and heard in our community, filled the difficult position of accompanist on this occasion with precision and good taste. It is to be hoped that concerts of this order may become more frequent here.

SUNDAY'S STORM.

The snow storm which commenced about 10 o'clock Sunday forenoon was an unusually severe one for this season of the year. Although only five or six inches deep the snow was very heavy, and a strong wind drifted it off exposed spots and packed it hard in hollows and fence corners. The railroads in this section had a hard time of it, and few of the first trains Monday were run on time.

Along the coast the gale was exceptionally severe, and great damage was done, not only to property along the shore, but to vessels, many wrecks being reported. The steamer Allentown of Philadelphia went down off Cohasset with all on board, 18 in number, and the Boston fishing schooner, Edward Norton, was also lost, only one of the crew of 16 escaping. There were also many other wrecks, and the whole New England coast presents a sad record of damaged shipping, with a considerable loss of life, which would have been much greater but for the noble work of the life saving men at different points.

A FROST at Jacksonville last Sunday gave that stricken city cause for heartfelt thanksgiving, and there is now no further danger from yellow fever, though a few straggling cases have occurred since. The number of cases has been nearly 4700 in all, of which 408 were fatal.

JOTTINGS FROM THE HUB.

From our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, Nov. 28, 1888.

Death and destruction, strom and wreck, drowning men and shattered vessels is the story of this week from the wave-swept shores of eastern Massachusetts. The loss and the catastrophe have come very near to Boston, for the beaches in our immediate vicinity have been covered with the flotsam and jetsam of the sea. The storm was frightful in its violence and severe in its duration. Following the extreme cold of last week, it has been a fitting chapter in a year whose closing winter days saw the ever memorable blizzard and whose summer was so chill that fruits and vegetables have been only partly developed, and even our thanksgiving turkeys have failed to overcome their aspect of exposure to blue, pinching cold. The stories of loss of life and of the suffering of survivors are terrible. The surf upon the beaches has been tremendous, rising even to the summer houses and making deep inroads into the solid earth itself. Even here in the city the great amount of water has been the source of much vexation and discomfort. Cellars have been flooded so that fires have been extinguished. In some of the largest and finest buildings in the city which are devoted to business offices, such as the Mason building on Kilby street, the fires have been put out by the water in the basement so that the elevators could not be run and the tenants have been subjected to much discomfort. The railroad tracks which cross the Back Bay district have been deep under water. The Boston and Albany has been submerged for two days and the progress of the trains through the inland sea which covered the rails was more like that of a steamer than of a land vehicle. Switchmen provided with long rubber boots and covered with rubber garments, waded from switch to switch through water reaching nearly to their knees and it was evident that, like the policeman's in the "Pirates of Penzance," the switchman's lot is not always a happy one. But to-day the waters have subsided and the ocean is returning to its more peaceful mood; but what a Thanksgiving it will be for the friends of those who will never return again!

Boston is just now in the midst of its municipal campaign. The usual effort is being made by the Republicans to throw off the crowd which has had control in the city hall for several years. The candidate has been nominated as was nominated last year and year before, Mr. Thomas N. Hart. He is a man of much experince in city affairs, and this year has the support not only of the Republican convention, but also of such Democrats as ex-Mayor Gaston, and of such independents as Gen. Francis A. Walker, the president of the Institute of Technology. Then there are some Democratic politicians and some labor agitators who support him, and it looks more than ever as if the Democrats and Mayor O'Brien would have to get out their reserve vote to succeed. They have prestige in their side, for the Republicans have tried this move every year for four years, and still O'Brien has always been reëlected. There seems to be more opposition to him, however, this year than usual, and if it is ever to win, now is its chance.

The public school issue will bring out some voters besides the women, and that will be in favor of Hart. One cannot tell just what the Catholics are doing, for they are keeping very quiet and will doubtless bring out their last man at the polls. Registration for women has closed, and the figures are much below the figures for the assessment of women, showing that many of them do not understand the need of being assessed and then of registering afterward. The Republicans feel strong enough to elect Protestant candidates without any help from the Democrats for a union ticket, and have put up one of their own or which, however, there are some Catholics, so that if the Republican ticket is elected the school board, including the 13 members who hold over, will consist of 11 Catholics and 13 protestants. It is unfortunate, apparently, that the religious issue has been forced to the front as it has been, but the Protestants feel that it has been none of their doings, and that all they have done has been demanded by the good of the public school system. Dr. Duryea, who has resigned his pastorate of the Central church in order to accept a call to Omaha, undertook to defend himself in the committee meeting last night for his report in favor of substituting Anderson's history for Swinton's, but the accounts of what he said do not show that he made out much of a defense for himself. Doubtless there has been some intemperate talk by those who are devoted to the good of the public schools, but that will not check the present movement to keep the Catholic influence out of them.

A meeting of the Massachusetts Teachers' Association will be held in this city the day after Thanksgiving, and the most important paper to be presented will be by Secretary Dickinson of the state board of education upon the relation of the state to the church. He holds the ground that the right of the state is supreme over every other right within the civil sphere, and that the parent has no right, as against the state, to say what the education of the child shall be. He makes the right of the state supreme. This is directly contrary to the position of the Catholics, who hold that the right of the parent over the child is supreme, and that the state has no right to step in and say what the education of the child shall be. We are evidently at the begining of a fresh agitation of the rights of our great institutions with relation to each other, and the more the subject is discussed, the better informed will the public become. There is no danger that the cause of popular education will suffer a set back from being made familiar to the people.

Boston's literary light—the Atlantic Monthly—will continue another year with the same skilful hands of Thomas Bailey Aldrich to keep it trimmed and burning. Perhaps I should not say another year for it is hoped that his reign will be prolonged indefinitely. He makes of it the most distinctively literary magazine in America, and it still holds its high place easily among all competitors. Its list of contributers for 1889 is most promising. It includes Whittier, Holmes, Lowell, Parkman, Craddock, Higginson, Stedman, Crawford, Fiske, Hammerton, James, Scudder, Warner and many others who are well known to the public. It will have the usual variety of fiction and solid matter, prose and poetry, and promises to keep up to its ever high standard. One of the most valuable books which have been published this season by the house of Houghton, Mifflin & Co. is John Fiske's "The Critical Period of American History." The period he finds to be the years immediately following the Revolution, before the adoption of the federal constitution. Truly it was a time full of perils to the nation, and one cannot well understand our national history without being informed upon the forces which were then striving for mastery.

A Woman's Discovery.

"Another wonderful discovery has been made and that too by a lady in this country. Disease fastened its clutches upon her and for seven years she withstood its severest tests, but her vital organs were undermined and death seemed imminent. For three months she caughed incessantly and could not sleep. She bought of us a bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption and was so much relieved on taking first dose that she slept all night and with one bottle has been miraculously cured. Her name is Mrs. Luther Lutz." Thus writes W. C. Hamerick & Co., of Shelby, N. C.—Get a free trial bottle at LeGro & Lynde's Drug Store.

The Verdict Unanimous.

W. D. Sult, druggist, Bippus, Ind., testifies: "I can recommend Electric Bitters as the very best remedy. Every bottle sold has given relief in every case. One man took six bottles, and was cured of rheumatism of 10 years' standing." Abraham Hare, druggist, Bellville, Ohio, affirms: "The best selling medicine I have handled in my 20 years' experience, is Electric Bitters." Thousands of others have added their testimony, so that the verdict is unanimous that Electric Bitters do cure all diseases of the Liver, Kidneys or Blood. Only a half a dollar a bottle at LeGro and Lynde's Drug Store.

BOSTON WEEKLY JOURNAL.

AN IDEAL FAMILY NEWSPAPER.
ALL THE NEWS.

READING SUITED TO EVERY HOME FOR ONE DOLLAR A YEAR—THE BOSTON WEEKLY JOURNAL, WHICH HAS SO OFTEN VINDICATED ITS CLAIM OF BEING A DISTINCTIVELY NEW ENGLAND NEWSPEPER

Both as to representative position and popular estimate, gives assurance of retaining and enhancing, during the year which is at hand, those qualities for which the past has given vouchers.

Notwithstanding its increased merits, the price has been kept down to the low figure at which it was placed a few years ago—ONE DOLLAR a year, including postage—making the cost of the weekly issue, with its comprehensive resume of news, miscellany and comment, less than two cents a week.

CLUB RATES.

The inducements to those getting up clubs will continue to be of a very favorable character.

10 copies (and one extra to the originator of the club)........................................$10
20 copies (and two extra to the originator of the club)........................................ 20

ONE COPY FREE FOR EVERY TEN SUBSCRIBERS.

In view of these rates and the quality and quantity of reading matter provided, the subscribers may feel warranted in claiming that they have the

CHEAPEST NEW ENGLAND NEWSPAPER.

A journal fit to enter every home is provided, free from the sensational and meretricious matter which mars a good deal of what is regarded as the popular periodicals of the day, and yet, as a contemporary has testified, "foremost in fulness of cleanly news and in the sagacious and courteous expression of its general convictions."

The publishers take pleasure in announcing that "THE KENNEBECKER" Will contribute a series of articles, beginning with the first number in January, entitled,

"THE CRUISE OF THE WITCH OF THE SEA."
A Voyage to Oceanica and its Island Continent.

This will be one of the most interesting and instructive narratives of the experience of the well-known Kennebecker that has yet appeared.

BOTH THE GENERAL AND SPECIAL MATTERS OF INTEREST

To THE JOURNAL'S wide-spread constituency of readers will be supplied as heretofore, with industry and discrimination, including New England news and gleanings, notes and comments on the interests of the diverse industrial avocations, agricultural, manufacturing, commercial and transportation: reports on markets, trade and labor. Rambling talks and essays on home topics, correspondence from various parts of the world by our own correspondents, congressional news, political jottings, editorials on topics of living interest, poems, sketches, miscellaneous and household matters.

The always readable contributions of M. E. B., the Domesticana Articles, and the letters and sketches of others whose names have been welcome in the Weekly columns in the past, will continue to enliven them.

The year 1889 bids fair to be one of unique significance in the political life of the nation, marking, as it does, the return of the Republican party to power after a four years' interregnum of Democratic policy which has only served to highten by contrast the people's appreciation of what it has done in the past, and to emphasize the vital need of its future. The transition from the rule of the Fiftieth to that of the Fifty-first Congress, and from the Democratic Presidency to the Republican, with all that these imply, will make Washington a centre of constant and increasing interest during the year; and THE JOURNAL will therefore be fortunate in having in its Washington correspondent, "Webb," a contributor whose vigilant outlook for news and discerning the interpretation of current events are rarely rivalled.

Our special correspondents in Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont will contribute as heretofore their timely expositions of matters in New England.

The recent political campaign, like that of four years ago, has brought to the surface many doubtful and untrustworthy political guides, but the readers of THE JOURNAL can testify that they have found in it a consistent and unwavering exponent of Republicanism. THE JOURNAL will continue to be thoroughly American in its political principles and to maintain the policy of industrial as well as political independence; but while firm in the defense of the doctrines which have been accorded an added indorsement by the nation, it will be uniformly fair in its treatment of adversaries, and in the full and unbiased presentation of facts.

While giving due attention to the purport of occurrences at home, the foreign field, which promises to be of marked interest during the year 1889, will be comprehensively scanned and outlined; and, in particular, those still pending controversies which affect our relations with Canada and European powers will be the subject of close observation.

THE WEEKLY JOURNAL is issued every Thursday morning. Specimen copies will be sent to any address.

Your Attention, Once More, Gentlemen!

The Greatest Bargain Sale ever inaugurated of the very finest Overcoats, Ulsters, and Reefers. The most elegant goods that we ever manufactured. Shetland Overcoats, Crombie Elysian Overcoats, Chinchilla, Germania, Elysian, Foreign Kersey, Worsted, London Tan and Diagonal Overcoats, many lines are lined, body and sleeves, with satin, at prices which will create a sensation all over Western Massachusetts.

The facts are, we are overstocked with the highest grades of Overcoats, and we must offer extraordinary inducements, force our sales to the highest pitch, in short, do two months' business in one.

First, we shall sell 100 of the finest ALL WOOL INDIGO DYE ELYSIAN and CHINCHILLA OVERCOATS, lined throughout, body and sleeves, with finest quality of satin, cost $2 per yard, made with silk velvet collars, piped edges, deep facings and doubled stitched seams, at $18. A better coat we cannot produce. In every detail of manufacture they are as near perfection as we can make them. There's none better. These overcoats were made to sell for $30. Merchant tailors get $50 and $55 for them, made and trimmed in no way superior to this lot which we shall sell for $18.50. Look at them, gentlemen. If you do not pronounce them superb overcoats in every particular we shall be surprised. Sizes 30 to 44.

We predict a quicker sale for this lot of overcoats than any lot ever advertised. If they interest you, don't postpone the day of purchase. To-day we offer another lot of those celebrated at $12. No overcoat that you can buy for $16 will compare with them They are made with colored edges, deep facings, silk velvet collars lined with a heavy double warp, serge lining. On every sleeve is a ticket which reads, "Warranted Stitched All Wool and Indigo Blue." We warrant every coat. For every one that fades with one, two, three or five years' wear we will give another overcoat. And now we offer you the

All Wool Indigo Blue Chinchilla Overcoats

Famous Lawton Diagonals

at $12. Do you know what the Lawton Diagonals are? Have you seen them? If you have not, come at once or send for a sample. They are the best and finest overcoats we ever sold for $12. We have several lots of

The Finest Wide Wale Diagonal Overcoats

Worth and retailed usually for $25 and $28. They are silk faced, with fine broad binding, heavy double wash linings, sizes 33 to 44. A gentle man's coat in every particular. OUR PRICE $20. One of the most desirable bargains are those

Fine Bennington Beaver Overcoats,

Double stitched edges, heavy serge and lasting lining at $10, price always from $13.50 to $15. Our price of $10 will soon make sad havoc with the sizes. FINE DIAGONAL OVERCOATS made from best makes of Worsteds, with silk velvet collars, finely lined, with fine mohair bindings, would be cheap enough at $15 and $16 in youth's and men's sizes, we sell now at $10. $10 bargains we have offered before, but we never offered for $10 an overcoat that touch these. We have two or three large lots of

The Medium Priced Ulsters.

The one we want to call your attention to first, is a heavy Ulster or Driving Coat with plush collar and cuffs, a garment always retailed for $15. A most useful coat for expressmen and car drivers. We shall close them out at $10. One of the other lots is a heavy gray imitation Irish Frieze Ulster with heavy Cassimere linings, used to sell at $10, our price during this bargain sale will be $6. A most desirable garment.

Look at the display in our windows. In the elegant Schuables, Shetlands, Elysians, Whipcords, Fur Beavers. Whitneys. Chinchillas, Germania Overcoats, we offer a much larger stock, greater variety and styles than ever before. Some are fur trimmed, with Beaver collar and cuffs, some wool lined, some silk or satin lined, some silk faced, some double brested, some single, some extra long, some extra fat, some with and some without velvet collars. It is the most excellent line of overcoats we ever offered, and we are naming prices on them low enough for the closest buyers.

All that we have said about Men's and Young Men's Overcoats will apply with equal force to our boys' and children's. Here we have big lots and a great assortment of styles in Suits and Overcoats, and we are more than anxious to sell them all.

We have too many! Will our unprecedented low prices move them? Can we do two months' business in one?

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., November 30, 1888.

We are aiming at nothing else than to make our store a good one, a true one, a trusty one.

What we care most for is, that we may be judged, not by tradition, not by hearsay, not by a randam guess—by experience. We have mostly dropped the ancient traditions of trade; we do not recognize their binding force. We have n't dropped the Golden Rule. On the other hand we may have fonnd an almost new and profitable use for it. We are ambitious. We dream of setting up a better method of business, better than anybody's, better than anybody's thought. We dream of making this store a centre of trade reform, of Western New England-wide trade itself! We dream of drawing trade from all over it, as fast as people find it worth their while to come or send to us.

We recognize one means of drawing trade, and only one—the buyer's advantage. The means of advertising are infinite. Some are profitable; some are doubtful. Nothing short of seeking the buyer's advantage affords a requisite business for proper advertising.

FIRST PREMIUM SACQUE.—Selected real plush, real seal skin ornaments, rich quilted satin lining, chamois pockets, finished throughout in the best manner, $25.

There are two cuts of sacques. One with a seam in the back; and one without. The one with a seam is better. We have both.

We buy with a dozen others, and the advantages and experience of a dozen's buyings (it amounts to almost a million's worth of plush garments a year) are ours.

Do we sell for less, or not, then?

How much?—Five on $25; ten on $40; fifteen on $65—perhaps. All our garments are sold in about the same way.

Adam and Eve.

I always feel sad when I think of old Adam—
And that pitiful meanness which led him to say,
When caught stealing fruit in the Garden of Eden,
"Eve did it—she tempted—and showed me the way."

From the day that first Adam drew breath to the present,
The thought has been constantly hugged to our hearts
That we are all right—quite exceptional fellows,
When we're not led astray by some other man's arts.

From the days of first Adam then down to the present,
It has never been perfectly clear to the view
That the trouble's at home and within signal distance;
But we're all quite near-sighted, both Gentiles and Jew.

I do not admit that Eve tempted old Adam—
She, poor little soul, had no guide in her mind;
She knew she loved fruit, more especially apples,
And, woman-like, shared them, unselfish and kind.

She never attempted to steal and then hide them;
To gain for herself a more bountiful store;
To take for herself all the juicy and ripe ones
And leave to old Adam but seeds, skin and core.

She was type of true woman—unselfish, devoted,
Brave, honest and lovely, the very rib
In the whole of the body of shirking old Adam,
Just as ready to steal for her husband—as fib.

She had taken all risk, having longed for the apples;
Had conversed with the snake and had plucked from the tree;
And, though weak-kneed Adam had shared half the plunder,
She'd have shouldered all blame and have let him go free!

Then hail, Mother Eve, the most human of women!
Your faults, if you had faults, have made us your kin;
You've shown to your daughters such exquisite graces,
Perfection in you would have really been sin.

And sin and disgrace fall on all sons of Adam
Who dare their shortcomings to lay at your door!
And shame on old Adam, who set an example
Such as no living man had e'er thought of before.
And if, Mother Eve, you should find yourself weary
Of having old Adam round, full of remorse,
Because he was sent to the Garden of Eden,
We will pay your expenses and get you a divorce.

AMONG THE PARAGAPHERS.

AN ACHING VOID.

My fond heart, it doth ache
With love, for thy sweet sache.
Say yes—say yes and mache
My gray life rose tints tache.
We'll sail love's glassy lache,
Where billows never breache,
In barque that ne'er shall quache.
Joy'll follow in our wache—
Now, ho! the wedding cache!

Monogram stockings are selling in New York as high as $250 a pair, but we understand that they are not generally worn by editors. When the editor reaches with his foot for an "Autumn Musings" poet, a pair of 15-cent half-hose appear quite as au fait and distingue as $250 monogram stockings.—Norristown Herald.

THE LEGEND OF MIMIR.

It is beautiful legend of the Norse land. Amilias was the village blacksmith, and under the spreading chestnut treekin, his village smithophiken stood. He the hot iron gehammered and sjod horses for 50 cents all around, please. He made tin helmets for the gjodds and stovepipe trousers for the hjeroes.

Mimir was a rival blacksmith. He didn't go in very much for defensive armor, but he was lightning on two-edged Bjswords and cut and slash svrcutlasssses. He made cheese knives for the other gjodds and he made the great bjsvsstnsen, an Arkansaw tooth pick that would make a free incision clear into the transverse semicolon of a cast iron Ichthyosaurus, and never turn its edge. That was the kind of a bjairpin Mimir said he was.

One day Amilias made an impenetrable suit armor for a second class gbjodd and put it on himself to test it, and boastfully inserted a card in the Svensska Norderbjravisk jkanaheldesplvidenskgorodovusaken saying that he was wearing a suit of homemade, best chilled, Norway merino underwear that would knick the unnumbered saw teeth in the pot metal cutlery of the ironmongery over the way. That, Amilias remarked to his friend Bjohnn Bjrobinsssson, was the kind of Bdjucckk he was

When Mimir spelled out the card next morning, he said, "Bjjj!" and went to work with a charcoal furnace, a cold anvil and A. T. Hay's isomorphic process, and in a little while he came down street with a sjvaard that glittered like a dollar store diamond, and met Amilias down by the new opera house. Amilias buttoned on his new Bjarmor and said:—

"If you have no hereafter use for yoor chyjeese kjnife, strike."

Mimir spat on his hands, whirled his sjvaard above his head, and fetched Amilias a swipe that seemed to miss everything except the empty air through which it softly whistled. Amilias smiled and said, "go on," adding that it seemed to him he felt a general sense of cold iron somewhere in the neighborhood, but he hadn't been hit.

"Shake yourself," said Mimir.

Amilias shook himself and immediately feel into halves, the most neatly divided man that ever went beside himself.

"That's where the boiler-maker was away off in his diagnosis," said Mimir, as he went back to his shop to put up the price of cutlery 65 per cent in all lines with an unlimited advance on special orders.

Thus do we learn that a good action is never thrown away, and that kind words and patient love will overcome the harshest natures.—Robert Burdette.

A VERDANT GROOMSMAN.

A little leaven of embarrassment let loose in a bridal party leaveneth the whole, and often produces very funny results. Rev. Timothy O'Connell tells in the St Louis Globe-Democrat how not long ago he was called to officiate at a wedding which was impromptu. The invited groomsman failed to appear, and a neighbor was asked to assist, as the couple were anxious to take a certain train. The emergency groomsman was verdant, and grew so embarrassed that he completely upset the nerves of the bridemaid. She had two tasks on her mind—one, to arrange her bustle, the other to fasten a bouquet in the groomsman's lapel. She got these mixed in her mind, and pinned the bouquet first on her bustle, and then tore it impatiently off and pinned it to his coat tail. A lunch had been provided on a tray close at hand and when the clergyman asked for the ring, the assistant promptly handed him a biscuit. Seeing his mistake, for want of a better place, he awkwardly put the muffin in the groom's pocket, took the ring and handed it to the bride, at the same time pouring a glass of wine from the bottle at hand into a dusty piece of lovely Sevres china. Perspiration stood out in great beads on his forehead, and as soon as the ceremony was performed he looked at the envelope in his hand containing the fee, broke the seal, saw the money and thinking either that he had earned it or that it was intended for him, put it in his pocket, handed the clergyman the empty envelope and fled. It is perhaps needless to add that the couple missed the train.

TWO REQUESTS.—Confession of inability could not go further than in the prayer of a good brother more used to dry goods than leading camp meeting—"O Lord, we are as weak—as weak as No. 60 basting thread!"

Nor does the Drawer believe there was any insincerity in the request of the colored boy who, when his turn came to lead the prayer-meeting, observed, "O, Lord, I pray Thee make Thy servant conspicuous."—Editor's Drawer for November..

An East-side mamma gave her little boy a couple of doughnuts the other day, telling him to divide with his sister. A few moments later the little sister came in crying as if her heart wonld break, and when asked what was the matter, she sobbingly explained: "Bobby comed out wif the donuts, an' said for me to wait till he had eaten the outside an' he would give me the holes. Then he lost the holes an' I didn't have any."—Milwaukee Sun.

O'Rourke (walking delegate)—An' who did ye say painted this pictur, Teddy? McGrogan—It do you say in the cattylog that it was a Doochman named Rimbrandt! O'Rourke—Rimbrandt? Begob there's no wan av that name in the painter's union! If they don't take kown this "scab" wor-r-k, Oi'll have the place boycotted!—Puck.

Edith—So you and Tom were finally married, Nell?

Nell—Yes: but we're not happy.

Edith—What! Not happy? Why, how's that?

Nell—We didn't marry each other.—Harper's Bazar.

"Is he a liar?" exclaimed one of two men talking loudly on State street about a third man this morning. "Well, I should say he was. He would rather tell a lie at 60 days than speak the truth for spot cash."—Albany Journal.

Customer (to head waiter)—"Here, sir, this clumsy fellow has spilled over half of my cup of tea down my back." Head Waiter (to clumsy waiter, sternly)—"Bring this gentleman a full cup of tea instantly."—New York Sun.

TRUE ECONOMY. — It is true economy to buy Hood's Sarsaparilla, for 100 Doses for One Dollar," is original with and true only of this popular medicine. If you wish to prove this, buy a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla and measure its contents. You will find it to hold 100 teaspoonfuls. Now read the directions, and you will find that the average dose for persons of different ages is less than one teaspoonful. This is certainly conclusive and unanswerable evidence of the peculiar strength and economy of Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"I took Hood's Sarsaparilla for loss of appetite, dyspepsia, and general languor. It did me a vast amount of good, and I have no hesitancy in recommending it."—J. W. Willeford, Quincy, Ill.

"I have been troubled by scrofulous affection all my life. It is one of the marked recollections of my boyhood days, and for several years has rendered me unable to labor much. I think Hood's Sarsaparilla, which I have been using at intervals for ten years, is the best thing I have ever taken. I am now 60, and my general health seems better than ever.—H. D. Abbott, Warren, N. H.

SPECIAL.

YES, you go to Springfield to trade because you do much better there, and they have larger stocks from which to select. Those are points. Now when there, drop into SAXTON'S jewelry store and have a rich treat, looking at diamonds, watches, solid silver ware, clocks, etc., and find yourself welcome, even though not desiring to buy. You see elegant things on every hand, and more than likely see a new novelty, just the present for Christmas, or other occasions. Buying a ladies' solid gold watch, handsomely engraved, for $25 (twelve styles to select from) is worth your thought. You can go very much higher. Finger rings, engraved and plain band, $2.50 and up, with tiny rings of solid gold for baby, 50c. and upward. Cuff holders a pair, 50c.; so much better than the common pin. Think of these useful presents:

Gold thimbles, $3.50 up.
Solid silver thimbles, 25c. up.
Napkin rings, name engraved, 50c.

The boy wants a watch—natural enough—a stem-winder; silver $10, nickel $2.50, isn't hard on your pocket. A silver-toned clock for $6 and upwards adds a charm to home at small expense. A silver or gold-lined cup at $1.00 would make the child's face more radiant than any cup. If we should speak of bracelets, cuff buttons, studs, knives, forks, spoons, etc., you would lack time to read of them, so you will have to visit our large store with its first-class stock, feast on its elegant novelties, and purchase, if you desire, what you may find cheaper and better than elsewhere.

CLEVELAND'S
SUPERIOR
BAKING POWDER.

The Purest and Best.

Is made only of strictly pure grape cream of tartar, strictly pure bicarbonate of soda, and a small portion of flour as a preservative, nothing else whatever, and is warranted entirely free from alum, ammonia, phosphates, lime, and all other adulterations frequently found in baking powders. The character of materials used, their purity, and the nicety of their combination, render Cleveland's superior baking the most healthful and most economical in use, and it always affords wholesome, nutritious, and delicious food.

It is recommended for purity, healthfulness and efficiency by government and state chemists, chemists of boards of health, and professors in institutions of learning throughout the country.

Sold only in cans. Full weight.

AS GOES TEXAS, SO GOES THE COUNTRY.

The following convincing and enthusiastic lines, written by a resident of the "Lone Star" state, are copied from a Texas paper, and will be read with interest and pleasure by thousands whose experience enables them to vouch for the fact that there is as much truth as poetry in the composition:

THEY ARE COMING.

They are coming from the mansions of aristocratic "swells,"
Where the merry music maketh delectation for the belles,
They are coming from the houses of the merchants, and the men
Who are preachers, teachers, scientists and those who wield the pen;
They are coming from the villas where bankers love to dwell,
From the happy, smiling cottages in dingle and in dell;
From the cities, towns and hamlets, and from every home and haunt,
To buy EMERSON PIANOS, which will "fill a long felt want."

They are coming, the mechanics, each a man who toils and strives,
They are coming, the wage-earners, with their children and their wives,
They are coming, careless cowboys, dapper clerks, and drummers, too,
Each one bound to buy an EMERSON—no other make will do.
For solid happiness and peace each from its tone derives
And poetry begins to smile into prosaic lives,
And they troop to GOGGAN BROTHERS or to one of their four branches.
Those men who live in cities and those dwellers upon ranches.

And the EMERSONS are coming from the city by the sea,
The town that had a picnic when they spoiled King George's tea;
They are coming by the car-load to fill the great demand;
They are coming down to Galveston, by sea as well as land;
They are coming, too, to Waco, and to Houston, and to San Antonio, and Austin, always foremost in the van—
Five citadels of EMERSON, upheld against all others,
By the Texas "Gog and Magog," but known here as GOGGAN BROTHERS.

Galveston, October, 1888. VIOLAS TOUT.

THE EMERSON PIANO COMPANY have removed to their elegant new ware rooms, No. 174 Tremont street, Boston, Mass., where a full line of their latest styles in upright and square pianos may be found. 4-34

KASKINE.
(THE NEW QUININE.)
NO BAD EFFECT,
NO HEADACHE, NO NAUSEA,
NO RINGING EARS,
CURES QUICKLY,
PLEASANT, PURE.
A POWERFUL TONIC.

A specific for Malaria, Rheumatism, Nervous Prostration. The most scientific and successful Blood Purifier. Superior to quinine.

Mr. Lode Hoornbeck, of the U. S. Ship Kearsarge, writes that he meets people almost daily who have used or are using Kaskine, and who affirm from experience that it is superior to quinine in tonic and curative properties, and produces no subsequent bad effects.

Mr. John C. Scarborough, Selma, N. C., writes: "I got malaria in the Southern army, and for a dozen years suffered from its debilitating effects. I was terribly run down when I heard of Kaskine, the new quinine. It helped me at once. I gained 35 pounds."

Kaskine can be taken without any special medical advice. $1.00 per bottle, or six bottles for $5. Sold by druggists or sent by mail on receipt of price. KASKINE CO.,
168 Doane St., New York.

MASON & HAMLIN.

The cabinet organ was introduced in its present form by Mason & Hamlin in 1861. Other makers followed in the manufacture of the instruments, but the Mason & Hamlin organs have always maintained their supremacy as the best in the world.

Mason & Hamlin offer, as demonstration of the unequalled excellence of their organs, the fact that at all of the great World's Exhibitions, since that of Paris, 1867, in competition with best makers of all countries, they have invariably taken the highest honors. Illustrated catalogues free.
ORGANS
$22 to $900.

Mason & Hamlin do not hesitate to make extraordinary claim for their pianos, that they are superior to all others. They recognize the high excellence achieved by other leading makers in the art of piano making, but still claim superiority. This they attribute solely to the remarkable improvement introduced by them in the year 1882, and now known as the "Mason & Hamlin Piano Stringer," by the use of which is secured the greatest possible purity and refinement of tone, together with great increased capacity for standing in tune and other important advantages.
PIANOS
Grand & Upright

A circular containing testimonials from three hundred purchasers, musicians, and tuners, sent, together with descriptive catalogue, to any applicant.

Pianos and organs sold for cash or easy payments; also rented.

Scribner's Magazine
FOR 1888.

The publishers of SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE aim to make it the most popular and enterprising of periodicals, while at all times preserving its high literary character. 25,000 new readers have been drawn to it during the past six months by the increased excellence of its contents (notably the Railway articles), and it closes its second year with a new impetus and an assured success. The illustrations will show some new effects, and nothing to make SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE attractive and interesting will be neglected.

The Railroad Articles will be continued by several very striking papers; one especially interesting by Ex-Postmaster-General Thomas L. James on "The Railway Postal Service."
Illustrated.

Mr. Robert Louis Stevenson's serial novel "The Master of Ballantrae," will run through the greater part of the year.
Begun in November.

A Correspondence and collection of manuscript memoirs relating to J. F. Millet and a famous group of modern French painters will furnish the substance of several articles.
Illustrated.

The brief end papers written last year by Robert Lewis Stevenson, will be replaced by equally interesting contributions by different famous authors. Mr. Thomas Bailey Aldrich will write the first of them for the January number.

Many valuable literary articles will appear; a paper on Walter Scott's Methods of Work, illustrated from original MSS., a second "Shelf of Old Books," by Mrs. James T. Fields, and many other articles equally noteworthy.
Illustrated.

Articles on art subjects will be a feature. Papers are arranged to appear by Clarence Cook, E. H. Blashfield, Austin Dobson, and many others.
Illustrated.

Fishing articles describing sport in the best fishing grounds will appear. Salmon, Winninish, Bass, and Tarpon are the subjects arranged. The authors are well-known sportsmen.
Illustrated.

Illustrated articles of great variety, touching upon all manner of subjects, travel, biography, description, etc., will appear, but not of the conventional commonplace sort.
Illustrated.

Among the most interesting in the list of scientific papers for the year will be a remarkable article by Professor John Trowbridge, upon the most recent developments and uses of photography.
Illustrated.

A class of articles which has proved of special interest will be continued by a group of papers upon electricity in its most interesting applications, by eminent authorities; a remarkable paper on deep mining, and other interesting papers.
Unique illustrations.

A special offer to cover last year's numbers, which include all the railway articles, as follows:
A year's subscription (1889) and the numbers for 1888..........$4 50
A year's subscription (1889) and the numbers for 1888, bound in cloth..........$6 00

$3.00 A YEAR; 25 CTS. A NUMBER.

If I Could Keep Her So.

Just a little baby, lying in my arms—
Would that I could keep you so with your baby charms;
Helpless, clinging fingers, downy, golden hair,
When the sunshine lingers, caught from othir where;
Blue eyes asking questions, lips that cannot speak,
Roly-poly shoulders, dimple on your cheek;
Dainty little blossoms in a world of woe,
Thus I fain would keep you, for I love you so.

Roguish little damsel, scarcely six years old—
Feet that never weary, hair of deeper gold;
Restless, busy fingers all the time at play,
Tongue that never ceases talking all the day;
Blue eyes learning wonders of the world about!—
Here you come to tell them—what an eager shout!
Winsome little damsel, all the neighbors know,
Thus I long to keep you, for I love you so.

Sober little school-girl with your strap of books,
And such grave importance in your puzzled looks;
Solving weary problems, poring over sums,
Yet with tooth for sponge cake and for sugar plums;
Reading books of romance in your bed at night,
Waking up to study with the morning light;
Anxious as to ribbons, deft to tie a bow,
Full of contradictions—I would keep you so.

Sweet and thoughtful maiden, sitting by my side,
All the world's before you, and the world is wide;
Hearts are there for winning, hearts are there to break,
Has your own, shy maiden, just begun to wake?
Is that rose of dawning glowing on your cheek
Telling us in blushes that you will not speak?
Shy and tender maiden, I would fain forego
All the golden future, just to keep her so.

Ah! the listening angels saw that she was fair,
Ripe for rare unfolding in the upper air;
Now the rose of dawning turns to lily white,
And the close-shut eye-lids veil the eyes from sight;
All the past I summon as I kiss her brow—
Babe and child and maiden, all are with me now.
Oh! my heart is breaking; but God's love I know,
Safe among the angels, He will keep her so.

A BRIDE FROM THE SEA.

Demetrius Green was a travelling salesman. He had the reputation of being the best-informed man and of selling more goods in his line of business than any man in New York. The causes for this were few, but amply sufficient. The first of these was natural ability; he had a keen eye to business, and when he had anything to do he permitted nothing to interfere with it until his end was accomplished. He was a man of good appearance and address; and, lastly, was a man of good habits. He was in no sense a ladies' man, for he had never cultivated the society of the gentler sex, perhaps from lack of time, perhaps from want of inclination.

He had been with his house four years when he took his first vacation. He had never asked for one, and he did not ask for this one. His employers freely offered it to him and insisted on his taking three weeks. So, in the month of July he ran down to Patchogue, Long Island, intending to spend a part of his vacation with a married sister who was spending the summer there. His sister was an attractive young woman, found of society. She introduced him to several nice girls, and what with boating, bathing, and strolling on the beach, Demetrius found that there were other things in life which he enjoyed as much as selling canned goods.

By far the most attractive girl among his sister's friends, Demetrius thought, was Lydia Hartley. She was not particularly beautiful, except that she had the beauty of youth, health, and innocence, but she was modest, sweet-tempered, and a thoroughly nice girl. She was from Brooklyn, and had come to Patchogue with her aunt for the summer. More than this Demetrius' sister did not know, as she had never met the Hartleys before their seashore acquaintance. As for Demetrius himself, he did not ask to know any more. At the end of the week he had settled in his own mind that he would be a happier man if he were married. He had also determined that Lydia Hartley was the woman to make him happy, if he could gain her consent. Though his mind was thoroughly made up to this point, he resolved to wait another week before speaking to her. Caution was a characteristic of the man, and as he was to be in Patchogue two weeks longer (for he had resolved to spend his whole vacation here), there was no need to act on the spur of the moment, and Demetrius said to himself, "I shall wait until next Saturday."

On Monday there was a boating party. When the ladies were seated in the boat Demetrius noticed that Lydia rose and gave her seat in the stern to her aunt. "She is thoughtful and unselfish," he said. When they were coming in a squall sprang up, the boat pitched a great deal, and there was much difficulty in making a landing. Most of the ladies were greatly frightened, many were in tears and some in hysterics. Lydia alone, although a little pale, was perfectly calm. "She is sensible and courageous," said Demetrius.

They landed without any accident, and Demetrius held an umbrella over Lydia as they ran to the hotel. Miss Hartley followed, wrapped up in his mackintosh. The ladies were none the worse for their wetting, and they had a merry party at night in the parlor of the hotel.

Demetrius sat smoking his pipe for a long time before he went to bed. He reviewed the events of the day, trying to recall all that Lydia said and how she looked when she said it. He thought he had never seen such eyes of such a beautiful blue as hers, or hair of so pretty a brown. He remembered how her hands looked as they dipped in and out of the baskets in preparing their luncheon, such deft and competent hands they were, as well as pretty hands. He thought of how she had a bright smile and a pleasant word for everybody in the party, favoring none and forgetting none. All this and more he recalled, then he laid down his pipe, slapped his knee, and said: "She is a splendid girl; I love her, and I am going to marry her," which was a very enthusiastic outburst for Demetrius. Nevertheless, he added: "I'll wait until Saturday."

Saturday morning dawned bright and beautiful. Nothing had occurred to change Demetrius's mind in the slightest degree, except that he was more in love than ever. There was nothing "on" for that day, and Demetrius and Lydia found themselves strolling quite naturally on the beach together. They had walked almost a mile, neither having spoken for some mnutes, when Demetrius proposed that they sit down on the sand. "I have something to say to you, Lydia," he began.

A faint blush rose to Lydia's cheek, but she made no reply.

"During the two weeks I have known you I have grown to feel a deep regard for you," he went on; "you are the first woman I have ever loved, and if you can care for me in return, I want to make you my wife. I am, as you know, a traveling salesman. My salary is $3000 a year, with perquisites amounting to $1000 more. My sister, Mrs. Jackson, is the only relative I have. If you marry me, you will find that I will do everything a man in my position can do to make you happy. I have not arrived at this decision suddenly, and I will not press you for an answer if you wish to take time to consider. I shall be here until next Saturday." This was a very long speech for Demetrius, but he felt that the circumstances required something different from soliciting an order for canned goods.

The blush on Lydia's cheek had deepened as he went on. When he paused she was silent a moment, and then, with downcast eyes, she said:

"This is sudden, Mr. Green; I did not think—that is, I was not sure that you—"

"Ah, you did suspect, then?" said Demetrius, smiling.

"A little—yes."

"And perhaps you have already considered what you would say when I should speak to you. I hope you haven't made up your mind to send me to the right about?"

Lydia raised her eyes. "No, Mr. Green, I have not," she said. "I respect your offer. I have the highest esteem for you, and I am sure that I shall grow to—to care for you very much."

Demetrius took her hand, and bending over it kissed it.

They sat there long, talking together; but all they said does not concern us. Demetrius had told Lydia she was the only woman he had ever loved. She, in her turn, confessed what every girl would not, that he was the very first sweetheart she had ever had. But Demetrius loved his tender flower all the more that he had been its discoverer. As they walked back to the hotel he said:

"And now I must speak to your aunt. Do you think she would object?"

"My aunt? Oh, no, my aunt will not object, I am sure," said Lydia.

In the evening, when Demetrius approached Miss Hartley on the subject, she seemed considerably surprised.

"Lydia is so young—I never thought that so soon—" the old lady stammered. "Of course, Mr. Green, you have my consent, so far as I am concerned; but I am not Lydia's natural guardian."

"I thought she made her home with you?" said Demetrius, in some surprise.

"So she does," said Miss Hartley.

"Who is her guardian, then?"

"Her father."

"Does her father live with you?"

"No. He comes to the house about every week when we are at home."

"Where can I find him?"

"I can not tell you—I do not know," said the old lady, in some confusion.

"Is it necessary that I get his consent to marry Lydia?"

"I think so; oh, yes, indeed."

"Miss Hartley," said Demetrius, "if there is anything of a painful nature about your brother, I do not ask you to tell it to me. I am going to marry your niece, but I should prefer to have her father's consent."

"There is nothing painful, Mr. Green. It is only that I can tell you absolutely nothing. My brother is a very peculiar man. Some years ago he was a sea captain of some prominence. He lost the command of his vessel, or resigned it, I don't know which, and since then I have never learned what business he went into. Generally he comes to see us every week, but sometimes he doesn't come for a month."

"Does he never write to you or your niece?"

"No—yes, he did once. He sent Lydia a message about a year ago, and I remember that 'Brooklyn Navy Yard' was on the letter-paper, but that may not have meant anything."

"I am much obliged to you for the information; it probably means a great deal to anyone who wants to find him. Is this all you can tell me?"

"That is all I know."

Another week passed, a week of great happiness to Demetrius and apparently for Lydia too. Demetrius had told her that he was to go on the road again the following Monday. He would be in New York often before the fall, and of course would always come over to Brooklyn to see her. "In October I shall be in the city for three weeks," he added, "and then, if it suits you, is when I should like our marriage to take place."

Lydia blushed, then smiled, and consented. "On Monday morning I shall see your father," he said.

"My father?" said Lydia, looking up quickly.

"Yes, of course we want your father's consent, and I am going to see him and get it before I start on my trip," he said confidently.

"Of course we want father's consent," repeated Lydia.

"On Monday Demetrius bade adieu to his betrothed, took the early train for New York, and reporting to his house made up his route. Then he started for Brooklyn, and reached the Navy York shortly after noon. Going to headquarters he inquired for Mr. Hartley.

"David Hartley?" was the response.

"Yes; is he here?"

"No, he's out there," pointing to the water.

"Can I see him?"

"I think not."

"Can I communicate with him? It is on a matter of great importance," said Demetrius, looking at his watch, "and will probably take but a short time."

The official hesitated a moment, then rang a bell.

"John, this gentleman wants to talk to Hartley. Take him over."

The man led the way to the dock, when the two got into a small boat, the man taking the oars, pulling toward a tug which lay about two hundred feet from the dock. There were several men on the tug.

"Which of these gentlemen is Mr. Hartley?" asked Demetrius.

"None," replied one of the men, laconically.

"I was told that I should find Mr. Hartley here," he said.

"If you can wait awhile, we'll have him up," said the first speaker.

"Up?" repeated Demetrius.

"Yes, out of the water, he's in the wreck."

"Wreck—what wreck?"

"The Mary Stevens, right under you, sir."

Demetrius was appalled. Was Lydia's father drowned, and had he come here only to carry back this dreadful news to her? Three deep, reverberating strokes came from far beneath him, which sounded like a death knell. Demetrius shuddered. Then catching sight of the amused faces of the men, he thought it some hideous joke.

"Gentlemen," he said, "I must see Mr. Hartley, or communicate with him at once on a matter of the utmost importance. You say that he is under the water, yet I am perfectly sure that he is not dead. I have to transact my business and catch a train at 2 o'clock, so I should be obliged to you if you will explain this mystery at once."

"Certainly, sir," said the man who had answered him. "Mr. Hartley is down in the wreck, in the diving bell; if you cannot wait until he comes up, we'll send down a message for you."

Demetrius, breathing more freely, tore a leaf from his memorandum-book and hastily wrote: "Demetrius Green, with Manning, Moore & Manning, asks the hand of your daughter Lydia in marriage. He has her consent, and hopes to have yours."

This he enclosed in an envelope and addressed, gave it to the man, and watched him curiously as he placed it in a small metal receptacle attached to a cord, then jerked a rope and lowered the receiver into the water. After what seemed a long time, several of the same strokes which Demetrius had heard previously, resounded again, and the cord was drawn up, the receptacle opened, and Demetrius received his own note, on the back of which was scrawled, "I don't object. D. Hartley."

"Can you send another message?" asked Demetrius.

"Yes, sir."

He wrote: "The wedding day is fixed for October 8th; I sincerely hope you will be present."

This was sent as before, and after another interval of waiting came back the answer: "All right, I'll be there."

"What's the charge, gentlemen?" said Demetrius, briskly, as he folded up his correspondence and put it in his pocket.

"No charge, sir."

"No charge? Then take this, and drink to the health and happiness of my bride and myself on the 8th of October," and pressing a $5 note into the hand of the astonished workman, he sprang into the boat and was rapidly pulled ashore.

ONE DIES EVERY SECOND.

Here are some interesting facts about the people who comprise the population of the world.

There are 3064 languages in the world, and its inhabitants profess more than 1000 religions.

The number of men is about equal to the number of women. The average of life is about 33 years. One quarter die previous to the age of 17. To every 1000 persons only one reaches 100 years of life. To every 100 only six reach the age of 65, and not more than one in 500 lives to 80 years of age.

There are on the earth 1,000,000,000 inhabitants: of these 33,033,044 die every year, 91,824 every day, 3730 every hour, and 60 every minute, or one every second.

The married are longer lived than the single, and, above all, those who observe a sober and industrious conduct. Women have more chances of life in their favor previous to 30 years of age than men have, but fewer afterward.

The number of marriages is in the proportion of 75 to every 1,000 individuals. Marriages are more frequent after equinoxes—that is during the months of June and December.

Those born in the spring are generally of a more robust constitution than others. Births are more frequent by night than by day, also deaths.

The number of men capable of bearing arms is calculated at one-fourth of the population.—Golden Argosy.

A STRAW FOR HARRISON.—Mrs. Wouldvote—"I just wish women had their rights. I'd light onto Cleveland with both feet?"

Mrs. Easy—"Why, my dear?"

"Think I'd vote for a man whose wife don't wear a bustle—the bold, shameless creature! But Mrs. Harrison's a perfect lady. She's just my figure exactly."—Texas Siftings.

"I don't say marriage is a failure," said Adam, candidly, as he sat down on a log just outside the Garden of Eden and looked hungrily at the fruit on the other side of the wall, "but if I had remained single this wouldn't have happened."—Chicago Tribune.

Little Orphant Annie.

Little Orphant Annie's come to our house to stay
An' wash the cups an' saucers, an' brush the crumbs away;
An' shoo the chickens off the porch, an' dust the hearth, an' sweep,
An' make the fire, and bake the bread, an' earn her board-an'-keep;
An' all us other children, when the supper things is done,
We set around the kitchen fire an' has the mostest fun
A-list'nin' to the witch tales 'at Annie tells about,
An' the gobble-uns 'at gets you
Ef you
Don't
Watch
Out!

Onc't they was a little boy wouldn't say his pray'rs—
An' when he went to bed 'at night, away up stairs,
His mammy heard him holler, an' his daddy heerd him bawl,
An' when they turn't the kivvers down he wasn't there at all!
An' they seeked him in the rafter room, an' cubby-hole an' press,
An' seeked him up the chimbly-flue, and ever'-wheres, I guess,
But all they ever found was thist his pants an' round-about!—
An' the gobble-uns 'll git you
Ef you
Don't Watch
Out!

An' one time a little girl 'ud allus laugh and grin,
An' make fun of ever' one an' all her blood-an'-kin,
An' onc't when they were "company," an' ole folks were there,
She mocked 'em an' shocked 'em, an' said she didn't care!
An' thist as she kicked her heels, an' turn to run an' hide,
They was two great Black Things a-standin' by her side.
An' they snatched her through the ceilin' 'fore she know'd what she's about!
An' the gobble-uns 'll git you
Ef you
Don't Watch
Out!

An' little Orphant Annie says, when the blaze is blue,
An' the lamwicks sputters, an' the wind goes woo-oo!
An' you hear the cricket quit, an' the moon is gray,
An' the lightnin'-bugs in dew is all quenched away—
You better mind yer parents, and yer teachers fond and dear,
An' cherish them 'at loves you, an' dry the orphant's tear,
An' help the pore and needy ones 'at clusters all about,
Er the gobble-uns 'll git you
Ef you
Don't Watch
Out!

KISSING.

The custom of kissing varies in different countries. The Arabian women and children kiss the beards of their husbands; the superior returns the salute by a kiss on the forehead. In Egypt, the inferior kisses the hand of a superior, generally on the back, but sometimes on the palm; the son kisses the hand of his father, the wife that of her husband, the slave, and often the free servant, that of the master; the slaves and servants of a grandee kiss their lord's sleeve or the skirt of his clothing.

In Russia, the Easter salutation is a kiss. Each member of the family salutes the other; chance acquaintances on meeting kiss; principals kiss their employes; the general kisses his officers; the officers kiss their soldiers; the czar kisses his family, retinue, court and attendants, and even his officers on parade, the sentinels at the palace gates, and a select party of private soldiers, probably elaborately prepared for this "royal salute."

In other parts, the poorest serf, meeting a high-born dame in the street, has but to say, "Christ is risen," and he will receive a kiss, and the reply, "He is truly risen." The Empress Catherine of Russia instituted assemblies of men and women to promote the cultivation of polite manners. Among the rules for maintaining the decency of those assemblies, she directed that no gentleman should force a kiss from or strike a woman in the assembly, under pain of execution.

A most pleasant, tender, but at the same time perplexing salute, s that bestowed upon one by the women of Norway, who, after having put you to bed and tucked you up well between the sweet-smelling sheets, bend their fresh, fair faces, and kiss you honestly upon the beard, without a shadow ever of shame or doubt.

In Finland, contrary to the usual custom, the women object to the practice of osculation. A Finnish matron, on hearing that it was a common thing in England for man and wife to kiss, expressed great disgust thereat, declaring emphatically that if her husband dare to take such a liberty, she would give him a box on the ears he would feel for a month!

In Iceland, illegitimate kissing has had deterrent penalties of great severity. For kissing another man's wife, with or without her consent, the publishment of excllusion, or its pecuniary equivalent, was awarded. A man rendered himself liable for kissing an unmarried woman under legal guardianship, without her consent; and even if the lady consented, the law required that every kiss should be wiped out by a fine of three marks, equivalent to 140 ells of wadmal—a quantity sufficient to furnish a whole ship's crew with pilot jackets.

In Paraguay, you are, by force of custom, obliged to kiss every lady you are introduced to, though this is not such an inestimable privilege as one would suppose, for there all the females above thirteen chew tobacco! But one-half of the young women you meet are really tempting enough to render you happy regardless of the consequences, and you would sip the dew of the proffered lip in the face of a tobacco factory, even in the double-distilled honey-dew of old Virginia.

Under the notorious "blue laws" of Connecticut, no woman was allowed to kiss even her child on the Sabbath or fasting day, under heavy penalties. Only a few years ago, it was considered remarkable that a Western magistrate should impose a heavy fine and a term of incarceration upon an unfortunate fellow who had kissed a pretty girl on the cars without her consent; but police justices in New York have quite frequently imposed the same punishment for simular occurrences in recent years.

In the eyes of the law, kissing a lady without her will and permission is a common assault, punishable by a fine and imprisonment. Some one of an injuring turn of mind has tried to definitely determine the average money value of a stolen kiss in the United States. Court rulings show that the act of forced osculation in Pennsylvania costs $760, while in York it is placed at $2500. New Jersey, with a shocking disregard to the merits of the stolen sweets to be drawn from the ruby lips of her lovely lasses, puts the value of a kiss at $1.15.

From the medical point of view, there is danger in kissing. The spread of diphtheria, it is said, is largely due to the practice of kissing children.

There are superstitions about kissing. There is a man living at Luray, Va., who became convinced when young that kissing was wicked because Christ was betrayed with a kiss. He resolved never to kiss anybody. He has been married twenty years and is the father of eleven children, but has never kissed his wife or one of his offspring.

Among the quaint customs wherein kissing is involved is the surprisal of any person asleep by one of the opposite sex. In such a situation the drowsy party may be kissed with impunity, and must, in addition, pay the saluting party the forfeit of a pair of gloves.

St. Valentine has also a good deal of kissing to answer for. The osculatory customs of this holiday are capitally and graphically illustrated by Sir Walter Scott in "Fair Maid of Perth," where the heroine kisses her stalwart lover, Harry, on St. Valentine's morning, and they afterwards exchange their betrothal gifts, prepared on such occasions with much forethought and circumspection as to their suitability and appropriateness.

It was the custom among the Romans to give the dying a last kiss, in order, as they thought, to catch the parting breath. Spenser, in his pastoral elegy on the death of Sir Philip Sidney, mentions it as a circumstance which renders the loss of his illustrious friend more to be lamented, that no one was nigh to close his eyelids "and kiss his lips," A little after he notices the "dearest love" of the deceased weeping over him.

She, with sunset kisses, sucked the wasting breath
Out of his lips, like lilies pale and soft.

When Lord Nelson was dying on board his flagship, he took leave of his faithful friend, Hardy, by kissing him. "Kiss me, Hardy!" he said, and these were the last words he uttered. And so, too, Sir Walter Scott, when dying, kissed Lockhart, saying: "Be good, my dear! be good."

Many famous kisses might be mentioned. It is reported in the book of Genesis that when Jacob kissed Rachel he "lifted up his voice and wept." One of the funny writers has attempted to account for his weeping. He gives among other reasons that he wept because it was not time to kiss her again; because Rachel threatened to tell her ma; he wept because the damsel did not kiss him; he thought she was fast colors, and cried when the paint came off; when he lifted up his voice he found it heavy and could not get it so high as he intended; he wept because Rachel encouraged him to kiss her twice more and he was afraid to do it; finally, he wept because his first enjoyment of the most delightful pleasures of life overcame him.

Duncan Mackenzie, a veteran of Waterloo, who died at Elgin, Scotland, in 1866, delighted in relating how he kissed the duchess in taking the shilling from between her teeth to become one of her regiment, the Gordon Highlanders, better known as the Ninety-second. The old Scottish veteran has not one left behind him to tell the same tale about kissing the blue-eyed duchess in the market place of Dutkill.

There is a famous kiss in the "Beggar's Opera." It was given by Macbeth to Jenny Diver, and the unpleasant effect which it produced on him may be judged from the sarcastic remark: "One may know by your kiss that the gin is excellent."

Petruchio gave his bride a kiss of enormous calibre. We are told that he "kist her lips with such a clamorous smack that at the parting all the church echoed." Tennsyon speaks of the kiss given to Fatima by her lover;—

Once he drew
With one long kiss my whole soul through
My lips—as sunlight drinketh dew.

Margarida gave her lover a kiss, which fact coming to the knowledge of her husband, he gave her the troubadour's heart to eat, disguised as a savory morsel. When Queen Margaret kissed Cartier, the ugliest man in France, she exclaimed: "I kiss the soul that sings." Voltaire was kissed in the stage box at the theatre by the lovely Countess de Villars.

John Milton, when a collegian, was kissed by a high-born Italian beauty; and Sterne, the novelist, says of kisses: "For my own part, I would rather kiss the lips I love than dance with all the graces of Greece, after bathing themselves in the springs of Parnassus. Flesh and blood for me, with an angel in the inside."

Tom Hood once questioned whether the grave, sedate Hannah More had ever been kissed, and Horace Smith, in his "Rejected Addresses," affirms that on a certain occasion

Sidney Morgan was playing the organ,
While beneath the vestry door
Horace Twiss was snatching a kiss
From the lips of Hannah More.

Every one remembers the famous kiss imprinted by Mr. Bumble on the "chaste nose" of Mrs. Corney, and the still more famous kiss applied to the lips of Mary, the pretty housemaid, by Sam Weller. Sam had dropped his hat, which the housemaid picked up, and Sam kissed her.

"You don't mean to say you did that on purpose!" said the pretty housemaid, blushing.

"No, I didn't then," said Sam, "but I will now." So he kissed her again.

"Sam!" said Mr. Pickwick, calling over the banisters.

"Coming, sir," replied Sam, running up stairs.

"How long you have been!" said Mr. Pickwick.

"There was something behind the door which perwented our getting it open for ever so long, sir," replied Sam.

And this was the first passage of Mr. Weller's first love.

The custom of kissing the blarney stone is explained as follows: In the year 1602, when the Spaniards were inciting the Irish chieftains to harrass the English authorities, Cormac MacCarty held, among other dependencies, the castle of Blarney, and had concluded an armistice with the lord president on condition of surrendering this fort to an English garrison. Day after day did his lordship look for the fulfilment of the compact, while the Irish Pozzo di Borgo, as loth to part with his stronghold as Russia to relinguish the Dardanelles, kept protocolizing, until at last Carew became the laughing stock of Elizabeth's ministers, and "Blarney talk" proverbial.

A popular tradition attributes to the blarney stone the power of endowing whoever kisses it with the sweet, persuasive, wheedling eloquence so perceptible in the language of the Cork people, and which is generally termed blarney. This is the true meaning of the word, and not, as some writers have supposed, a faculty of deviating from veracity with an unblushing countenance whenever it may be convenient.

The curious traveller will seek in vain the real stone, unless he allows himself to be lowered from the northern angle of the lofty castle, when he will discover it about twenty feet from the top, with the inscription, "Cormac MacCarty fortis me fierifecit A. D., 1446." As the kissing of this would be somewhat difficult, the candidate for blarney honors will be glad to know that at the summit, and within easy access, is another real stone, bearing the date of 1703.

In Blarney Castle, on a crumbling tower,
There lies a stone (above your ready reach),
Which to the lips imparts, 'tis said, the power
Of facile falsehood and persuasive speech;
And hence, of one who talks in such tone,
The peasants say, "He's kissed the Blarney Stone."

The famous "soulful" kiss given to Fatima suggests the thought that such kisses are by no means new, though, in the present day, they may be out of fashion. In "Don Juan" Byron speaks of Such kisses as belong to early days,

When heart, and soul, and sense to concert move.

Diagnosing such a kiss, the poet informs us that on such occasions the blood is like lava, the pulse is all ablaze, and each kiss of that kind he declares is a "heart quake."

In the time of Herrick there was an anonymous poet who thus philosophized on the "soulful kiss":—

Philosophers pretend to tell
How, like a hermit in his cell,
The soul within the brain does dwell,
But I, who am not half so wise,
Think I have seen't in Chloe's eyes;
Down to her lips from thence it stole,
And there I kiss'd her very soul.

The kings and queens of England in ancient times practised the ceremony of washing the feet of beggars, in imitation of Christ, who washed the feet of his disciples. They washed and kissed the feet of as many poor people as they themselves numbered in years, and bestowed a gift, or maunday, upon each; the ceremony occurred on Maunday Thursday.

Queen Elizabeth performed this ceremony when she was thirty-nine years old—that is, she kissed the feet of thirty-nine paupers after their feet had been washed by yeomen of the laundry with warm water and sweet herbs, and afterwards by the sub-almoner. The last of the English monarchs who performed this office in person was James II., in 1831, in his forty-eighth year.

In 1530, on Maunday Thursday, Cardinal Wolsey washed and kissed the feet of fifty-nine poor men, "and after he had wiped them, he gave every one of the said poor men twelve pence in money, three ells of good canvas to make them shirts, a pair of new shoes, a cask of red herrings, and three white herrings, and to one of them two shillings." This custom is no longer observed, but the poor still receive their gifts from the royal bounty.—G. J. M., in St. Louis Republican.

ABOUT THE HOUSE.

When putting away the silver tea or coffee pot which is not used every day, lay a little stick across the top under the cover. This will allow the fresh air to get in, and prevent mustiness.

Clean oilcloth with a wet towel pinned over a stiff broom, and rub with long sweeping strokes.

To keep varnished wood looking fresh and bright rub it thoroughly with oil from time to time.

Eggs which are to be broken into water should not be broken into boiling water, as the motion destroys their shape, but let the water be as hot as possible without boiling, and then let them stand several minutes on the back of the stove.

Paper bags, in which many articles are sent from the grocery store, should be saved for use when blacking a stove. You can slip the hand into one of these and handle the brush just as well, and the hand will not be soiled, and when through with them they can be dropped into the stove.

If you want knowledge you must toil for it, if food, you must toil for it, and if pleasure, you must toil for it. Toil is the law. Pleasure comes through toil, and not by self indulgence and indolence. When one gets to love work his life is a happy one.—Ruskin.

Who Knows.

The feathery flakes
Fall softly down through the dull gray air.
Fall lightly here and fall lightly there,
Dancing and laughing with elfish mirth
As they hide the brown of the frozen earth.
The fallen leaves and the withered grass,
The icy arch where the rivers pass,
The yellow leaf of the dead, dead rose,
The icy field where the violet grows,
The mossy gray of the forest tree,
The bare bleak rim of the lonely sea,
The untrodden wilds where the mountain stands,
The silent waste of the desert sands,
Are covered alike by the feathery flakes
That softly fall from the dull gray sky—
That lightly drift and as lightly fly.
They have no aim save the wild wind's will—
The restless wind that is never still—
That eddies and tosses them here and there—
These white-plumed guests from the upper air—
These pure white visitants, blithe and gay,
That laugh a moment, then melt away.
Their errand they know not, but sure amd well
Each did its duty that floated and fell.

So human lives
Are writing their record upon the years,
Some with laughter, some wet with tears.
The dull, dark shadow of gloom and sin
Is the cloud of gray where God's poor begin;
And the way is winding and drear and cold
That leads at last to the sheltering mould.
The glow and glory of Hope's great sun
Gilds over the pathway where some lives run;
The song and perfume of bird's and flowers
Fall soft on the feet of the flying hours.
That fare through the scent of the summer day—
Made sweet by daisies and scent of hay,—
Like the wooing touch of the drowsy god,
'Till they pause to wonder and stay to nod.
And the rose blooms on, and the drone of bees
Flows in with the murmur of rustling trees,
'Till the sun goes down in the glowing west,
And life fades out on its scarlet breast.

So our lives pass on like the falling flakes.
None knows his errand, which path he takes;
Each does his duty as best he may,
Each dreaming he follows in God's own way.
Still the flakes are tossed by the wind's wild will,
And each soul is guided, unknowing still.

Louis Carroll Prindle.

WHERE GLENNIE WAS.

"'Twas down in Louisiana, not many years ago," to quote from an old song, that several companies of us wicked Yankees were posted in a small town just far enough from New Orleans and other important points to be of no strategic consequence for its own sake; yet, being on a direct route from the enemy's lines to the Mississippi river, was important as an outpost. The war was almost over, and the enemy knew it, and we knew they knew it, so we were not as vigilant as we might have been had we been stationed in front of Lee's army. The natives were loyally southern, every man of them—perhaps I should say every woman, for the only men left in town were the few who had passed their three score years and ten, one physician and one preacher. But the natives did not allow us to feel uncomfortable. The doctor disagreed radically with us on principle and cursed Grant fluently, but he took professional and even friendly interest in such of us as had more malaria than our regimental surgeon could manage; the preacher gave us a sermon that reminded us of Sundays at home, and the old men would smoke and chat with us all day long, so long as we did not say what we believed about the future of military events.

As for the women—bless them! they were exactly like the majority of women everywhere else—very tenacious of their opinions so far as the war was concerned, but otherwise hospitable, gracious and charming. They didn't mean to give us the entree of local society, but somehow we got there all the same. We did it so quietly that none of them knew how it began or who began it, and I don't believe that after the first twenty-four hours any of them took the pains to inquire. We purchased enough supplies to set business booming, allowed no marauding, wore clean clothing, and were on our good behavior every way, President Lincoln having specially ordered, through Gen. Banks, that Louisiana must be "conciliated"—whatever that might mean.

The consequence was that we officers soon knew everybody worth knowning, and were entertained with as much courtesy and self-possession as if the native coffee had not been burned rye or some other substitute, and the tablecloths had not long before been turned into lint or bandages for southern hospitals. We found inoffensive ways of introducing real Java, white sugar, Oolong tea, and other dining-room specialties dear to the feminine heart, and we unloaded countless novels and newspapers into eager hands. More important than all else, I believe, we could talk. So would they, but for some reason women's talk with women did not seem to have been entirely satisfying. We talked so industriously and to such good effect that any chance visitor who might have dropped into town in the middle of our first week would have thought from appearance that we were lifelong acquaintances. The women never let us forget that they were southerners to the heart's core, and that we were merely Lincoln hirelings; still, they were women; they did not like to see any one appear careless of dress, so soon there was not a uniform coat with a loose hanging button. To have a southern woman, whether maid, wife, widow or gray-haired grandmother, bring a needle and thread and tighten a button while the wearer stood awkwardly in front of her, was to realize that Louisiana was not the only party to the war who was being "conciliated."

Every regiment had some officer, generally a young lieutenant, whose ability, appearance and spirits compelled his comrades to pronounce him the flower of the flock. Ours was Will Glennie. The natives approved our choice of their own accord, and we accepted their dictum without a bit of jealousy, fearing only that the youngster might cause some fruitless heartaches. But he didn't. He was officer of the first picket line we threw out, and so impressed was he with the defensive possibilities of the place, that we were glad to have him relieve us of some responsibility by taking charge of the slight earthworks it seemed advisable to erect. He spent a full half of every day outside the lines, looking for additional points of vantage, and as no enemy had been in the vicinity for weeks, he never cared for a guard.

Time passed so delightfully for a fortnight that there was little but roll calls and picket duty to remind us that we were soldiers. Everything was too pleasant to last, so one day a rattle of musketry warned us that there was trouble on the picket line. By the time our bugles had recalled us from our hospitable lounging places, and hurried us toward the front, a soldier with a broken arm came in and reported that some cavalry had tried to force their way into town by the western road, and, being repulsed, had dismounted, and were disagreeing, in the usual military manner, with the pickets, who had fallen back to Glennie's breastworks.

"Bless Glennie for the breastworks!" exclaimed our major in command, after he had shouted "Double quick—march!"

The resistance made by our entire force seemed to disgust the enemy, for in a couple of hours they ceased firing. A special roll call showed that none of our men had been killed, and only two or three wounded, but a captain approached the major and said that Lieut. Glennie was missing. He had gone nearly a mile to the front, to a little elevation, where he had thought a howitzer might advantageously be posted—gone two or three hours before the enemy appeared.

"Captured, then, of course!" groaned the major. "Confound it, gentlemen, for the good of the service I'd rather have been captured myself."

Most of us felt the same way, and we were too dismal for the remainder of the day even to rejoice at having repulsed the enemy. The entire force went out as skirmishers for a mile or two, asking questions at every plantation house and cabin, but no one could tell whether or no the enemy, as they galloped away, had a Union officer with them.

We felt so ugly at our loss that we feared to face the natives when we returned to town. What would they think of us, as soldiers, when they learned that the officer whom we all cheerfully acknowledged was the ablest soldier among us, had fallen into the enemy's hands? The major was so amazed that he actually bit off the mouthpiece of his pipe-stem in a fit of anger; but this severe action did not return to us the flower of the regiment.

Just before sunset a sentry on the road startled all of us, as we lay behind the works, by shouting:

"Officer of the guard! Flag of truce coming!"

We all sprang upon the parapet, and saw emerging from the forest, nearly half a mile away, a horse, a rider, and a tiny white rag. The major raised his glasses, peered through them a moment, dropped them and exclaimed:

"Well! I've heard that the confederacy had robbed the cradle and the grave, but I didn't imagine they'd been recruiting Amazons. That flag is carried by a woman!"

Then all of us wished we had glasses. The rider advanced slowly, until we could see that she was not armed; then that she had a good seat and a fine figure, and finally that she was young and pretty.

"Wants protection for her property, I suppose," growled the major. "Those raiders are probably cleaning out the family's barn and smoke-house, there being nobody at home but women and children. What do they suppose a few infantry can do against nobody knows how many cavalry?"

Nevertheless he went slowly out, alone, to meet her, at which Glennie's captain exclaimed;

"This isn't according to custom. Who knows but she's a young man, disguised, and will drop the major with a pistol? Come on, boys!"

Several of us followed him. As we saw him twirling the ends of his moustache and tipping his hat slightly to one side, we followed his example in these respects also. We overtook the major just as the rider halted, looked very pale, and said;

"It wasn't his fault, sir—really it wasn't."

"Whose fault, madam?" said the major, raising his hat.

"Mr. Glennie's," said the girl.

"Oh! Confound it! I mean—so they got him, did they?"

"Oh, no, sir! but he wishes they had. And they would have done, only—only—

"Well, madam!"

"Only they were prevented."

"Indeed! How was that?"

"Why, you see, sir, he stopped at our house, just for a drink of water, and while he was standing by the well the Rangers"—

"Rangers?"

"Yes, sir; the Texas cavalry—they came across the hill just then. He started to run this way, but—but"—

"Well?"

The girl looked down a moment, colored, raised her head, and said rapidly:

"I told him he never would get there alive. I said they were a hundred to one, and he'd surely be killed. I'm a true southern woman, sir; my father is Capt. Grayson, of the artillery battalion, but I don't believe murder is war. So I made him come into the house. He declared he wouldn't; death was nothing to duty. But I made him come in."

"Indeed! What arguments did you use, may I ask?"

Again the girl looked down and colored deeply. Some of the younger officers began to exchange winks.

"He declared he wouldn't," the girl resumed, but I made him. He struggled with all his might, but"—

"I beg your pardon for interrupting," said the major, biting his lip, "but—he escaped, then?"

"Yes, sir; but not a second too soon. I hadn't more than got him into the hogshead"—

"Hogshead?"

"Yes, sir; a big sugar hogshead, in the cellar, that we had meant to keep sweet potatoes in, when two of the rangers came in the front door. They said they'd seen a Yankee at the well, and wanted him. I told them he had seen them and made a dash for his own lines. He really did, you know, for a step or two, when—when"—

"When you warned him of his danger?"

"Yes, sir. Well, they took my word, when I told them who my father was, and they went away."

"Ah! Where are the Rangers now?"

"They went back—I don't know where—hours ago."

"And caught him as they went?"

"Oh, no, sir; they couldn't. But he was in a dreadful excitement. He said he had no right to be outside the lines; he could be court-martialed for it and disgraced, and may be shot, if things went wrong in the fight. He went on so that I wouldn't listen to him, and I was afraid some of the Rangers might come back and hear him, so I wouldn't stay and listen to him."

"But why didn't he return after they retired!"

"Because he couldn't, sir. I wouldn't let him. I didn't want him to be court-martialed and shot, and all of those dreadful things, so I thought it would be only right to come and tell you it wasn't his fault."

"The enemy has been gone several hours," said the major, turning with a suspicious look to us. "I'm afraid there is some ruse in this." Then he turned again to the girl, and sternly said: "Young woman, if your story is true he should have returned by this time. He knows he has nothing to fear, and there is nothing to prevent him coming back, if he knows the enemy have disappeared."

"Oh, yes, there is, sir; there's a cover to the hogshead and a padlock beside."

"On—h—h!" said the major, with many inflections. "He's your prisoner, is he? But, heavens, madam, if he has been locked in a hogshead all this time he's probably suffocated! Confound"—

"Oh, no," said the girl, with an assuring smile, "there's a big bunghole to the hogshead, and I know he has sense enough to breathe through it, because when I went down and whispered through it that the Rangers had gone home again, he"—

"What did he say?"

"Nothing—he—but I know he was alive and just like his old self." Then the girl suddenly dropped her eyes again and colored deeply, while a very young lieutenant murmured:

"Um!"

"I see," drawled the major, very slowly. "Atten-tion! First company, deploy as skirmishers. Forward!"

The girl turned her horse's head quickly, looked backward, set her lips firmly, and exclaimed:

"You're not going to court-martial and shoot him?"

"Suppose I were," said the major, as the men began to file from behind the "curtain" that commanded the road.

"Then," said the girl, "I'll gallop ahead at the risk of my life, and let him escape on my pony."

"Madam," said the major, lifting his hat, "I give you the world of a soldier and a gentleman that you shall be his sole judge."

The skirmish line advanced, and the officers of the other companies followed the girl and the major. The latter should have ordered us to remain with our men, but he didn't. We reached the house, more than a mile outside the lines, without annoyance, and when the girl had lighted a candle we followed her and the major to the cellar. The major's suggestion that the girl should first whisper at the bunghole and see if the captive was still alive, was not acted upon. Instead, she said cheerily, as she turned the key and raised the cover:

"You've nothing to fear, Will."

"'Will!'" murmured the very young lieutenant.

Just then Glennie's face appeared above the edge of the staves, and seemed somewhat disconcerted at the grinning faces before him. Several pairs of hands helped him out, and as he stood before us, with crystals of light brown sugar glistening all over his uniform coat, the major remarked:

"You're a sweet looking object!"

Miss Grayson smiled as if she thought so, too.

You see, major"—began Glennie.

"Yes," said the major, "I certainly do. I see, also, that one of two things must be done for the good of the service. Either our lines must be extended a mile or two farther into the country, or you must persuade this lady's family to move to town."

The family moved, Miss Grayson finally moving all the way to New York. The wedding present from the bridegroom's brother officers was a miniature sugar hogshead, in gold, with a rosebud for a padlock.—John Habberton in Once a Week.

DO FIGURES LIE? Two women had 30 chickens each, which they took to market. They agreed to divide equally the proceeds of their sale. One sold hers, 2 for a dollar, getting for her 30 chickens, $15. The other sold hers, 3 for a dollar, getting for her 30 chickens, $10. This made $25 for the sixty chickens.

The merchant, called on to divide the money said: "You sold your 30 two for a dollar; and you sold your 30 three for a dollar; that makes 60 chickens at the rate of 5 for 2 dollars. Well, 5 into 60 goes 12 times, and twice 12 is 54. That makes $24, your chickens have brought." But as shown above, the women actually had $25, in pocket, and yet the merchant's figures were right.

A missionary writes from the Feejee Islands as follows: "Our small force of brethren seems to be absolutely unable to cope with the distress which prevails in this dark and benighted land. Many of the natives are starving for food. Please send at once a few more missionaries.—New York Sun.

The Lost Spectacles.

Grandpapa's spectacles cannot be found;
He has searched all the rooms, high and low, round and round;
Now he calls to the young ones, and what does he say?
"Two pence for the child who will find them today."
Then Harry and Nellie and Edward all ran,
And a most thorough hunt for the glasses began;
And dear little Nell, in her generous way,
Said, "I'll look for them, grandpa, without any pay!"
All through the big Bible she searches with care,
That lies on the table by grandpapa's chair:
They feel in his pocket, they peep in his hat,
They pull out the sofa, they shake out the mat;
Then down on all fours, like two good-natured bears,
Go Harry and Ned, under tables and chairs;
'Till, quite out of breath, Ned is heard to declare
He believes those glasses are not anywhere.
But Nellie, who, leaning on grandpapa's knee,
Was thinking most earnestly where they could be,
Looked suddenly up in the kind, faded eyes,
And her shining brown ones grew big with surprise;
She clapped both her hands; all her dimples came out;
She turned to the boys with a bright roguish shout;
"You may leave off your looking, both Harry and Ned,
For there are the glasses on grandpapa's head."

DR. DUNNING SURPRISES A DRUMMER.

The Rev. A. E. Dunning, D. D., the manager of the Congregationalist publishing house and Sabbath-school work, and one of the busiest men in Boston, is an off-hand, approachable man, with a bright, winning face, easy manner and personal magnetism, that contribute much to his success. He has none of the outward signs of his clerical calling, but looks more like a business man. He travels nearly all of the time, and he says that in the cars he generally passes as a drummer and is recognized by the fraternity as one of their number. Or going to Minneapolis one Saturday evening, a smart young fellow approached him in a free and easy way.

"Going to stop over Sunday?"

"Yes," replied the Doctor.

"Stop at the Blank Hotel, I suppose?"

"No, I am going to stop with a friend."

"Come round to the hotel to-morrow afternoon and we'll have a racket. Quiet a number of the boys will be there."

"But to-morrow is Sunday."

"I know it, and that's why we can have such a devil of a good time."

"Oh, I think that we fellows who are travelling all the time ought to keep Sunday," said the Doctor.

"Yes," assented the drummer good-naturedly; "but I'll bet you won't!"

"I'll tell you what I'll do; I'll go to church to-morrow if you will!"

"I'll do it! Where shall we go?"

"To the First Congregational. It's the best church in town."

"All right. I'll be there, but I'll bet you won't!"

The drummer was there according to his promise, and could hardly believe his eyes when he saw his friend of the night before ascend to the pulpit. Dr. Dunning tried to find him after the service, but he had fled.—Lewiston Journal.

DRIVER ANTS.

There are certain ants that show wonderful intelligence, and the "driver ants" not only build boats but launch them, too; only these boats are formed only of their own bodies. They are called "drivers" because of their ferocity. Nothing can stand before the attacks of these little creatures. Large pythons have been killed by them in a single night, while chickens, lizards and other animals in Western Africa, flee from them in terror. To protect themselves from the heat, they erect arches under which numerous armies of them pass in safety. Sometimes the arch is made of grass and earth, and gummed together by some secretion, and again it is formed by the bodies of the larger ants, which hold themselves together by their strong nippers, while the workers pass under them. At certain times in the year freshets overflow the country inhabited by the "drivers," and it is then that these ants go to sea. The rain comes suddenly, and the walls of their houses are broken in by the flood, but instead of coming to the surface in scattered hundreds and being swept off to destruction, out of the ruin rises a black ball that rides safely on the water and drifts away. At the first warning of danger the little creatures rush together and form a solid body of ants, the weaker in the center; often this ball is larger than a common base-ball, and in this way they float about until they lodge against some tree, upon the branches of which they are soon safe and sound.—St. Nicholas.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

President Cleveland's last annual message is a lengthy document, and in some respects a remarkable one. The defeated candidate for reëlection is in a pessimistic mood, and matters do not wear that rosy hue which they would if the result of the election had been different. Recalling the fact that "with the expiration of the present session of Congress the first century of our constitutional existence as a nation will be completed," he glances over the history of that century, and concludes that we have drifted away from the simplicity and industry of our fathers. "Our cities," he says, "are the abiding places of wealth and luxury; our manufactories yield fortunes very little dreamed of by the fathers of the republic; our business men are madly striving in the race for riches, and immense aggregations of capital outrun the imagination in the magnitude of their undertakings. We view with pride and satisfaction this bright picture of our country's growth and prosperity, while only a closer scrutiny develops a somber shading. Upon more careful inspection we find the wealth and luxury of our cities mingled with poverty and wretchedness and unremunerative toil. A crowded and constantly increasing urban population suggests the impoverishment of rural sections and discontent with agricultural pursuits. The farmer's son, not satisfied with his father's simple, laborious life, joins the eager chase for easily acquired wealth. We discover that the fortunes realized by our manufacturers are no longer solely the reward of sturdy industry and enlightened foresight, but that they result from the discriminating favor of the government, and are largely built up on undue exactions from the masses of our people. The gulf between employers and the employed is constantly widening, and classes are rapidly forming—one comprising the very rich and powerful, while in another are found the toiling poor. As we view the achievements of aggregated capital, we discover the existence of trusts, combinations and monopolies, while the citizen is struggling far in the rear or is trampled to death beneath an iron heel. Corporations, which should be the carefully restrained creatures of the law and the servants of the people, are fast becoming the people's masters."

This brings him to the tariff question, and he lets himself out with a vindictive aggressiveness which shows very clearly his bitter disappointment because the people have not followed his lead in this matter. He charges that "for the benefit of a favored few, the government, under pretext of an exercise of its taxing power, enters gratuitously into partnership with these favorites, to their advantage and to the injury of a vast majority of our people." This, he declares, is not equality before the law. He finds in it the communism of wealth. "Communism," the message states, "is a hateful thing, and a menace to peace and organized government. But the communism of combined wealth and capital, the outgrowth of overweening cupidity and selfishness, which insidiously undermines the justice and integrity of free institutions, is not less dangerous than the communism of oppressed poverty, which, exasperated by injustice and discontent, attacks with wild disorder the citadel of rule." He thinks that "our farmers, long-suffering and patient, struggling in the race of life with the hardest and most unremitting toil, will not fail to see, in spite of misrepresentations and misleading fallacies, that they are obliged to accept such prices for their products as are fixed in foreign markets, where they compete with the farmers of the world; that their lands are declining in value while their debts increase; and that, without compensating favor, they are forced by the action of the government to pay, for the benefit of others, such enhanced prices for the things they need that the scanty returns of their labor fail to furnish their support, or leave no margin for accumulation. Our workingmen, enfranchised from all delusions, and no longer frightened by the cry that their wages are endangered by a just revision of our tariff laws, will reasonably demand, through such revision, steadier employment, cheaper means of living in their homes, freedom for themselves and their children from the doom of perpetual servitude, and an open door to their advancement beyond the limits of a laboring class."

It would be irreverent to advise the president, as an illustrious leader of his party advised an inquirer in the recent campaign, to "go home and soak his head," but he makes a sorry exhibiton of himself in talking of the children of workingmen being doomed to "perpetual servitude." Nowhere in the world is there quicker recognition of merit and ability, regardless of social distinctions, than in this country, and there is an "open door" of advancement before every resolute youth in the land. President Lincoln was the son of a "laboring man"; President Johnson came from the "poor white trash" of the South. Similar instances might be quoted almost without number, and a large proportion of the manufacturers whose rapacity he assails so vigorously began as workingmen, and have won success by their unaided industry.

The president makes no reference to the civil service,—an omission of considerable significance for so distinguished a reformer. Foreign relations are said to be friendly, though the fisheries dispute is not settled. The Sackville affair is referred to in a manner that shows how deeply the episode rankles in his mind. Hope is expressed that the influx of Chinese laborers is permanently ended. Freer trade with the South American republics is favored. Revision of the naturalization laws is recommended, as is a reorganization of the consular service. The surplus revenue for the last year is stated at $119,612,116, and that for the ensuing year is estimated at $104,000,000, exclusive of the sinking fund requirements. The purchase of bonds not yet due is deplored, and the suspension of silver coinage is urged. The examination of army officers for promotion is advised, and the war department's dealings with the Apaches are approved. It is claimed that the postal service has been far more efficient and satisfactory than ever before. The education of the Indians is urged as the best means of advancing their interests. A general revision of the pension laws is called for, and the benefits of a well-managed agricultural department are dwelt upon at length.

LOCAL NOTICES.

Bargains in Holiday Goods at Jeweler Barton's.

Call and get some of those new figs at M. M. Cook's.

New and elegant designs in seasonable goods at Jeweler Barton's. Prices right.

Machine needles, oils, belts and sewing machine supplies for sale at F. M. Eager's.

As in years past W. R. Milligan's shoe store will be headquarters for Christmas slippers.

Call and examine Jeweler Barton's stock of silverware, bought expressly for the Holiday trade.

Call at the store of E. S. Brooks and see the large assortment of ladies' gold watches and chains for the holidays.

W. R. Milligan's annual holiday sale of boots shoes, rubbers and Christmas slippers will begin to-morrow and continue until after the holidays. Bargains will be found in every department at Milligan's cash shoe store.

E. S. Brooks will make the largest display of holiday goods in his line he has ever made, and at lower prices. Call and examine them, and be convinced that there is the place to be suited, both in quantity, quality and price.

PALMER AND VICINITY.

The merchants are busy putting in their holiday goods.

Aspirants for post-office honors have not yet come to the surface.

The dancing school at the Weeks House was resumed this afternoon.

D. C. Dudley, of Wallingford, Conn., will preach at the Advent chapel next Sunday.

Remember we club the JOURNAL with any magazine or paper published, at lowest rates.

Miss Julia Winchell has been appointed to teach the second primary school at Thorndike.

Next Wednesday is stockholders' day on the Boston and Albany road, with its advantages of a free ride to the Hub.

The W. C. T. U. will hold a meeting in the parlors of the Congregational church next Tuesday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

The Daughters of Rebekah were well entertained at the residence of Mrs. G. B. Kenerson on Park street last evening.

William H. Osborn, a machinist employed at the foundry, got a piece of steel in his eye last Saturday, and will probably lose the use of it as a result.

W. H. Hitchcock, chief engineer of the fire department, was given a surprise dinner Monday, the occasion being his 48th birthday. Only about a dozen friends were present.

The meeting of the Patterson club with Mrs. S. R. Lawrence Tuesday evening was largely attended and highly enjoyed. A well-arranged musical and literary programme was creditably rendered.

George E. Burke of Chicago, but recently of Stafford Springs, Ct., has bought the Main street barber-shop of Joseph Provost, and has already assumed the management. The latter has purchased the shop of Henry Jones.

The county commissioners have allowed George Robinson $950, O. D. Wells and J. M. Converse $500 each, damages, for the discontinuing of the old road and the locating of a new one near the farm of John Farrell.

The Palmer polo team has organized for the coming season, and will go to Monson to-morrow evening, where it will play a game with the Springfields for a purse of $100. Quite a number from this place will accompany the team.

Friends and former patrons of Mrs. A. F. Blackman, late of the Blackman House, Springfield, will now find her pleasantly located in The Vendome, over Brigham's clothing store on Main street, in whose dining room or cafe an excellent dinner can be obtained at a moderate price.

The annual fair of St. Paul's Universalist church was held Wednesday evening and largely attended. The supper served by the ladies was an excellent one, and the fancy tables were well patronized, very few wares being left to be sold at auction. The amount realized from the supper and fancy tables was over $100, which the ladies think repays them for their trouble.

The attraction at the Brunswick Billiard Parlors Christmas week will be a walking-match for a purse of $60, divided. A track will be put in next week, and those who wish to train for the match will be allowed that privilege free by making application to the manager. The match is open-to-all, and entries must be made before next Wednesday evening. Manager Conry is already corresponding with several well-known pedestrians, whom he expects to have enter, and the event promises to create considerable interest.

The "Wigwam" held its second meeting for debate in the high school building Monday evening, and although some of the members were absent, the subject was thoroughly discussed and the occasion proved very interesting, and the members derived much benefit from the way the question was handled. It was decided that foreign immigration is for the best interests of this country by a vote of 8 to 2. The next question for debate is: "Should Canada be annexed to the United States?"

The following books have just been added to the public library: "Shams," by Benjamin Morgan; "American Politics," Cooper; "Gen. Sheridan's Memoirs"; "History of Framingham," J. W. Temple; "History of Springfield," Greene; "Life of Gen. Eaton"; "John Ward Preacher," Margaret Deland; "Robert Elsmer," Mrs. Humphrey Ward; "Quick on the Dead," Amelie Rivers; "The Temperance Movement," Blair; also bound volumes of Scribner's, Century, Harper's, North American Review, Popular Science Monthly, Atlantic.

The semi-annual meeting of the Christian Endeavor Society of the Second Congregational church was held Wednesday evening and these officers were chosen for the coming six months: President, Dr. G. H. Wilkins: vice-president, C. M. Abbe; secretary, Miss Effie G. Shaw; treasurer, John E. Breckenridge. After the business meeting a musical entertainment enlivened the occasion, the soloists being Miss Cora E. Brown and Henry Loomis, while a piano duet was rendered by Miss Lena M. Brown and Miss Annie Shaw.

A fellow who had imbibed a liberal quantity of "tanglefoot" and lost a small sum of money at cards in one of the saloons of the place Tuesday, went to the bank and drew $400, which he had been a long time accumulating, and returned to win his money back. The saloon keeper was preparing for a "soft snap," but before operations commenced the victim's brother appeared and promised prosecution to the full extent of the law if the game went on, so the young fellow saved his money and the saloon keeper is so much poorer than he expected to be.

The following civil entries were made at the district court last Saturday: Benjamin P. Parsons of Palmer vs. Bridget A. Dewyer, administratrix of the estate of Daniel Dewyer, late of Palmer, action of contract; Gardner for plaintiff, Taft for defendant. W. W. Leach of Palmer vs. Patrick Healey of Palmer, action of ejectment; Gardner for plaintiff, defendant defaulted. Three civil cases have been brought by H. P. Longley of Westboro, A. H. Willis of Boston and George A. Bills of Palmer vs. Walter J. Hills of Warren, and trustee, for action of contract; Gardner appears for the plaintiffs and Taft for the trustee in each case.

An alarm was rung in from box 57 at 12.33 Wednesday morning for a fire in the Brunswick Billiard Parlors, in Caryl's block on Main street. The fire department responded promptly, but its services were not needed, as the fire proved to be confined to an oil-stove which had been left burning the night previous, and was extinguished by the owner of the building, who burst in a window and threw the stove out-of-doors. Timely discovery by the watchman in the signal tower prevented what might have proved a serious fire, but as it was no damaged was caused, although there was considerable anxiety for a time.

The leap-year party and ball at the Week's House this evening promises to be largely attended, as many invitations have been issued, and in the majority of cases, accepted. The features of the occasion will be the prompting by Miss Gould, and the music by a female orchestra, composed of Mrs. F. C. Hatch, pianist; the Fairchild sisters of Belchertown, violin and cornet. The executive committee of the Woman's Relief Corps, which is composed of Mrs. W. C. Hitchcock, Miss Della Holbrook, Mrs. C. W. Cross, Mrs. J. H. Gamwell and Mrs. C. N. Coleman, has the matter in charge, and intend to make the event a notable one.

At a session of the probate court held in Springfield Wednesday, the will of Oliver Wolcott, late of Longmeadow, O. Louis Wolcott, was proved. Administration was granted on the estates of Ashbel P. Chapin, late of Ludlow, Susan A. Chapin administratrix, and Kenneth McKenzie, late of Longmeadow, Ina A. McKenzie administratrix. An inventory was filed in the estate of Elanor S. Aldrich, late of Monson, personal $319; executor's accounts rendered in the estates of William Nelson, late of Wales, and Daniel K. Bannister, late of Ludlow. A trustee's account was also rendered in the latter estate. Guardian's accounts were rendered in the estates of Abbie S. Knight of Wilbraham, insane, and William Smith of Monson, minor. A notice of appointment was issued in the estate of William Nelson, late of Wales.

Personal.

W. E. Fay and wife are visiting friends in Brookfield.

Mrs. L. M. Shaw will spend the coming two weeks at Boston.

Dr. J. K. Warren of Worcester was here Tuesday.

Miss N. L. Ingram, last term a teacher here, has accepted a position in one of the public schools at Ware.

Dr. E. E. Hill returns to his dental studies at Philadelphia to-morrow.

W. D. Johnson and wife of Fitchburg spent Sunday here with friends.

George B. Kenerson will soon start for the South, where he will spend the winter in hopes of recovering his health.

A Sad Death.

Mrs. Ida A. Freeland, daughter of Mrs. P. Taft and a recent resident of this place, died of typhoid fever at Fort Spring, West Virginia, Sunday night. Her sickness covered a very brief period and her death was sudden and unexpected, and a great surprise to her many friends and acquaintances here, where she was a successful teacher in the public schools for 11 years. She was married to B. R. Freeland of Seattle, W. T., October 22d, and was on her wedding trip to that place, where she expected to live. She was born at Winchell, Vt., in 1850, and among her relatives here are D. W. Taft and Mrs. Cyrus Knox, her brother and sister, while another sister, Mrs. H. E. Armstrong, is living at Castleton, Vt. The body was brought here Wednesday, and the funeral was held at the Second Congregational church yesterday afternoon, Rev. H. W. Pope officiating.

A Lecture Course for Palmer.

With the feeling that Palmer ought to have a good lecture course this winter, I have made some inquiries, and find that the following course can be obtained, provided $200 worth of course tickets can be sold in advance: Russell Conwell; Haydn quartette of Boston; Robert Nourse of Washington, D. C.; Professor Hibbard, or some other good elocutionist. Col. Conwell is well known to the Palmer people, and is by many considered the finest platform orator in this country. The Haydn Quartette is a new combination, made up in part from the Weber and Harvard College Quartettes. It is admitted to be a better combination than the Temple Street or Weber Quartette, and considered by some equal to the Ruggles Street. Robert Nourse is a born orator, of whom Washington Gladden says: "He is one of the most eloquent, wise and witty talkers you ever heard," and Robert J. Burdette adds, "You may say what you will about Nourse, you cannot say too much." Prof. Hibbard read here last winter with great acceptance, and many have expressed a desire to hear him again with a new programme. Here, then, is a course of strictly first-class entertainments which we can have if we wish, but it would be hazardous to engage them unless a guarantee of at least $200 can be secured. It will cost $35, besides the advertising, to place Col. Conwell alone before the public. I am happy to say that the young men's debating society, "The Wigwam," have consented to assume the management of the course, provided they can receive sufficient encouragement. Course tickets will be $1 for adults and 75 cents for youths under 15. Here is an opportunity to obtain a good thing for ourselves and at the same time encourage our young men, of whom we are justly proud. I bespeak for them your hearty support.

H. W. POPE.

Some Annual Meetings.

The Women's Relief Corps elected the following officers Tuesday evening: P., Mrs. D. S. Davis; S. V., Mrs. H. A. Lawton; J. V., Mrs. C. B. Ellis; treasurer, Mrs. J. H. Henry; chaplain, Mrs. H. M. Kirk; C., Mrs. J. Smith; G., Mrs. Kate Shumway. They will be installed Jan. 4.

Thomas Lodge, F. & A. M., elected and installed the following officers Monday evening: W. M., S. H. Hellyar; S. W., A. Pinney; J. W., C. E. Fish; treasurer, James B. Shaw; secretary, G. C. Ellis; S. D., F. Allen; J. D., Frank Aiken; M., E. C. Sexton; S. S., Charles Bogue; J. S., D. H. Brown; tyler, S. W. Shumway. The installing officer was George Robinson.

Quaboag Council, Royal Arcanum, elected these officers at its meeting Tuesday evening: Regent, F. N. Carpenter; vice-regent, C. T. Brainerd; orator, George Robinson; past regent, C. E. Fish; secretary, A. C. Page; collector, G. C. Ellis; treasurer, H. N. Sedgwick; chaplain, C. A. LeGro; guide, John Shaw; warden, D. H. Brown; sentry, W. B. Ham; trustees, H. E. W. Clark for three years, D. H. Brown for two years; W. B. Ham for one year; representative to the Grand Council, C. E. Fish; alternates, Fred Allen. These officers will be publicly installed Tuesday evening, January 1.

The Young Men's Library Association held its annual meeting in the reading-room Monday evening and made choice of these officers for the ensuing year: President, W. C. Greene; vice-president, Dr W. H. Stowe; secretary, W. W. Leach, treasurer, George W. Ely; librarian, O. P. Allen; directors, W. C. Greene, W. H. Stowe, O. P. Allen, W. C. Dewey and Rev. H. W. Pope. The library contains about 4000 volumes, and many more new books are to be added. A committee, consisting of O. P. Allen, Dr. W. H. Stowe and W. C. Greene, was also appointed to buy books and other literature.

The Eastern Hampden Agricultural Society held its annual meeting at the Weeks House hall Monday afternoon, with Dr. William Holbrook in the chair. The reports of the secretary and treasurer were read and approved. The amount paid out in premiums this year was $1035.03, and the balance in the treasury is $79.90. President Holbrook then took occasion to state "that inasmuch as he had served the society 18 out of 25 years, he must now decline to be its chief executive." The following officers were then elected: President, H. P. Holden, of Palmer; vice-presidents, W. M. Tucker of Monson and C. E. Dewey of Palmer; secretary and treasurer, O. P. Allen of Palmer; directors, George Robinson of Palmer, B. P. Aiken of West Brookfield, H. D. Vaille of Monson, D. R. McCray of Hampden, George Morgan of Belchertown, J. M. Converse of Palmer, Winslow Foskit of Brimfield and Walter M. Greene of Wilbraham. It was voted to hold three institutes the coming year, and the time assigned was the second Tuesday of the first three months. The subject for the first institute will be: "The Most Economical Feeding of Stock for Growth and for Fattening." George E. Tucker, for the committee on farm crops, reported the following awards: First premium on corn to O. D. Wells; first premium on oats, H. D. Vaile, second to J. S. Keep, both of Monson; first premium on rye to H. D. Vaille, second to O. D. Wells; first on potatoes to J. S. Keep, second to O. D. Wells. The directors were authorized to hire competent persons for judges at the next fair.

WALES.

Editor Journal:—I notice in your paper an item mentioning the only colored man in the next Congress, Henry P. Cheatham. It may be of interest to your readers to know that this young man is a graduate of Shaw University, Raleigh, N. C. which has been patronized by and is named for Elijah Shaw of Wales, in consideration of the financial aid given the school at its foundation soon after the close of the war and all along up to the present time. Mr. Cheatham is a fine looking young colored man who has filled various positions of trust in the State of North Carolina, having been in the Legislature on both branches, and at the time of his election held the office of register of deeds for Vance county. It is very pleasing to those who have helped the freedmen of the South to see them coming to the front, and if a fair election and an honest count prevailed in the colored districts in the South, we would see more of them in our National Congress.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

The ladies had the largest attendance of the season at their society at Mrs. Deacon Sikes's Wednesday evening, and made arrangements for a supper and entertainment at the church Friday evening, Dec. 14. Your correspondent is unable to get many particulars, but rumor says it will be the "biggest thing" ever seen in the village. For particulars see the paper to be published in connection therewith.

The Y. P. S. C. E. of Grace church observed its second anniversary Friday evening. The pastor of the Union church at Indian Orchard, the Congregational church at Ludlow Center, and the Methodist and Congregational churches at Wilbraham were present, each with a good delegation of young people. After an address of welcome by Rev. M. S. Dudley and a report from the secretary, an earnest and pleasing address on the church's need of the young people was delivered by Rev. W. H. P. Faunce of Springfield, the exercises closing with a sociable and lunch. The society has lost some members by removal from town, and a few have been dropped for non-attendance, but it is still in a prosperous condition.

BRIMFIELD.

Rev. F. W. Wiswell, from Hartford Theological Seminary, preached at the First church last Sabbath. He is expected to supply next Sunday.

About 5.30 o'clock Sunday afternoon as Frank R Newton, was feeding his stock, having his lantern hanging from his arm, his pitchfork in some way got caught and swinging around against the lantern flung it against the ladder or a post, breaking the lantern and setting the hay ablaze. He made an effort to smother the flames, but was unable to do it, and then turned his cattle loose, getting them all out. An alarm was at once given, but all efforts to save the two barns, ice house and house, were of no avail, as they were connected. Most of the household furniture was saved. Loss estimated at $2000, insured as follows: House for $800, two barns for $700, in Glens Falls Insurance Co. of N. Y.; hay and grain for $250, farming tools, vehicles, etc. for $150, stock for $300 and household furniture for $500, in Peoples Ins. Co. of Manchester, N. H.

At the vestry of the First church Wednesday evening Miss Dox, missionary in Mexico, gave quite an interesting account of the people where she has been located, and her labor among them the past year.

LUDLOW.

The public schools began work again Tuesday after a four-days' vacation.

Miss Edith Mattison, who has been visiting Mrs. Bly, returned to Auburndale Sunday evening.

Miss Sarah Stuntz, who was obliged to give up her school a few days before vacation on account of ill-health, is back again at her post.

Rev. Edward Day will give a sermon next Sunday morning on "The Power of Song." In the evening he will give a short sketch of the life of Charles Wesley.

The Ladies' Benevolent Society gave a sociable in the vestry Thursday evening. There was a short programme of music and charades, and cake and coffee were served during the evening.

Benj. F. Burr, for the past 22 years the efficient chorister of the First Congregational church, tendered his resignation a few weeks ago. His withdrawal from the choir is an irreparable loss to the singing interests of the church, and it is hoped that after a few weeks of rest he may be persuaded to take on the harness once more. Mr. Burr is one of Ludlow's prominent men. Commencing when a young man as tax collector, he rose to town clerk and treasurer and served 14 years, was selectman for several years, deputy sheriff under Sanderson, and has represented this district in the General Court, besides engaging in much other public work.

THORNDIKE.

Photographers are busy taking views of the mills and their operatives.

Several good companys have written for dates, and are soon to appear at Union Hall.

The Emmet club has given up the idea of going to Ludlow to play "Nevada," as was intended.

The rink will be open again Friday and Saturday evenings of next week for skating. Good music will be in attendance.

Lyons & Luman's orchestra will furnish music for the "Country Girl," which is to be presented by local talent New Year's Eve.

The Wizard Oil Co. is giving a series of entertainments in Union Hall. Presents are given away, and W. W. Thayer was one of the lucky ones last night.

Tall silk hats have made their appearance on our streets. Over confidence in the number of votes to be polled by the Prohibition party is the cause, so says the boss dyer.

D. F. Sullivan, of the Thorndike Co's. office, had a severe tussle with a large turkey on Thanksgiving Day, and the result was that he was unable to be at work for the rest of the week.

The 40 hours devotion which was held at the Catholic church this week was attended by hundreds of people. The altar was handsomely covered with flowers and made a splendid appearance. The following are the names of some of the clergymen who officiated: Revs. Father Moyes of Warren, Sheehan, Deyer and Boyle of Ware, and parish priest F. J. Lynch. Extra services were held each morning.

THREE RIVERS.

William Prairie has moved his barber shop to the Riverside Hotel. Joseph Lemieux will occupy the room vacated by Mr. Prairie with his variety market.

The ladies' society of the Union church gave their new pastor, Rev. Mr. Christie, and wife, a reception at the church Wednesday evening, where an enjoyable time was had.

The Young People's Popular Entertainment Company will give their first entertainment at the Opera House (?) in the Boston and Albany station this evening, consisting of magic lantern views, a farce, and feats in legerdemain, under the management of G. Beecher Orcutt.

George C. Buell, who for the past eight years has been paymaster at the Palmer Mill, has resigned his position there and has accepted a position with Bliss, Fabyan & Co. of Boston, as auditor. Mr. Buell will be missed greatly in public as well as social circles. He has filled the position of auditor for the town of Palmer, and the National Bank at Palmer, and now holds a position as a member of the school committee, having been elected this past spring for three years. He is also superintendent of the Sunday-school at the Union church, where he has done good work.

R. C. Newell, superintendent of the Palmer Mill, gave a reception Friday evening in honor of J. I. Milliken, assistant superintendent, who has resigned to accept the position of superintendent of the Everett Mills at Lawrence, and a good time was enjoyed. E. C. Barr of Springfield furnished the collation. The young men's Bible class of the Union church were invited guests, and during the evening S. B. Barnes, president of the class, presented Mr. Milliken (their teacher) with a handsome photograph album, containing the photographs of the members of the class. Mr. Milliken responded feelingly, and urged the young men to greater efforts in the Christian life. Mr. Newell also made a short speech, and after some singing and some time spent socially the party broke up, wishing Mr. Milliken great success in his new field of labor.

MONSON.

Miss Minnie Noble has taken the Butler district school for the winter term.

The winter term of Monson academy began Wednesday with a good attendance.

Stephen B. Knowlton of Amherst college spent a few days in town the latter part of last week.

Dr. G. E. Fuller and wife have gone to New York for a month's rest and recreation. Dr. Webber will have charge of his affairs during his absence.

About 15 former sewers at Fay, Peck &

Henry Chapin, while returning to Worcester, after a visit to his daughter, Mrs. R. P. Cushman, had a paralytic shock while being driven to Palmer. He was brought back to Monson, and at last accounts was comfortable.

The water-pipe on Main street burst this week, and a gang of men have been hunting for the leak, which they found Wednesday. The numerous warning lanterns at the ditch have given the most light seen on Main street for many a dark night.

Co.'s straw shop went to Stamford, Ct. Monday morning, where they will be employed in the straw-works there.

The "baker's supper," held at the Congregational church Tuesday evening, was largely attended. Rev. Mr. Hatch's "Vacation Ramble" was much enjoyed by all present.

There will be a match game of polo between the Palmers and Springfields at Green's hall rink to-morrow evening, for a purse of $100. A mile skating race is also on the programme.

Death of a Prominent Citizen.

Alfred Norcross, one of the oldest inhabitants of this town, died at his residence Wednesday evening, aged 73 years, after only a short illness, death resulting from lung fever. Mr. Norcross was the son of Joel Norcross, and was born in Monson, and up to the time of his death had taken great interest in the upbuilding of the town. He has occupied many prominent positions in town affairs, having been elected selectman several terms. He was a trustee of Monson academy, a trustee in the Monson Savings Bank, and a director in the Monson National Bank. He was also part owner of the Central Block. His loss as a citizen will be greatly felt. He leaves a wife, two sons, Arthur D. and Herbert C., who comprise the firm of Norcross Bros., and a brother, Joel, who resides in Worcester. The funeral will be held at the house to-morrow afternoon at 2 30, and will be conducted by Rev. F. S. Hatch, pastor of the Congregational church, of which Mr Norcross was a valued member.

A Pleasant 30th Anniversary.

It is a very hard matter to effect a complete surprise, yet such was the case when about 150 of the friends and relatives of Mr. and Mrs. E. P. Keep called upon them in an unceremonious way last Friday evening to remind them of the 30th anniversary of their marriage. The guests completely filled the house, and a happier party it would be hard to find. After the party had all assembled, and the couple had partly recovered from their surprise, Rev. Mr. Hatch, in behalf of the friends, in a few pleasing remarks told the couple of the object of their visit, and presented them with a handsome dinner set of 160 pieces, a silver cream pitcher, silver sugar bowl, silver spoon-holder, and a silver cake basket from Mrs. Keep's Sunday-school class. Mr. Keep responded in a very pleasing manner. A poem, written for the occasion, was read by their son Charles, and the evening was spent in a very happy manner, enlivened by singing and a bounteous supply of refreshments. The party broke up just before the "wee sma'" hours, wishing the couple many happy returns of the day.

The Catholic Fair.

The fair of St. Patrick's church closed at Central Hall Saturday evening, after having a large attendance during the week. The voting contests were the principal features Saturday night. Miss Josie Doyle was the successful competitor for the gold watch, she receiving 1608 votes against 856 cast for Miss Annie Brennan. The votes on the vestments stood: Stafford 8555, Monson 5816. The other articles were awarded as follows:

Parish table: Hand-painted toilet set, Thos. Henry, Versailles; barrel of flour, J. J. Heath; barrel of cider, E. J. Hughes; portrait of Bishop O'Reilly, Patrick Cunningham; china tea set, John M. Reilly; decorated mirror, Miss Eliza Crowley; chest of tea, John Horan; hand-painted banner, J. P. Foley; wine set, Miss Kate Murphy; lady's gold chain, John Kane; pin cushion, John Loftus.

Sodality table: Crayon portrait of Father McCaughen, Miss Katie O'Brien; silver tea set, Miss Nellie Crowley; camp chair, M. Connolly; lace spread, Miss Katie Corish; lady's bonnet, C. H. Austin; hand-painted banner, Thomas Welch; hanging lamp, Timothy Callahan; hand-painted cushion, John Nelligan; brass center stand, J. H. Rafferty; table scarf, James Clark; gent's toilet set, F. G. Hughes; five barrels of potatoes, D. O'Brien.

Sunday-school table: Picture of Madonna, Mrs. Michael Grady; two years subscription to the Monson Mirror, Mrs. Dower; handkerchief case, David Sullivan; barrel of apples, J. P. O'Brien; barrel of flour, James Mooney, china tea set, J. W. Casey; pair of driving gloves, Hannah Collins; album, Miss Nellie Parker; doll, Miss Mary Hughes; silver smoking set, John Pendergrast; stable equipments, Jos. Coyle.

Choir table: Richmond range, Bridget Lockwood; gold-headed umbrella, Miss Mary Cantwell; hand-painted picture, Miss Lizzie Dwyer; decorated camp stool, Lizzie Hanson; lady's kid boots, Frank W. Grout; gent's patent leather shoes, B. O'Connell; silver cake basket, Jerry T. Lynes; pin cushion, Mrs. Chas. Callahan; handkerchief case, Miss T. Tobin; pants pattern, Fr. Lee.

First prize in the shooting gallery, James McQuaid.

The Straw-Shop Matter Again.

It is pretty definitely settled in the minds of the people of Monson that the straw-shop, which has for so many years supplied 300 employes with work, will stand idle the coming winter, greatly to the regret of the whole community. Word has been received from the New York firm which intended to run the shop this winter that in all probability the works will not be operated; the principal reason being because of the lateness of the season. The firm has kept some of the help here by telling them not to obtain positions elsewhere, as they thought there would be no doubt but what the works would be run. Now they are told that there is no hope of operating the factory. The employes who have lived in town for many years and have families, and who have been dependent upon the shop for support, will greatly feel the loss of employment, and will undoubtedly be obliged to leave town, as the other straw-shop employs the same help every year and is now well supplied. The prospect of a settlement with the assignee is not at all encouraging, either. The help, according to the laws of New York, are the preferred creditors, but there is so little with which to meet the claims that if the help should be paid the importers would not receive anything, and as they are the heaviest creditors they propose to take the matter into the courts and try and get a share of the assets. With the money it will take to settle this case, the assignee's salary, etc., the help have but little hope of receiving but a small amount, if anything, on their claims, and many of them are in needy circumstances. The feeling in general is that the machinery will be taken out and sold for what it is worth, and the property disposed of. It is rumored the Monson National Bank officials want the property where the boarding-house now stands, on which, if they secure it, they would erect a handsome bank building, as their present quarters are not large enough. There also seems little prospect of the North Monson mill being operated at present. It was stated that the mill was to resume work as soon as a few repairs could be made, but the statement has not been confirmed. Together with this and the straw-shop failure, Monson people will see the dullest times for many years, unless some manufacturing business can be substituted.

WARE AND VICINITY.

G. M. Hitchcock exhibited his new panorama, "The Great Republic," at the state primary school at Monson Thanksgiving evening. This is a new panorama, never before exhibited, giving in the first part scenes in the wild West, and in the second scenes in some of the principal cities of the Union. The life-like marrionettes in their performances greatly pleased the little ones.

Andrew Bryson has just made another large addition to his store, taking in the two floors and cellar of an adjoining tenement block. He is now occupying 7425 square feet of flooring, being more than two and one-half times as much as any other store of this kind in this part of the country. One floor of the addition gives an enlargement of the main store, and the other an extension of the kitchen department.

A meeting was held at G. A. R. Hall this afternoon for the organization and election of officers of a Woman's Relief Corps in connection with J. W. Lawton Post, G. A. R. This evening the officers will be installed. The G. A. R. boys and S. B. Bond Camp, Sons of Veterans, will be invited, a collation will be served and an enjoyable time is expected. Mrs. M. F. Terry, senior vice president of the Relief Corps, is present. All loyal ladies are invited to join.

Next Thursday evening and Friday afternoon and evening the ladies of Trinity church will hold their Christmas sale in the Town Hall. Some of the attractions are a half-size model of Trinity church on the floor of the hall, in which will be served ice cream, etc. Prof. Andrus' royal marrionettes, singing, talking and dancing figures, will be exhibited by H. M. Hitchcock. The Cadet Band will furnish music. Lots of fun for the boys and girls, and a turkey supper.

Rev. T. A. Dorion, pastor of the French Protestant church, has tendered his resignation, to take effect January 1st, and it has been accepted by the church. It is however, much regretted that he desires to leave, as there are comparatively few who are able to speak the language who are fitted for this work. Mr. Dorion is expecting to work in connection with the New Hampshire or New England Methodist Conference, as superintendent of the French work in whatever conference he may be placed. His family will remain in Ware until next July.

JOTTINGS FROM THE HUB.

From our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, Dec. 5, 1888.

This afternoon the governor and council have announced the official vote of the state at the November election for presidential electors, state officers, congressmen, senators and county officers (registers of probate and insolvency). Of the Republican electors the highest vote is that for ex-Gov. Robinson. He had 183,892, and his associate, Gen. Draper, had 50 fewer. On the Democratic ticket the highest vote did not go to either of the electors at large, but was given to John C. Sanborn of Lawrence, who had 151,905. Of the electors at large, the first, John Boyle O'Reilly, has 151,590, and the second, George M. Stearns, had 151,855. The difference between Robinson and Sanborn is 31,987. There is no change worth mentioning in the vote for congressmen. In the eleventh district Rodney Wallace of Fitchburg had 15,335, and William Skinner of Holyoke had 11,519. The Prohibitionist, Hervey S. Cowell of Ashburnham, had 1128, and all others had 2. Taking the state as a whole, there was but little scattering. The highest prohibitory candidate for presidential elector, James H. Roberts of Cambridge, the first elector at large, had 8701, and the scattering votes were but 60 for elector at large, and an average of about 25 for electors from the several districts. As usually happens, the governor ran behind the others on the state ticket. His vote was 180,849. Lieut. Gov. Brackett had 185,967, and the highest vote on the ticket was that of 186,562 for Auditor Ladd. There is nothing noticeable about the vote for members of the governor's council. The seven Republicans and one Democrat are each elected by safe majorities, and nobody will question any of them. Most of the senatorial votes are decisive. Senator McAlpine was defeated in the sixth Essex district by a vote of 3954 to 3980 for Edward F. O'Sullivan. This is the closest vote, except that in the second Bristol district Senator Howard is defeated by Joseph O'Neill. But if Howard is given the 60 votes on which his name was spelled "Howrad" he will be elected. Everything seems to have been done decently and in order at the election, and there has been nothing to shame the state.

Attention now turns to the work before the Legislature. It is evident that there will be some contests. The Boston and Albany Railroad has petitioned for an increase of capital stock, and so has the Old Colony. The act of last year for the union of the Boston and Maine Railroad with the Eastern has proved absolutely inoperative, and nothing can be done under it. The petition for the division of Beverly has been filed again, and this year it has 185 signatures, or a number slightly larger than ever before. Like the woman of scripture who gained her point by importunity, it is possible that Beverly Farms will succeed in like manner. though this does not imply that the petitioners have not made a good case. Those who are working on the inside of affairs do not yet admit that the prohibitory constitutional amendment will pass the Legislature, nor that the anti-oleomargarine bill will be successful. Great interests are involved, and they will not give up the battle without as sharp a fight as they are capable of. Self-interest is a powerful consideration with those who see that they have come to the end of their political career, and some who do not expect to be returned may vote differently from what they would if they were candidates for reëlection.

It is yet wholly uncertain about the speakership, though it looks as if the contest would come between Wardwell and Slocum. I find in several places a feeling that Barret will not be able to hold his men till the Legislature is organized, and that some of them will go either to Slocum or Wardwell. The Western Massachusetts candidates are not regarded here as having any chance whatever. Their candidacy may in courtesy entitle them to better committee positions than they would otherwise obtain, but they are not seriously thought of here for the speakership.

It is blue at the temperance headquarters here to-day in consequence of the vote in municipal elections yesterday on the issue of liquor licenses. They gained Gloucester, but lost Chelsea, Lawrence, Haverhill, and Fitchburg. The other cities which voted held to their former policy of license or no-license, as the case was. Quincy, the new city, went strongly for no-license, doubtless under the influence of Henry H. Faxon, while the other new city created by the last Legislature, Woburn, voted for license. Next week the city elections of Boston, Worcester, Taunton, Lynn, Salem and Newburyport will be held, and judging by the votes of yesterday, they will be very likely to give an increased license vote. So far as appears the new law which requires the vote for license to be on same ticket with the candidate does not injure the cause of temperance.

Now these city votes will have some effect upon the vote on the prohibitory amendment in the Legislature. If it appears from them that there is a growing preference among the people for license, as restricted by the high license law and the license limitation law which were passed by the last Legislature, then the present members will be more likely to vote against the amendment. It has never appeared that all who have voted for the submission of the amendment to the people really believe that prohibition would be the best policy, and the effect of the success of the license party in the cities would be to strengthen the opponents of prohibition in the Legislature.

Considerable fun is being made of Mayor O'Brien, who was taken in by a note found inside his Thanksgiving turkey, put there by the enterprising young Vermont school ma'am who helped to prepare it for market. In it she stated very warmly her great need of a watch, and the mayor good-naturedly sent her a handsome gold one. It has come out that the young woman wrote similiar notes and placed them in other turkeys, but that no other purchaser responded as generously as did His Honor. But she has written him a note of grateful thanks in which she forgives him for being a Democrat, since he is such a good one.

The incident adds to the campaign, but it does not help O'Brien's cause. It looks more than ever as if he would be defeated at the city election next Tuesday. The Republican opposition to him is more united. The dissatisfaction with him inside the Democratic party is more pronounced, and the school question is expected to make votes for Hart the Republican candidate. There will be a defection of several thousand Democratic votes from O'Brien, but the registration is 11,000 more than at last year's election, and the voting list has gained 1500 since the November election. Doubtless the Catholics will all turn out to vote for their candidates for school committee, and the result is much in doubt, though the Republicans are more hopeful than for years. LANDON.

Their Business Booming.

Probably no one thing has caused such a general revival of trade at LeGro & Lynde's Drug Store as their giving away to their customers of so many free trial bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption. Their trade is simply enormous in this very valuable article, from the fact that it always cures and never disappoints. Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Croup, and all throat and lung diseases quickly cured. You can test it before buying by getting a trial bottle free, large size $1. Every bottle warranted.

A Family Gathering.

Have you a father? Have you a mother? If so, why? when a sample bottle is gladly given to you free by any druggist and the large size costs only 50c. and $1.

Epoch.

The transition from long, lingering and painful sickness to robust health marks an epoch in the life of the individual. Such a remarkable event is treasured in the memory and the agency whereby the good health has been obtained is gratefully blessed. Hence it is that so much is heard in praise of Electric Bitters. So many feel they owe their restoration to health to the use of the Great Alterative and Tonic. If you are troubled with any disease of Kidneys, Liver or Stomach, of long or short standing, you will surely find relief in the use of Electric Bitters. Sold at 50c and $1. per bottle at LeGro & Lynde's Drug Store.

Card of Thanks.

If the proprietor of Kemp's Balsam should publish a card of thanks containing expressions of gratitude which come to him daily, from those who have been cured of severe throat and lung troubles by the use of Kemp's Balsam, it would fill a fair sized book. How much better to invite all to call on any druggist and get a free sample bottle that you may test for yourself its powers. Large bottles 50c and $1.00.

The Art Amateur for December is the finest number ever published of this excellent art magazine. Two charming colored plates are given—a woodland winter landscape with a man and dog trudging homeward just as the sun has set, and "Hearts are Trumps," a dainty young woman in an evening dress of blue tulle, playing cards. The black and white design include a beautiful female head for plaque decoration, a large and striking composition of "Shrikes and Blackberies," an admirable thistle design for a carved panel, an orchid decoration for a plate, a royal Worcester vase decoration, a charming figure design—"The Music Lesson"—after Watteau, for tapestry painting, and fine embroidery designs for a cushion and a piano stool. Articles of especial interest are those on "A Model New York Home," finely illustrated. Louis Quinze decoration, art work in jade, gifts in painted china and photographic Christmas cards. Flower painting, tapestry painting, Royal Worcester decoration and wood carving are among the practical topics particularly discussed. Amateur photography receives much attention, and the various editorial departments are vigorously maintained. It is a marvel that so much can be given for the small sum of thirty-five cents. CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA.

Would You Believe

The proprietor of Kemp's Balsam gives thousands of bottles away yearly? This mode of advertising would prove ruinous if the balsam was not a perfect cure for coughs and all throat and lung troubles. You will see the excellent effect after taking the first dose. Don't hesitate! Procure a bottle to-day to keep in your home or room for immediate or future use. Trial bottle free at all druggists. Large size 50c and $1.

Advice to Mothers.

Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of cutting teeth? If so, send at once and get a bottle of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures dysentery and diarrhœa, regulates the stomach and bowels, cures wind colic, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING is pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female nurses and physicians in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. WOOL UNDERWEAR.

We have purchased this week from the Agawam Company, formerly W. G. Medlicott Company, Morris street, Springfield, entire balance of their stock on hand at a great reduction from the cost of manufacture. We will offer in gentlemen's goods, some fine All Wool Shirts and Drawers, in colored and white, full fashioned, at $1 each. They never were sold for less than $18 per dozen. The retail price in the city is $2.25 each. A bargain we trust will be appreciated. We could get far more for the goods at wholesale in New York, but we would rather give our retail trade the benefit of this purchase. Please look them over as soon as possible.

Little Honora Mullally.

Poor little Honora Mullally,
  At the close of the Thanksgiving Day,
Was standing in front of her alley,
  A-watching some children at play.
Her gown was a wonderful garment,
  All patches from shoulder to hem,
And her hat and her shoes—well, I beg you'll excuse
  Any further remarks about them.

But poor little Honora Mullally
  Had a face just as bright as could be,
And no flower in meadow or valley
  Was ever as pretty as she.
And so thought an old woman, who, passing,
  Stopped a moment to smilingly say,
"Why, bless your dear heart, I am sure you have had A very good dinner to-day."

"Yis, indade," said Honora Mullally,
  "I did; for my friend Mrs Down
Had a hape of sweet-taters that Sallie,
  Her sister, baked lovely and brown,
Wid—oh, ma'am, if you could but have seen it!—
  The fattest and foinest of hins,
And they giv' me the gizzard and neck of that hin,
  And all of the sweet-tater skins."

"Mandy!" almost shrieked the elderly aunt, as she entered the parlor unexpectedly and found the young woman clasped in the arms of a young man who was kissing her with every indication that he had considerable practice, "what on earth does this mean?' "Nothing but an election bet, auntie," replied Amanda, with a look of heroic, martyr-like resignation on her lovely face. "I lost. Go on, Mr. McPelican. How many was that?"—Chicago Tribune.

A stout elderly lady was hanging by a strap and casting black looks at an inoffensive but ungallant dude who sat sucking the head of his cane; a sudden lurch of the car flung the lady upon him with great force. "Say, dash it, don't you know," exclaimed the youth, "you've crushed my foot to a jelley!" "It's not the first time I've made calf's-foot jelly," retorted the woman severely, as he vanished and she prepared to sit down.—Shoe and Leather Reporter.

The school-girl in India when studying her lesson screams at the top of her voice and rocks back and forth; and the more interested she becomes in her lesson the louder she screams and the harder she rocks. A stranger approaching one of these schools would imagine that a riot was in progress.

VALUE OF MOUNTAIN FORESTS.

The forest cover in the localities in which the bulk of the public timber lands is situated, notably on the Rocky mountains and the Pacific slopes, subserve a function which makes its material value of only secondary importance. It has become already evident that the denudation of mountain sides in the region under consideration has impaired the regularity of waterflow, upon which irrigation in the arid valleys below depends. Preserved in continuous reproductivity, the natural forests cover presents better and cheaper water reservoirs than the artificial structures for which millions of dollars are asked by the irrigators and ambitious engineers.

Shall we never learn from the experience of others? Are even the unmistakable results of forest destruction exhibited in our sister republic (France) of no avail to teach us wisdom? In France, too, where forest devastation had wrought untold misery to the people and damage to the agricultural conditions, the construction of vast reservoirs to retain the surplus waters in flood time, the construction of stupendous dams, or the embankment of river courses were suggested as remedies for the evil. But these were soon found not only to be impracticably costly, but to create new dangers, perhaps greater than the old, since the mountain reservoir might burst at any time and the embanked river was certain to rise to a dangerous level above the surrounding plain. The wiser plan of reforestation therefore was resorted to, with results which now have proved the wisdom of that measure.

Since the year 1860 the French government in co-operation with the local communities, has reforested over 250,000 acres of mountain lands at a cost of over $30,000,000, the state paying one-half. In addition, about 200,000 acres of sand dunes have been brought under forest cover. It is estimated that $34,000,000 more will have to be expended before all the lands devastated by forest destruction will be recuperated. The total annual appropriation for the forestry department of France in 1877 was $4,000,000, of which nearly $700,000 is for the "conservation and restoration of mountain districts by reforesting and resodding." Those forests also prevent or make less dangerous the avalanches and snow-slides which already have begun to occur in yearly increasing number and demand their sacrifice of human lives and of destroyed property. The interest of the nation, therefore, in properly administering this property reaches beyond that of any material advantage. —Government Forestry Report.

IN THE SICK ROOM.

A thermometer is indispensable in the sick room and the temperature should be carefully regulated by its indications. An open fire is the best ventilator when it can be had, sometimes this is impossible, then the nurse must exercise her ingenuity with the means at her command. If there is a fireplace, a lighted lamp can be set in it in summer when a fire would make the room to warm. When the room is heated by a register or a coil of hot water pipes, or a close stove, a metal dish filled with boiling hot water and put where it will keep hot will moisten the atmosphere by the steam it gives off. A window should be arranged to open an inch or two at the top and a strip of baize, or coarse flannel tacked over the aperture. This will admit a constant supply of fresh air with no draught. A screen can be placed between the window and the bed if the cool air strikes directly upon it. The proper temperature at which the room should be kept varies with the nature of the illness. It is lower for fevers than for diseases of the chest or throat, and in some cases, as rheumatism, may be governed by the feelings of the patient. The wards of a general hospital are kept at 68°. It must be remembered that a person in bed does not take cold unless exposed to a strong draught, or violent changes of temperature, or the body being suddenly cooled by throwing aside the bed clothes. —Elizabeth Robinson Scovil, in Good Housekeeping.

"What is a word?" asks a gentleman. Well that depends. If it is "a word to the people" it is generally about a column article in a newspaper for which said newspaper does not get a cent. If it is "one word more" in a sermon it amounts to half an hour's recapitulation of what has already been said, including a collection.—Stray.

A FAIR TRIAL OF HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA for scrofula, salt rheum, or any affection caused by impure blood, is sufficient to convince any one of the superior and peculiar curative powers of this medicine. The following statement is right to the point.

"My daughter Mary was afflicted with scrofulous sore neck from the time she was 22 months old till she became 6 years of age. Lumps formed in her neck, causing great annoyance, and two of them, after growing to the size of a pigeon's egg, broke and discharged. One became a running sore for three years. We thought we would give Hood's Sarsaparilla a thorough trial. We began with it in January, and in a few months, after she had taken five bottles, all supperation had ceased. We then waited three months, when, as a new lump was beginning to form, we again gave her Hood's Sarsaparilla. After she had taken less than two bottles the lump and all indications of scrofula had entirely disappeared, and now she seems to be a healthy child."—J. S. Carlile, Nauright, N. J.

A PERSON CANNOT ENJOY

CHRISTMAS

If out of harmony with everything that makes the day happy. This

ANNIVERSARY

Calls out the best side of human nature— we think of others and forget self. Those who say "This Christmas business is only a craze," in so saying admits that society owes but little to them.

We believe in it from principle, and then as a matter of business prepare for it.

Thousands will now visit Springfield for things more novel, useful and ornamental, because its large local trade requires immense and varied supplies. This will prove a benefit to those living in smaller towns near by, where they cannot handle such stocks.

We desire every person visiting our city to avail themselves of our invitation to call and see our Elegant line of Diamonds, Watches, Clocks, Silver-Ware, Jewelry, and all articles to be found in such stores. You can enjoy yourself and we shall be pleased in seeing you have found pleasure, even though not ready to buy.

We are prepared to show a stock equalled by few outside of the largest cities. Our Diamonds are brilliant, genuine, and fill the eye. Ladies' elegantly engraved solid Gold Watches for $25 up, (twelve styles) are both useful and ornamental. Rings with elegant settings, engraved or plain band, $2.50, and are for Ladies, Gentlemen and Children. A gold thimble for $3.50 is quite a nice present. You can throw in a solid Silver thimble and not feel it—think of it: only 25 cents.

What would your boy say if he found a real watch, stem-winder, silver watch, $10, nickel $2.50—hanging by, as one of the gifts, or your wife say to be woke up early Christmas Morn, by a silver toned Cathedral bell clock. Would'nt you get $6 in pleasure from it?

Now there is no age, class or condition of our people who cannot find something adapted to their taste, within their means, suited for ornament or use in our stock.

Be sure to call and inspect our goods.

CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER.

The Purest and Best.

Is made only of strictly pure grape cream of tartar, strictly pure bicarbonate of soda, and a small portion of flour as a preservative, nothing else whatever, and is warranted entirely free from alum, ammonia, phosphates, lime, and all other adulterations frequently found in baking powders. The character of materials used, their purity, and the nicety of their combination, render Cleveland's superior baking the most healthful and most economical in use, and it always affords wholesome, nutritious, and delicious food.

It is recommended for purity, healthfulness and efficiency by government and state chemists, chemists of boards of health, and professors in institutions of learning throughout the country.

AS GOES TEXAS, SO GOES THE COUNTRY.

* The following convincing and enthusiastic lines, written by a resident of the "Lone Star" state, are copied from a Texas paper, and will be read with interest and pleasure by thousands whose experience enables them to vouch for the fact that there is as much truth as poetry in the composition:

THEY ARE COMING.

They are coming from the mansions of aristocratic "swells,"
Where the merry music maketh delectation for the belles,
They are coming from the houses of the merchants, and the men
Who are preachers, teachers, scientists and those who wield the pen;
They are coming from the villas where bankers love to dwell,
From the happy, smiling cottages in dingle and in dell;
From the cities, towns and hamlets, and from every home and haunt,
To buy EMERSON PIANOS, which will "fill a long felt want."

They are coming, the mechanics, each a man who toils and strives,
They are coming, the wage-earners, with their children and their wives,
They are coming, careless cowboys, dapper clerks, and drummers, too,
Each one bound to buy an EMERSON—no other make will do.
For solid happiness and peace each from its tone derives
And poetry begins to smile into prosaic lives,
And they troop to GOGGAN BROTHERS or to one of their four branches.
Those men who live in cities and those dwellers upon ranches.

And the EMERSONS are coming from the city by the sea,
The town that had a picnic when they spoiled King George's tea;
They are coming by the car-load to fill the great demand;
They are coming down to Galveston, by sea as well as land;
They are coming, too, to Waco, and to Houston, and to San Antonio, and Austin, always foremost in the van—
Five citadels of EMERSON, upheld against all others,
By the Texas "Gog and Magog," but known here as GOGGAN BROTHERS.

Galveston, October, 1888. VIOLAS TOUT.

THE EMERSON PIANO COMPANY have removed to their elegant new ware-rooms, No. 174 Tremont street, Boston, Mass., where a full line of their latest styles in upright and square pianos may be found. 4-34

CURES QUICKLY,
PLEASANT, PURE.

A POWERFUL TONIC.

A specific for Malaria, Rheumatism, Nervous Prostration. The most scientific and successful Blood Purifier. Superior to quinine.

Mr. Lode Hoornbeck, of the U. S. Ship Kearsarge, writes that he meets people almost daily who have used or are using Kaskine, and who affirm from experience that it is superior to quinine in tonic and curative properties, and produces no subsequent bad effects.

Mr. John C. Scarborough, Selma, N. C., writes: "I got malaria in the Southern army, and for a dozen years suffered from its debilitating effects. I was terribly run down when I heard of Kaskine, the new quinine. It helped me at once. I gained 35 pounds."

Kaskine can be taken without any special medical advice. $1.00 per bottle, or six bottles for $5. Sold by druggists or sent by mail on receipt of price. KASKINE CO.,
168 Doane St., New York.

MASON & HAMLIN.

The cabinet organ was introduced in its present form by Mason & Hamlin in 1861. Other makers followed in the manufacture of the instruments, but the Mason & Hamlin organs have always maintained their supremacy as the best in the world.

Mason & Hamlin offer, as demonstration of the unequalled excellence of their organs, the fact that at all of the great World's Exhibitions, since that of Paris, 1867, in competition with best makers of all countries, they have invariably taken the highest honors. Illustrated catalogues free.

ORGANS
$22 to $900.

Mason & Hamlin do not hesitate to make extraordinary claim for their pianos, that they are superior to all others. They recognize the high excellence achieved by other leading makers in the art of piano making, but still claim superiority. This they attribute solely to the remarkable improvement introduced by them in the year 1882, and now known as the "Mason & Hamlin Piano Stringer," by the use of which is secured the greatest possible purity and refinement of tone, together with great increased capacity for standing in tune and other important advantages.

PIANOS

BOSTON WEEKLY JOURNAL.

AN IDEAL FAMILY NEWSPAPER.
ALL THE NEWS.

READING SUITED TO EVERY HOME FOR ONE DOLLAR A YEAR—THE BOSTON WEEKLY JOURNAL, WHICH HAS SO OFTEN VINDICATED ITS CLAIM OF BEING A DISTINCTIVELY NEW ENGLAND NEWSPEPER

Both as to representative position and popular estimate, gives assurance of retaining and enhancing, during the year which is at hand, those qualities for which the past has given vouchers.

Notwithstanding its increased merits, the price has been kept down to the low figure at which it was placed a few years ago—ONE DOLLAR a year, including postage—making the cost of the weekly issue, with its comprehensive resume of news, miscellany and comment, less than two cents a week.

CLUB RATES.

The inducements to those getting up clubs will continue to be of a very favorable character.

10 copies (and one extra to the originator of the club)......$10
20 copies (and two extra to the originator of the club)...... 20

ONE COPY FREE FOR EVERY TEN SUBSCRIBERS.

In view of these rates and the quality and quantity of reading matter provided, the subscribers may feel warranted in claiming that they have the

CHEAPEST NEW ENGLAND NEWSPAPER.

A journal fit to enter every home is provided, free from the sensational and meretricious matter which mars a good deal of what is regarded as the popular periodicals of the day, and yet, as a contemporary has testified, "foremost in fulness of cleanly news and in the sagacious and courteous expression of its general convictions."

The publishers take pleasure in announcing that "THE KENNEBECKER"

Will contribute a series of articles, beginning with the first number in January, entitled,

"THE CRUISE OF THE WITCH OF THE SEA."
A Voyage to Oceanica and its Island Continent.

This will be one of the most interesting and instructive narratives of the experience of the well-known Kennebecker that has yet appeared.

BOTH THE GENERAL AND SPECIAL MATTERS OF INTEREST

To THE JOURNAL'S wide-spread constituency of readers will be supplied as heretofore, with industry and discrimination, including New England news and gleanings, notes and comments on the interests of the diverse industrial avocations, agricultural, manufacturing, commercial and transportation: reports on markets, trade and labor. Rambling talks and essays on home topics, correspondence from various parts of the world by our own correspondents, congressional news, political jottings, editorials on topics of living interest, poems, sketches, miscellaneous and household matters.

The always readable contributions of M. E. B., the Domesticana Articles, and the letters and sketches of others whose names have been welcome in the Weekly columns in the past, will continue to enliven them.

The year 1889 bids fair to be one of unique significance in the political life of the nation, marking, as it does, the return of the Republican party to power after a four years' interregnum of Democratic policy which has only served to highten by contrast the people's appreciation of what it has done in the past, and to emphasize the vital need of its future. The transition from the rule of the Fiftieth to that of the Fifty-first Congress, and from the Democratic Presidency to the Republican, with all that these imply, will make Washington a centre of constant and increasing interest during the year; and THE JOURNAL will therefore be fortunate in having in its Washington correspondent, "Webb," a contributor whose vigilant outlook for news and discerning the interpretation of current events are rarely rivalled.

Our special correspondents in Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont will contribute as heretofore their timely expositions of matters in New England.

The recent political campaign, like that of four years ago, has brought to the surface many doubtful and untrustworthy political guides, but the readers of THE JOURNAL can testify that they have found in it a consistent and unwavering exponent of Republicanism. THE JOURNAL will continue to be thoroughly American in its political principles and to maintain the policy of industrial as well as political independence; but while firm in the defense of the doctrines which have been accorded an added indorsement by the nation, it will be uniformly fair in its treatment of adversaries, and in the full and unbiased presentation of facts.

While giving due attention to the purport of occurrences at home, the foreign field, which promises to be of marked interest during the year 1889, will be comprehensively scanned and outlined; and, in particular, those still pending controversies which affect our relations with Canada and European powers will be the subject of close observation.

THE WEEKLY JOURNAL is issued every Thursday morning. Specimen copies will be sent to any address.

Children of the Rich and Poor Contrasted.

The rich man's son inherits lands,
And piles of brick, and stone, and gold;
And he inherits soft, white hands,
And tender flesh which fears the cold,
Nor dares to wear a garment old;
A heritage, it seems to me,
One scarce would wish to hold in fee.

The rich man's son inherits cares—
The bank may break, the factory burn,
A breath may burst his bubble shares;
And soft, white hands could hardly earn
A living that would serve his turn;
A heritage, it seems to me,
One scarce would wish to hold in fee.

What does the poor man's son inherit?
Stout muscles and a sinewy heart,
A hardy frame, a hardier spirit;
King of two hands he does his part
In every useful toil and art;
A heritage, it seems to me,
A king might wish to hold in fee.

What does the poor man's son inherit?
A patience learned of being poor,
Courage, if sorrow comes, to bear it,
A fellow feeling that is sure
To make an outcast bless his door;
A heritage, it seems to me,
A king might wish to hold in fee.

Both, heirs to some six feet of sod,
Are equal in the earth at last,
Both children of the same dear God,
Prove title to your heirship vast
By records of a well-fill'd past;
A heritage, it seems to me,
Well worth a life to hold in fee.

WARE WEDNESDAY EVENING CLUB.

A Paper by E. H. Gilbert, Read Tuesday Evening, November 27, 1888.

"The Character of the Early Settlers of Ware" is the comprehensive or narrow subject, according as one views it, that has been accorded me upon which to address you this evening. Were I to adopt the comprehensive view I should try to deliver an address upon the institutions and religious bent of the settlers, but in this I should make but a poor copy of what hundreds all over New England have done before me in treating of their own localities or of New England in general, for what differences can be found between one and another part of New England are largely those of degree and not of kind. The religion of one was the religion of all. The hardships of one were the hardships of all, and I shall not attempt to enter a field that has been so ploughed and reploughed here among us for the last two centuries. We can only say: A stern climate, stern and relentless surroundings, and wildernesses resonant only with savage whoop and nature's cries, were calculated to aggravate, not soften a stern creed which had opposed itself to the debauchery and licentiousness masquerading for centuries in Old Europe under the name of "The Church," and if we find no mirth and humor in Old England which that period had not relegated to the lowest slums and quarters of crowded cities, what must we expect to find in New England, and especially in such an outlying district of it as Ware, where a cruel winter, the dangers and solitudes of the wilderness, and a stubborn soil contended for mastery over a poor uncultivated mass of settlers, principally emigrants from the old world, driven by stern necessity upon lands of which, tradition tells us, an early visitant penned these since familiar lines:—

> "Dame Nature once in making land,
> A refuse had of stones and sand,
> She viewed it o'er, then threw it down
> Betwixt Coy's Hill and Belchertown
> And said: 'You paltry stuff, lie there,
> And form a town, and call it Ware."

Were I, on the contrary, to adopt the narrower view and write a condensed account of individual character and the humdrum detail of every-day life, I fear I should succeed only in administering a sleeping potion to my indulgent hearers by a dry mass of record and fact in which the necessity of gaining a living was paramount and all-engrossing. Then, too, the early settlers, and those even who retained childish memories of them, have long since passed away and left no sign save such as may be found in the dry dust of parish and town register, and such scanty recollections and reminiscences of them as existed have long since been gathered with a gentler touch than mine and incorporated into the historical address delivered by Wm. Hyde at the dedication of the town hall, Mar. 31st, 1847. The materials for this sketch of different individuals were collected in a day far better adapted for obtaining such than the present, and while some of those who retained vivid memories of the early settlers and their character were still on earth. If, therefore, I make only such few generalizations as seem warranted from external evidence, together with a few facts that may bear upon such, and rely for details upon Mr. Hyde, I trust that the fare, though meagre, may prove not wholly unappetizing.

By external evidence I mean such as can be found in the records, that will bear upon the life and surroundings of these pioneers, and lead the searcher fairly to infer certain things regarding their character and environment. Thus, when I find the General Court twice placing a restriction upon grants of land whereby no right or title could be acquired to them by the grantee without the building thereon within a certain specified limit of time, usually five years, of a house "at least eighteen feet square and seven feet stud,"* and without in addition the bringing of "six acres to ploughed land or English grass." I think we may justly infer from this somewhat their standard of living, and conclude that the means of many were so straitened that they would be likely to eke out their existence with less accommodations, did the law allow. When I find the Magoons begging to be set off from Palmer to Ware, and alleging as one reason that the road from them to Ware River Parish was "naturally good,"† I think we may justly feel that a whole treatise upon the early roads in this vicinity is contained in that word "naturally," and I feel certain that very little more was necessary to constitute a road here at that early date than a bare passage-way for man or beast leading to convenient fords or rude bridges, and probably impassible except on the main county thoroughfares to any but pack animals or foot passengers.

Someone has remarked: "The first need of a civilized community is roads; the second need, better roads, and the third the best roads attainable." Holding this remark to contain much essential truth, we may use roads therefore as a gauge by which to judge the standard of physical comfort and civilization which a community has attained, and such an application indicates extreme poverty and straitened circumstances among our pioneers. It is true, as early as 1738, allusion is made, in the description of a piece of land allotted to Jeremiah Omstead, to a bridge over Ware river, probably just above the upper dam of the Otis Co., at the point where the grove of Wm. C. Eaton juts out into the river, and where the remains of an old abutment may still be seen when the pond is drawn, but this was upon a county road from Brookfield to Hadley, and in all probability was built before the formation of settlements here in 1728. No allusion to appropriations for the repairs of any roads occur in the parish records for a number of years after its incorporation in 1741, and then only at times, with longs gaps between. In 1768, £2 was voted to provide rumb for raising the bridge over Ware river, perhaps the bridge above alluded to. Another county road ran from Brookfield to Northampton along the southern border of the town, and crossed the river not far from the house of Gideon Lamberton, but, outside of these county roads, we find none mentioned to any extent, and apparently what there were were left in much the state nature had created them.

By much the same process that we gain an insight into the physical condition of these individuals by an examination of their external life as related by them in dwelling, road and bridge, we may learn what was the degree of their mental, moral and religious advancement by noting in the records those things that pertain to these qualities. It is in no spirit of depreciation that I proceed to tell the truth about the early settlers. It is in no carping vein that I strive to show briefly their characteristics and surroundings. Their whole life, physical, mental and moral—was comprised in the one word, poverty. They came, some from the North of Ireland, some from older settlements on this side of the Atlantic, not with banners flying and trumpets blowing. They came not even as the vanguard of victorious and enterprising commerce, backed by skill and capital. They came, many of them as squatters and without legal warrant, driven in by the lash of that hardest of all taskmasters, necessity, and content could they but succeed in preventing soul and body from parting company. Their substance was little or nothing, their mental equipment and religious advancement the same. There were undoubtedly among them men far above the average of what I am describing, and the struggles of this handful, without town government worthy of the name, to collect money and build a meeting house, shows that they possessed those greatest of requisites to success, earnestness and perseverence. The spirit in them was willing, but the flesh was weak. They voted most generously sums all the way from £100 to £200 annually from 1744 to 1749 for the support of a minister, yet they rarely were able to meet their promises with fulfillment. The acceptance by Mr. Grindall Rawson of the call to act as their first pastor in 1750 was couched in the following words, and one cannot but feel, in reading it, how poor and unattractive must have been their condition when, in a new land, where hardships and privations were the common lot of New England, one probably inured to all ordinary ones, could pour forth, in such a document, these forebodings:

> "My Brethren—Since you were so unanimous in your invitation of me to settle with you in the Gospel Ministry (there being not so much as one negative vote) upon seriously addressing myself to the throne of grace, as I trust for direction, in the great affair, after proper reflection upon the difficulties you would be likely to be thrown into upon my leaving you, notwithstanding the great discouragements in regard to my outward subsistence at present and the many satisfactions of life of which I foresee I must deny myself more I believe than you are sensible of or is any way necessary for me to recite, which have set very heavy upon my mind, and have for a long time preyed upon my spirits, and had I have hearkened to the struggles of animal nature, would soon have determined me to have left you, tho' in the greatest confusion, yet a sense of duty and a desire of promoting your everlasting peace and welfare, have counterpoised all other difficulties, so that I have concluded to comply with your request and accept of your invitation, etc. etc."
> GRINDALL RAWSON.

It is not my purpose here to enter into the merits of the controversy that ensued between Mr. Rawson and the parish. He tendered his resignation in 1754 after bitter controversies and contentions which seem in very great measure to have arisen from the inability or unwillingness of the majority of the parishoners to properly support a minister, and the last mention in the records of the Rev. Grindall Rawson is contained in the vote of the parish to appoint a committee whose function was to take measures to recover from Mr. Rawson what they could of the money advanced as a settlement upon him at the beginning of his ministry. Soon after the incorporation as a precinct in 1741 they attempted to build a meeting-house, but although they appointed committee after committee to select a site, and although they selected referee after referee to choose one for them, and although some twenty or more precinct meetings were held to determine the same, little or no advance was made, as the defeated party in each attempt declined to submit or be assessed for their share in the expense. The church was finally erected, or partially so, at least, as near as possible to the geographical center of the precinct, in 1750 and 51. Mr. Hyde says: "It was some years however before the house was completed, if it was ever done." In 1760, 1762 and 1766 votes are on record, not for repairs, but for such works as plastering, boarding etc., necessary for the completion of the edifice. A majority, or at least a very respectable minority, living within the parish jurisdiction appears to have been loath to come within parish control or pay taxes for support of precinct or parish, and the paramont reason for exchanging the weaker form of parish government for the stronger one of district government in 1761 seems to have been to bring the unruly under an authority which the former form of government was unable to give, and to make the recalcitrant ones bear their due share of the expense of church support.

Our modern idea of church support is voluntary, and except in some few particulars we have eliminated church from state and state from church, but in spite of their somewhat narrow views let us recognize the great elements of perseverance and earnestness that dominated in their character, as shown in the early efforts of those first settlers to advance the cause of religion. Nearly all of the early records are devoted to what we should now term ecclesiastical details, rather than secular. Such as we should now consider town matters occupied but a secondary place, and the first business, after electing town officers, in which were included parish officers as well, was to provide for the wants temporal of the church. There can be no doubt what was the dominant influence and motive that banded them into community and led them to seek a common form of district government.

Of poetry, there was nothing in their lives: it was all prose. Prosody was absent from their grammar, and orthography, etymology and syntax rarely appeared, and then in an erratic way and pruned according to the fancy of the individual using them. They had occasion to spell rum frequently, and often they spelt it with a "b" added, perhaps as a synonym of that smack which I have no doubt attended the end of the original article.

In 1787, during the Shays Rebellion, the Rev. Mr. Judd, pastor of the flock in Ware, appears to have been a stout supporter of the majesty of State, which, if tradition is to be relied on, the majority of the good people of Ware were not. He is said to have remarked that if the Devil was governor of Massachusetts he ought to be implicitly obeyed. It took a parish vote of 63 to 13, two ecclesiastical councils, 381 meals at 7d to 9d a head, and ten gallons of rumb to wipe out that heresy and unsettle him. Let us hope the item of comestibles unsettled no other dignitaries of the church at that time. At the second council, held some little time after the first, there was allowed payment to William Paige, among other items, for four gallons of new rum at three shillings per gallon, and for two gallons of old rum at 5 s. per gallon. Mr. Hyde remarks: "This was the council when they drank better rum and more of it," to which however we must add that it couldn't have tasted as well, for they left off the orthographical smack from the spelling.

The temperanee principles of these earlier settlers will never find a place, I fear, in the platform of the Prohibition party. The records of the town are blistered with allusions to spirituous subjects which were secondary to, but often in conjunction with, the spiritual topics that preceded them. Let me here quote Mr. Hyde regarding the condition of the town in this respect at the beginning of what may be termed the mill era:

> At the time the factory operations commenced here, in 1823, 1824 and 1825, the use of intoxicating liquors had reached a point probably never known before or since. Then all used them with scarce an exception. The laborers in shops, on the buildings, at the dam and canal had every man his bottle. It was nothing uncommon to draw a hogshead of rum, and sometimes two, daily at the factory store; not all for our inhabitants, for large quantities went north in exchange for lumber and other materials brought in.

From the above generalization let us turn to what has been transcribed by Mrs. Helen B. Root from the recollections of Mr. Benjamin Cummings of the early settlers, and which has filtered down to my hands through the kindly medium of Miss Florence Lawton and Mr. C. H. Morse:

> Recollections of Mr. Benjamin Cummings, who was born in Ware in 1777, and died in 1876, very near 100 years old. His first wife was the first person buried in Ware village, in 1826. He saw, many years after his dismissal, the first minister of Ware, Rev. Grindall Rawson, who was settled in 1751. The second was Rev. Mr. Thayer, and the third was Rev. Mr. Judd. * * * He (Mr. Judd) was said to have been a lieutenant in the Continental army before. This was at the time of Shays Rebellion, and many of the Ware people were Shays men. Some of them marched with him to the Worcester Court House and prevented the court from sitting. His father's house was a depot for supplies to those who went. * * * On coming from Worcester the Ware boys went with Shays forces to Springfield, but the court people met them at Armory Hill and fired upon them, also pointed the cannon at them. A number of them were killed and James Gilmore was wounded. He was the grandfather of Frank Gilmore. Mr. Cummings's father kept the store at Ware in his own house, which was near a large rock between the houses of L. Gilbert and J. Beaman, and there sold molasses, tea, coffee, rum and sugar. Benjamin's father was at Burgoyne's surrender. The British before giving up threw away their powder and cartridges, that our army might not have the benefit of them. Mr. Cummings picked up enough to last through his son's boyhood, and with them the latter shot many a partridge in the pine woods where the gas house now stands, and from these woods the timber was taken to build the old wooden mill of Gilbert and Stevens.

For the character of individual settlers and a brief sketch of each of the principal ones I must refer all those suffiently interested to the historical address of Mr. Hyde before alluded to. I cannot improve upon it at this late day, either in scope or accuracy, and it would hardly be in keeping with my short address were I to read it to you now.

"Tempora mutant et nos in illos mutamur." Let us be thankful that so it is, and that the march of progress has improved our condition materially and mentally, and never forget, in our critical study of the past, how much our present owes to it, and to those who were actors in it.

Change, growth and developement are Nature's law. "Great oaks from little acorns grow," and to-day we are sharers in the bounties and advantages of a beautiful and prosperous town filled with comfort, knowledge, and,—let us hope—happiness, and while we are thus let us remember kindly the small seed and give thanks that it has taken root, lived, and matured into such a sturdy tree.

A LONGFELLOW STORY.

A "Spanish Student," being wearied by his long search for "Evangeline," was resting at the "Wayside Inn" "One April Day;" "From the Open Window" of his room he could see "The Windmill" near "The Bridge Over the Brook." Even under the "Light of the Stars" everything lay silent and beautiful. The breakers on the beach near by tossed and roared as though they wished to divulge "The Secret of the Sea." As he sat musing, a ruddy glow on the sky attracted his notice. On closer investigation he ascertained that it was caused by "The Fire of Driftwood." As in all old houses, there was "The Haunted Chamber," in which it was reported that "The Footsteps of Angels" were heard in "The Twilight." The student determined to explore this chamber, as he thought his adventure would not be worth relating with "Something Left Undone." He entered the room at "Night," and as he was groping his way, he felt a touch upon his arm, and, turning, he beheld "The Skeleton in Armor," who said in awful accents, "Beware." He took "The Warning" and fled from the room. As there were no "Witnesses" to certify to the truth, he maintained a strict silence concerning his experience.

The next morning, being passionately fond of beauty, he arose at "Daybreak" to see the "Sunrise on the Hills." As he was walking through the town, he met "The Village Blacksmith," who was singing of "The Happiest Land." After greeting him the student walked down the street and stood beneath the shade of the "Hemlock Tree," where he could watch the "Children" sporting near "The Castle by the Sea." At the foot of the tree the water bubbled up and he followed it until he saw the union of "The Brook and the Wave."

Being overcome by "Weariness," he returned to the inn, but walked "In the Garden" among the "Flowers" before entering the house. As he stepped into the spacious hall, he noticed "The Old Clock on the Stairs" for the first time. He passed into the long dining room to take "Consolation" with the landlard.

"The Day is Done," and he goes to his room, and, as a fitting close to his pleasures, he sits "By the Fireside" and reads "The Psalm of Life" before resting.—Marian C. White.

BRAVE DE COSMOS.

The longest speech on record is probably the one made by Mr. De Cosmos, a member of the Legislature of British Columbia, some time ago. A bill was pending which, if passed, would deprive many settlers of their lands, and the temper of the majority made it certain that it would pass. The Legislature was within a day and a half of the hour of its final adjournment and the vote was about to be taken.

At this juncture De Cosmos rose to address the body. It was 10 o'clock in the morning, and the members thought he would finish in an hour or two. The clock struck 11, 12 and 1, but the speaker kept right on. How long would he speak! The members in a spirit of fun, omitted to adjourn for dinner, but De Cosmos spoke on without a break. At 6 o'clock he was on the floor. He was forced by the speaker to stick to the question, and was not allowed to pause except to take a drink of water. The majority decided to continue the session through the night, slipping out in small parties to eat and sleep. Still, without faltering, the orator poured forth his torrent of words. This was the situation at midnight: and also when the morning sun flooded the hall with the light of day. As the hour hand of the clock pointed to 12, the limit prescribed by law for the session had arrived, and the Legislature stood adjourned sine die. At the last stroke of 12 the brave De Cosmos stopped in the middle of a sentence and fell fainting in his seat. He had spoken, standing on feet his, 26 hours. His eyes were bleared and red, and his parched lips were cracked and running blood. He was nearly dead, but he had prevented the bill from becoming a law, and had saved the settlers their homes. De Cosmos may never be heard again as an orator, but this single speech is enough to make him famous.—Atlanta Constitution.

JEWS AMONG CROWS.

Farmer Crowder had finished planting his corn, but his heart was heavy. He knew the crows were whetting their bills to pull up the corn as soon as it appeared above the surface.

"I'll tell you how to get away with the crows," said Neighbor Stokes.

"How?"

"Get you a gallon of mean whisky and soak some corn in it till it gets full of the stuff and then scatter it broadcast in the field. The black rascals will eat it and get drunk and then you can catch 'em and pull their heads off. That beats pizen or shootin'."

In a few days Farmer Crowder met his friend Stokes.

"Well, how's craps?" queried Stokes.

"My corn's bodaciously ruint," replied Crowder, dolefully. "I tried that 'ere scheme o' your'n, and it's a humbug. I soaked the corn and scattered it one day, and next mornin' I went down to the new groun' to see how it'd worked."

"Found 'em drunk, eh?"

"Found nothin'. I hearn a devil of a fuss down nigh the branch, and went to see what it was: thar was a dad-blasted old crow what had gathered up all the whisky corn an' had it on a stump, an' he was retailin' it to the others, givin' 'em one grain o' that sort for three grains o' my planted corn, and dinged ef they hadn't clawed up the field by sections."—The Atlanta Journal.

WEATHER FORECASTING.

I observe in the columns of the Journal and other papers a sharp arraignment of the weather bureau for not foretelling the storm of Sunday, Nov. 25. The assertion is made that there is too much "militarism," whatever that may mean, but not enough "meterological knowledge." These statements are doubtless true. But it is also true that no knowledge, meterological or otherwise, is at present attainable for the foretelling such a storm as the one referred to. The storms that reach our Atlantic coast have two different starting places. The by far greater number are generated in the Rocky Mountain region and come sweeping across the continent. Their general course and rate of advance are readily deduced from reports sent to Washington several times a day. Certain elements of uncertainty enter into all these calculations. For instance, a storm may "wear itself out" before it reaches us; it may be retarded in its rate of advance; or it may be deflected north or south of its line of advance.

Occasionally a storm is generated in the region of the West Indies. These are our very worst storms, for they are uncertain, furious and destructive. Such a storm may follow any one of these courses. It may ascend the Mississippi valley and travel eastwardly and so reach us; its line of march may be to the eastward of the Gulf stream and so not touch our coast at all, and Europe will receive the force; it may, after passing Key West, be deflected and strike our coast. Now the government has not stationed observers along the Gulf Stream with telegraph connection with Washington to give due warning when such a storm has been headed for our coast. It may be suspected that this is at present impossible.

The storm of Sunday, Nov. 25, was of precisely this kind. The weather bureau is not at all to blame for its failure to forecast it. If the time comes when it will be possible to station observation vessels on the western edge of the Gulf Stream and connect them with Washington by electricity, then and then only can such storms be foretold.

The weather bureau has done too good a work to be blamed for lack of an impossible perfection. E. A. Perry.

A SUBTERRANEAN RIVER.

A sink hole has been discovered on the St. Paul and Duluth road at Mission Creek, a few miles south of Hinckley, Minn., by workmen who were raising the grade. Soon after the filling in began the track sank nearly out of sight. The track must have been sustained on a mass of roots and vegetable matter floating on the water below, that gave way under the additional weight. For three weeks past more than 100 car-loads of filling a day have been dumped into a space not more than 90 feet wide, and the track is in fair shape again at this point, but another spot a short distance away is sinking out of sight. The surface of the swamp is seamed and cracked in all directions. In one place a pile of ties has been carried 40 feet away. In holes that have been opened sounding lines have been dropped down 35 feet before touching bottom, and a number of curious specimens of fish have been caught. It is believed there is a subterranean river, as the fish caught do not live in the swamp pools.

LADIES OF THE WHITE HOUSE.

The youngest person to enter the office of president was U. S. Grant, at 47, and the youngest wife was Frances Folsom Cleveland, at 22, the bride of the White House. The youngest presiding lady of the mansion was Elizabeth Tyler Waller, at 19, daughter of John Tyler, President Harrison's successor, and the first vice to come into possession of the office to which he was constitutional heir presumptive.

The prospective president, when he enters the office to which he has been chosen, will be about midway between the fifty-fifth and the fifty-sixth year of his life, or about the age of Martin Van Buren, Zachary Taylor and Rutherford B. Hayes. Mrs. Harrison will enter the executive mansion as presiding lady at about the age of Abigail Smith Adams, wife of the second, and Eliza McArdle Johnson, wife of the seventeenth president of the United States.

Since Mrs. Washington inaugurated the social regime of the president's household at New York, then the capital, there have been thirty-two presiding ladies. Eighteen of these were the wives of the presidents: Mrs. Washington, Mrs. Adams, Mrs. Madison, Mrs. Monroe, Mrs. J. Q. Adams, Mrs. Harrison, Mrs. Letitia Christian Tyler, who died while her husband was in office, and Mrs. Julia Gardner Tyler, who married the president in New York when she was but a year more than the age of Mrs. Cleveland; Mrs. Polk, Mrs. Taylor, Mrs. Fillmore, Mrs. Pierce, Mrs. Lincoln, Mrs. Johnson, Mrs. Grant, Mrs. Hayes, Mrs. Garfield, and Mrs. Cleveland. The remaining fourteen presiding ladies were: Jefferson's daughter, Martha Jefferson Randolph, or when absent, Mrs. Secretary of State Madison; Mrs. Emily Donelson, wife of President Jackson's private secretary, and Sara Yorke Jackson, wife of his foster son; Angelica Singleton Van Buren, the wife of the president's son and private secretary; Elizabeth Tyler Waller, the president's daughter, and Mrs. Cooper Tyler, his son's wife; Elizabeth Taylor Bliss, a married daughter of President Taylor; Mary Abigail Fillmore, a daughter of President Fillmore; Harriett Lane, the niece of James Buchanan; Mrs. Martha Johnson Patterson and Mary Johnson Stover, married daughters of President Johnson; Mary Arthur McElroy and Rose Elizabeth Cleveland, sisters of the last two presidents.

UNCLE JOE'S MONOPOLY.

Uncle Joe is one of the most ingenious darkies in Washington. The other day he contrived to make a rude wheelbarrow for himself. The morning after it was completed he went out to try it, but was dismayed to find it gone.

"I'clah to gracious!" he exclaimed, "I knowed dat wah a mighty nice wheelbarrow, but I didn't spec' it gwine to run off by its own se'f."

He presently found it in use in Jake Turner's garden.

"Jake, what you doin' wid my new wheelbarrow, I'd like to know?"

"W'y, Uncle Joe, 'taint none uv yo'rn. Hit belongs to de community. Fer you to keep it would be a monopoly."

"Haint I done made it?" cried Uncle Joe. "An' haint it mine?"

"No, it haint," said Jake. "Twuz yo'rn afo' the wheel was put on to it, but when you put the wheel on you done los' it."

"What's the wheel got to do wid it?"

"W'y, you see, I done hear Cun'l Beck, the Kaintucky senator, say dat when a man writ a book 'twuz his'n, but ef he print it 'twuzn't his'n. An' printin' makes a book go, an' a wheel makes a wheelbarrow go. Cun'l Beck said that it was a monopoly to give a man the book he writ arter it was printed. So I sez it's monopoly for Uncle Joe to have his wheelbarrow when the wheel's on."

"You g'lung," said Uncle Joe, going off with the wheelbarrow; "I done made it, and it's mine, wheel ur no wheel. What good's a wheelbarrow 'thout a wheel?"

"Well, what good's a book that you can't print? An' Cun'l Beck he said—"

"Oh, you shet up, Jake. Some niggars gits so smart it makes 'em fools. An' as fer Cun'l Beck, I don't want to be dis'specful, but ef he ever said any sech stuff I don't reckon he meant it. Any way, this ain't Kaintucky, an' ef you go off with my wheelbarrow again I'll have you tuk up. You heah, now!"—Edward Eggleston, in Washington Post.

Though it was his misfortune and not his fault that he stuttered, it was amusing to hear him in a love passage.

"Do you really care so very much for me, darling? she softly queried.

"Dud—dud—does a dud—dud—duck cuc—cuc—care for water, sus—sus—sweet? Indeed, I dud—dud—do, dud—darling! You are the one pup—pup—priceless pup—pup pearl among—pup—pup—pearls, pup—pup Polly! You are que—que—queen of my heart, dud—dud—darling! The pup—pup power that bub—bub—bends me like a reed at thy fuf—fuf—feet."

And she apparently believed him.—Banner of Light.

A young married couple in Albany began housekeeping with a girl of Hibernian extraction as housemaid. The second day she nearly threw her mistress into fits by entering the parlor while a caller was present and in a voice about as melodious as a fish horn inquiring, "Say, Bess, what time does Frank come home to dinner?"

Wife (at theater): "Don't you think, John, that Lydia Thompson is a trifle thinner than when we saw her last?"

Husband: "Well-er-perhaps one of her legs is a trifle thinner, but that possibly may be her maid's fault, you know."—Epoch.

Here is something curious in figures. Take 142,857, multiply it by seven and the result is 999,999. Add the original number of 142,857 and the aggregate will be 1,142,856. By adding the first figure to the last the original number is obtained.

The man who mourns over the wanton destruction of our forests does not hesitate to fill his pockets with gratuitious toothpicks at the restaurant after eating a hasty plate of 15-cent soup.—Boston Beacon.

"Mr. Chamberlain had been courting the daughter of our secretary of war for some time, hadn't he?" asked Mrs. Squildig. "Yes," replied her husband, "but in the Endicott her."—Pittsburg Chronicle.

A Few Facts Worthy Your Attention.

WILL YOU GIVE IT AND CONSIDER?

MEN'S OVERCOATS AND ULSTERS.

We spoke last week about them, and inaugurated one of the most attractive and largest sales ever attempted in Western Massachusetts. We promised to do two months' business in one; this we can do, and will do if you will give us the chance to show you our immense and varied assortment of Top Garments of all kinds.

We are overstocked with the highest grades of Overcoats and must sell. Read this column through, a careful perusal will amply repay you.

First we shall sell 100 of the finest all

WOOL INDIGO DYE ELYSIAN
—AND—
CHINCHILLA OVERCOATS,

Lined throughout, body and sleeves, with finest quality of satin, cost $2 per yard, made with silk velvet collars, piped edges, and double-stitched seams, at $18. A better coat we cannot produce. In every detail of manufacture they are as near perfection as we can make them. There's none better. These overcoats were made to sell for $30. Merchant tailors get $50 and $55 for them, made and trimmed in no way superior to this lot which we shall sell for $18.50. Look at them, gentlemen. If you do not pronounce them superb overcoats in every particular we shall be surprised. Sizes. 33 to 44.

We predict a quicker sale of these overcoats than any lot ever advertised. If they interest you, don't postpone the day of purchase. To-day we offer another lot of those celebrated

ALL WOOL INDIGO BLUE
CHINCHILLA OVERCOATS AT $12.

No overcoat that you can buy for $16 will compare with them. They are made with colored edges, deep facings, silk velvet collars lined with a heavy double warp, serge lining. On every sleeve is a ticket which reads: "Warranted strictly all wool and indigo blue." We warrant every coat. For every one that fades with one, two, three or five years' wear we will give another overcoat. And now we offer you the

FAMOUS LAWTON DIAGONALS

At $12. Do you know what the Lawton Diagonals are? Have you seen them? If you have not, come at once or send for a sample. They are the best and finest overcoats we ever sold for $12.

We have several of the finest

WIDE WALE
DIAGONAL OVERCOATS.

Worth and retailed usually for $25 and $28. They are silk-faced, with fine broad binding, heavy double wash lining, sizes, 33 to 44. A gentleman's coat in every particular. Our price, $20. One of the most desirable bargains are those fine

BENNINGTON BEAVER OVERCOATS

Double stitched edges, heavy serge and lasting lining at $10, price always from $13.50 to $15. Our price of $10 will soon make sad havoc with the sizes. Fine Diagonal Overcoats made from best makes of Worsteds, with silk and velvet collars, finely lined, with fine mohair bindings, would be cheap enough at $15 and $16 in youth's and men's sizes, we sell now at $10. Ten-dollar bargains we have offered before, but we never offered for $10 an overcoat that touch these. We have two or three large lots of the

MEDIUM-PRICED ULSTERS.

The one we want to call your attention to first, is a heavy Ulster or Driving Coat with plush collars and cuffs, a garment always retailed for $15. A most useful coat for expressmen and car drivers. We shall close them out at $10. One of the other lots is a heavy gray imitation Irish Frieze Ulster with heavy Cassimere lining, used to sell for $10, our price during this bargain sale will be $6. A most desirable garment.

The D. H. Brigham Co.
CLOTHES, HATS, FURNISHINGS.

FOR BOYS AND CHILDREN.

We offer a variety unequaled, and at prices which are very popular. The weather this fall has been such that we have not sold as many goods for the boys and children as we desired, and having an unusually large assortment, we feel the necessity of unloading, and as in our men's department, see that we must do two months' trade in one. We must force our sales and offer extraordinary inducements. We are willing to do it. Fact, no other alternative.

We Begin To-day
A SALE OF
Boys' Overcoats!

Which for price, quality and quantity has never been equaled in this commonwealth. First, we offer about one hundred boy's overcoats at half price. Coats formerly for $2 and $2.50, now $1.

Yes, $1.00.
Coats Worth $3,
Our Price, $1.50.

Cheap garments of course, we usually say but little about. When we do, you really can depend up it they are good value. Overcoats which are now selling for $2.50, $3 and $3.50 are cheap enough at fifty per cent more.

One of the most desirable bargains are those overcoats of strictly

All Wool Fabrics,

Made by our own tailors, just received from our own workshops. We have them by the hundreds and shall offer them at $5 per garment. Every mother should see them; they are worth $7 and $8.

Boys' Ulsters

have been called for as never before, for the larger boys especially, sizes from 13 to 18 years. Reefers continue one of the most useful and popular garments for school wear.

Those $4 Suits

Have created a "furore" all about this vicinity, so much so that we shall continue to offer them at same price, and have been adding to them constantly. These are goods which are actually worth $6 and $7; included are the

Rough and Tumble Suits,

Of all shades and colors, with extra pants and caps to match, if wanted.

Suits for $1, Worth $2.

Suits for $2.50,

Great Bargains.

The Light Is Gone Out.

I passed the home of my childhood,
The scene was unpleasant and sad,
From dwelling to garden, to wildwood,
No trace of my friends could be had.

The moon shone as brightly as ever,
The stars decked the heavens with light,
As quietly flowed that sweet river,
And katydids chirped with delight.

The grass was still green on the meadow,
The fruit trees were vieing in strife;
But all I beheld was the shadow
Of what was once dear as my life.

The light in the window was wanting,
The inmates had all fled away;
I called, but none came at my bidding,
Then how could I venture to stay?

We had played on the green in the sunshine,
O'er snow we had coasted down hill,
Had swung in the swing made of grapevine,
And ridden on horseback to mill.

We worked all day in the clearing,
And sung our sweet songs in the night;
We had worked in the fields without fearing,
If weather were murky or bright.

But the leaves on the lilac have withered,
No fragrance is left to the rose;
My friends to the harvest are gathered,
But I'm left the chapter to close.

To look at the past brings me sorrow,
The tale is too mournful to tell,
So I will speak of the happy to-morrow,
And say to the past—forever—Farewell.

THE LITTLE BROWN DRESS.

It was the first Monday in September and the opening day of Hawthorne grammer school. Miss Dale's room was the scene of much bustle, laughing, and rapid talk. Many of the girls had met for the first time since examination day. Isabel, just home from the mountains; Gertrude and Alice, tanned and rosy from the seaside; Florence, full of her Western trip, were making up for lost time in chattering like so many magpies. There was no break in the confusion until the warning tap of the bell sent them all to their seats, ready for the day's work.

Miss Dale had just taken her Bible, when the door opened, and a strange little figure appeared upon the threshold; a girl, pale and thin, with great brown eyes, and the oddest dress that had ever made its appearance in Hawthorne school. It was a dull, butternut brown, and looked as if it had originally belonged to some person older than the child of twelve who wore it. It was scant and long, flapping against her heels, and the short, old-fashioned basque, buttoned in front, gave her more the appearance of a little old lady than anything else.

The girl gave one shy, blushing glance at the forty amazed and wondering faces, then, stepping to Miss Dale, handed her a note, waiting quietly while she read it.

Miss Dale assigned her a seat next to Isabel Archer, and went on with the reading. But I fear the sweet words of the parable fell on inattentive ears, so many eyes were engaged in scrutinizing the new comer.

The morning passed rapidly away in the assignment of lessons and the examination of new text-books. At recess it transpired that the stranger's name was Ruth Strong, that her home was in Brentford, two miles from the city, and that she had been admitted by special permit from the committee.

The girls sauntered about in pairs, or stood in groups, but no one seemed to consider it worth while to speak to the new comer, much less to invite her to share their company. So she stood lonely and neglected, watching the bright dresses and merry faces, with a feeling as if she were in a new world, that, however lovely it might be, was not quite friendly to her.

"Who in the world do you suppose she is?" queried Alice.

"An inhabitant of the ark, I should judge," replied Isabel, gravely.

"Did you ever see such a dress?" said Alice. "I didn't suppose such a one was left in Massachusetts. People generally bestow such treasures upon beggars and ash heaps."

"Perhaps she's the oldest inhabitant's daughter," ventured Florence.

"Well, she's a queer specimen, whatever she is," replied Gertie; and in this the group unanimously agreed.

That night Ruth Strong, after her two miles' walk to the dingy house by the toll gate, sat looking into the fire with a very grave, tired face. A pair of thin loving arms were around her neck, and two sweet blue eyes looked up into her own.

Dear little Berry Strong, the sunshine of that humble home, was trying her best to comfort her brave sister. And well it needed for Ruth to be brave, for the little room was bare and almost cheerless, the dear mother's face anxious and careworn, and Berry, her one sister, a helpless cripple.

During the eight years of her suffering life the child had never walked one step, but lay patiently through the long hours, hiding her pain and cheering all other hearts by her unfailing sunshine. She patted the sober face with her tiny hand, oh, so tiny and transparent! "You dear tired old Rue, I'm so glad to have you back! Now, tell me all about it; was it nice?"

"School is just splendid Berry—so many books and pictures and globes, and a piano. And Miss Dale explains so clearly I can't help learning."

"Do you like the girls? Were they kind to you?"

"They are pretty girls, and wear such lovely dresses! I wish you could see them. But they don't know me, and I don't expect they want to. I must not mind it. I go to study you know, so that some day I can teach and earn money for you and mother."

"I wish you had a better dress to wear. I hate this horrid old brown." And Berry gave the offending dress a vicious little poke.

"Hush, dear! mother's coming." And the kitchen door opened, and the worn face appeared—a face that never failed to smile tenderly at her children, no matter how heavy the burden might be.

The days passed on, and the girls began to be accustomed to the quaint little brown clad figure. It slipped in and out so quietly, and was so unobtrusive, never putting herself in the way or calling down notice upon itself. The girls saw a serious face bent resolutely to its tasks, and felt no little wonder at a girl who studied for the love of it, and seemed eager to improve every opportunity.

One bright sunny day in October the school received an unexpected holiday. A "Teachers' Institute" was to be held in town, and the presence of every teacher had been specially requested.

Isabel Archer and her friends gave an enthusiastic vote of thanks to the "Board of Education," and planned a grand nutting excursion for the afternoon.

So the four "inseparables" met at Gertie's house precisely at one, and started off in high glee for a chestnut grove on the Brentford road, about three miles distant. What a joyous time they had among the gorgeous autumn leaves, filling their basket with the glossy brown fruit! They ran about, laughed, told stories, until the sun, creeping westward warned them of the time for departure. "I say, girls," said Isabel, suddenly, let's go home by the river road. It is nearer, and at the toll-bridge we can meet the Edgerly horse car, and ride to Garden street, and no one will mind walking from there. So they turned into the river road, and by and by the toll-bridge came in sight, with the shabby old cottage near by.

"Our friend, Mrs. Noah lives there," said Isabel, as they neared the bridge. "Let's go and make her a call."

"You don't really mean it!" cried the girls, in astonishment.

"Yes, I do; I have a great curiosity to see the inside of that house. If it corresponds with its mistress, we shall have a treat indeed."

"But what will she think?"

"Oh, she'll be delighted to receive four such distinguished guests. Come along, girls, and behave yourselves. We must keep sober faces even if we do suffer under it." And the thoughtless girls turned into the little doorway, never once dreaming how they were abusing the law of hospitality which bids us step not our foot into our neighbor's house unless in the spirit of true and kindly interest.

Isabel knocked and a childish voice said cheerily, "Come in!"

It was such a bare, humble room, carpetless, almost fireless, yet daintily neat and clean. A pile of school books lay at one end of the table, a workbasket at the other. On a lounge drawn up to the window, lay a child-form wrapped in a patchwork quilt. A pale, thin little face it was, but so blithe and sunny. Perpetual sunshine seemed to beam from those clear blue eyes, and radiated from the curls of golden hair that lay tumbled over the pillow.

"Come in," chirped the little creature. "I'm so glad to see you. I know who you are. You're Rue's school friends, and you've come to make her a call. You're real good, and I'm so sorry she isn't in. But she'll be in soon."

"Yes, we did come to see Ruth, but perhaps we'd better not stay," said Isabel, awkwardly moving towards the door.

"Oh, don't go! do stay a little while. I want to talk to you. I'm so tired waiting for mother and Rue." And the great blue eyes pleaded so earnestly that the girls drew near, fascinated by that dear little face.

"Are you ill?" asked Gertie, gently.

"I'm never well, but I fell pretty well to-day."

"Are you often sick in bed?"

"I'm always on my lounge, or else mother carries me. I never walked. I can't, you know—I never can; there is something wrong about my spine," answered Berry simply.

The girls turned pale, and quick tears of sympathy sprang to their eyes. Impulsive Isabel bent and kissed the pale face.

"You poor darling!" she murmured.

"Oh, no, I do very well," said Berry, brightly. "I have lots of good times. Mother and Rue make a great baby of me, and everybody is so kind."

"What do you do to amuse yourself?"

"Oh, I watch the clouds and the people going by, and I play with Cheeps, my cat. Cheeps is very good comapny, except when he's after a mouse. Then I read a little, and sew sometimes when the pain isn't too bad, and I have a doll too," and the child drew from the folds of her wrapper as forlorn a specimen of a doll as one could imagine. No arms, no legs, no hair, the faintest suspicion only of a nose, and the whole wrapped in a piece of cotton cloth.

The girls had hard work to repress their smiles, but Berry looked at the queer bundle with loving eyes.

"You must be a good child," cried Florence warmly.

Berry shook her sunny curls.

"Not always. Sometimes I'm very bad. When the pain is bad I do dreadful things."

"I don't believe it," returned Florence.

"Oh, but I do. Sometimes when mother cannot take me I get mad, and make up faces at the wall, and one day I threw Betsey on the floor. Wasn't that bad!" And the blue eyes seemed to grow larger and larger, as if in wonder at her wrong doings.

The girls laughed outright; it was impossible to do otherwise; and Berry laughed too.

"Isn't it ridiculous for a great girl like me to act so?"

"Don't you get lonely while Ruth is at school?" inquired Isabel.

The bright face clouded a little.

"Indeed I do; so lonely! And when mother's gone too I feel as if I'd like to cry sometimes. But then I want Rue to go too. Rue is real smart. Miss Downs, our teacher, said she ought to go to a better school, so Dr. Flether, our old minister, gave her a 'permit' for your school. He's on the 'mittee, you know."

"Doesn't Rue get tired walking so far, or does she take the car?" asked Gertie.

"She doesn't take the car—it costs too much. Rue's real good," cried the little creature. "She worked for Mrs. Day all summer, and got quite a lot of money. I wanted her to get a new dress to wear, but what do you think the bad thing did? She went and bought me this flannel wrapper instead, and now she wears that old brown dress to school. It was one Mrs. Day gave her. How I hate that dress, and wasn't I mad! I just cried."

It had grown darker and darker outside, while Berry chattered on, and up the Edgerly road could be seen the red lamps of the approaching car.

"We must go, girls," said Isabel, hurridly. "Good-bye, you dear little thing! We'll come again, some time."

"Dear me! Must you go! I do love to have you come, and Rue'll be sorry not to have seen you."

"Give our love to Rue, and tell her we think she's a brave, smart girl." And there was a tremble in Belle's voice.

The girls all kissed happy Berry, and went out softly. It was rather a quiet ride to Garden street, and the walk that followed was quieter still. As they paused before Alice's house Isabel said: "Girls, we must all promise never to tell what we went there for—not any one, except our mothers; and you don't catch me making fun of Rue again."

"Nor me either," echoed the others, too earnest to notice bad grammar.

"And we must fix it about that horse car fare," suggested Alice.

"Of course," returned Isabel, warmly. "I'd be ashamed not to. Come to my house after school to-morrow, and we'll talk it over."

That same night, after supper, Isabel sat in her low chair beside her mother's dressing room fire. Mrs. Archer, who was an invalid, sat in her reclining chair enjoying the ruddy blaze and crackle. Isabel had just finished an account of the afternoon's occupations, and, with scarlet cheeks, was telling of their visit, and the manner in which the owner of the little brown dress had been used in Hawthorne school.

Mrs. Archer heard her quietly, and a little shadow of regret crept over her expressive face. Isabel looked up anxiously, as she finished her recital.

"Don't speak, mamma," she said, quickly. "I know just what you will say. You are surprised that a child of yours should be so influenced by a dress as to forget all the good qualities it covered. You think I haven't been a lady. Well, I know it, and I'm ashamed. Don't scold, but just tell me what to do to make Ruth happy."

"Well, my child, I'll not scold you since you know so well the past fault and the fact of the present duty. What do you wish to do? You can begin by making her feel at home. There are other things. Have you thought of any?"

"Well, yes; we four girls must pay for her car fare. It will be sixty cents a week, and I should be ashamed if we could not do that."

"The first thing is to have your father see the child. Perhaps she may be helped, and we may have sewing or other work in the house the mother could do," said Mrs. Archer, thoughtfully.

"Just like you, mamma!" cried Isabel. "What a good head you have! But there's one thing I'd like to do, if you are willing. I'd like to give Berry my Paris doll."

"What, the doll your Aunt Elsie sent three years ago?"

"Yes, that very doll. I don't believe she ever saw such a doll."

"But, Belle, you can buy Berry a new doll, and dress it nicely; there will be no need of giving up your aunt's gift."

"But, mamma, I want her to have it; and just because it's so handsome, she ought to have it. I don't want her to have a common doll. If I couldn't walk a step, and had to be flat on my back, you couldn't find a doll too nice for me. Auntie would like to have her have it, if she could know." And there was a tremor in Belle's impetuous voice, and a tear in her eye. Mrs. Archer patted the dark head at her knee.

"My deary, of course you may give Lady Geraldine to Berry. I never meant to oppose you. I only wanted to see if you knew what you where about."

"Oh! thank you. I will run this minute and get the dear child's clothes together." And Isabel darted off, leaving her mother looking into the fire with a very happy face. Mrs. Archer had her hours of profound discouragement; but she was beginning to see what an influence she was in her own family, and to thank God gratefully for it. But her children knew that the quiet chamber held for them the very heart of home.

Berry's delight can be better imagined than described.

"My own; my very own!" she cried, as the wonderful creature was unwrapped. "Did that splendid Isabel really send it to me?"

"Yes, dear, all your own," said Rue, no less happily and nearly as excited. "See the trunk; and look! a waterproof, and real rubbers, and piles and piles of clothes!"

"I 'most want to die, I'm so happy. I'll never get bad again when you're gone, Rue. You may go to—to college now, and be gone, Rue, 'most forever, and I won't fret," sobbed the excited child."

I could tell you of the various changes that crept into Rue's life; how bright and merry she became under the pleasant sunshine of Isabel's companionship; of little Berry, happy in her new treasure and the hope that Dr. Archer gave her; of the tired mother, who began to grow less tired as she found kind friends and better work.

The little brown dress was after a time exchanged for one warmer, prettier, and more comfortable, but I think no other dress could hold for the girls such a tender interest. It spoke eloquently of so much love and self-sacrifice, carrying with it a lesson that even their young hearts could treasure.—Kate L. Brown in Christian Union.

HER PICTURE.

"What are you looking at, gran'pa?"

"Her picture, lass."

"What makes you look at gran'ma's picture so much? Can't you remember how she looked when she was 'live?"

"Yes, lass, but it fades away; fades so soon my heart is unsatisfied. I can see her in the picture here and can look at her for a long time."

"What makes you want to so much, gran'pa? The face is old and wrinkled"—

"No, no, lass! You don't see! The face is fair and round, and the roses come and go in her cheeks like they always did when I looked at her long."

"Why, gran'pa! Her cheeks are wrinkled and sunk in, and"—

"What's the matter with thee, lass? Don't I know her face? I can see it as plain as the day I kissed it first in the orchard path long, long ago. Them's dimples you see in her cheeks, lass. Roguish dimples that always laugh to gladden the heart that sees them. And that rose in her hair!"—

"Where, gran'pa? Let me see!"

"There, on that side, lass, where the curls shine like gold."

"Why, gran'pa! Its all straight and gray"—

"No, no, lass! Don't I see them! They looked just that way when I first loved her, lass. They never changed. I saw them every day till she died—every day for 50 years—the same golden curls. When your mother was a wee babe she used to play with them, lass, and fill her little fingers with the golden rings. Pretty rings, lass, prettier rings them golden curls made than ever a princess wore."

"Prettier than mine, gran'pa?"

"Prettier than anybody's, lass. There never were any like her's before nor since, never anywhere. And when she smiled as she does now"—

"Why, gran'pa, she ain't smiling! She's looking as straight"—

"There, there, lass! You don't see! I say when she was smiling as she is now, and the dimples danced and deepened, and her eyes sparkled, and she shook her queenly head, them golden curls would always fall like glittering rings, and she was beautiful as an angel—look at her now, lass!"

"Why, gran'pa, she's just the same all the time. I'll go and ask mamma."

And she ran away to tell them, with great tears in her eyes, that grandpa said grandma's hair in the picture was prettier than her's.

They left him alone with her. To him she was never old. He sees the face of the long ago, the fairest of all to him.

He holds the picture so that the sunbeams will fall among the golden curls, and gazes with all of a lover's pride upon the vision of beauty. Unconsciously his hand brushes the picture, as if stroking back one of the straying curls his fancy sees. He kisses it again and again, murmuring the fond love names, and whispering words no other on earth must hear. His heart is thrilled with the passion spell. His soul is free from the thrall of years, and lives in its immortal youth. The form that he knows so well, and the face that is fairest of all to him, have never changed, in all the years, to love's sweet idolatry.

The angel that smiles from the golden curls and the spirit that worships in dateless youth are joined in a heavenly mystery. Seeing not as mortals see, knowing not as mortals know, yet somewhere this side the Eternal Shore they wander on a limitless way.—Chicago Courant.

EXCITEMENT IN RELIGION.

This puts the case very well. Men can stand excitement and emotion in everythingb ut in religion. They go to a horse race and shout and scream like mad men, and toss their hats in the air over a little contest between two animals. In the theater storm after storm of wild applause bursts forth amid the direst confusion, and strong men and hysterical women weep floods of tears over a sham scene. In political contests grave citizens march and yell and wave party ensigns until they are worn out and exhausted with sheer excitement. But in a church not a tear must be shed, not a shout of joy must be heard, not a cry of victory must be raised. People may escape the awful terrors of hell, and stand before all the glories and splendors of heaven, but they must be calm about it. They must not display any emotion for fear some religious diletante might think the excitement unhealthy. Men may go to hell with noise and tumult, but they must make heaven in solemn dignity, or miss it altogether. This is the argument of the devil, and it has cost many a man his soul. If people will not repent until they are scared, then by all means scare them. If it takes a little noise to alarm them, let the noise come.—Cumberland Presbyterian.

Philadelphia girl—I wonder what is the luckiest day to be married on?

Chicago girl—Oh! Wednesday, by all means.

"Are you sure?"

"Yes indeed. My ma always gets married on Wednesday, and every time she gets a divorce, with ever so much alimony."—Philadelphia Record.

Philadelphian—"Is there much musical culture in Prairie City?" Westerner—"Musical culture? Well, I should smile. Why, sir, the Prairie City folks just turn out and mob the Salvation Army every time the base drummer gets out of tune with the cornet."—Philadelphia Record.

To one of the well advanced classes the question was asked, "What is the highest form of animal life?" "The giraffe," was the immediate response from a bright member of the class.—Carlisle Red Man.

The Use Of Tears.

Be not thy tears too harshly chid,
Repine not at the rising sigh,
Who, if he might, would always bid
The breast be still, the cheek be dry?

How little of ourselves we know
Before a grief the heart has felt!
The lessons that we learn of woe
May brace the mind as well as melt.

The energies too stern for mirth,
The reach of thought, the strength of will,
'Mid cloud and tempest have their birth,
Through blight and blast their course fulfill.

Love's perfect triumph never crowned
The hopes uncheckered by a pang;
The gaudiest wreaths with thorns are bound,
And Sappho wept before she sang.

Tears at each sweet emotion flow;
They wait on pity's gentle claim,
Upon ambition's fervid glow,
On piety's seraphic flame.

'Tis only when it mourns and fears
The loaded spirit feels forgiven;
And through the mist of falling tears
We catch the clearest glimpse of heaven.

HOW TO PROVE THAT THE EARTH TURNS.

It has puzzled the heads of a good many youngsters to know how the earth turns round. A German educational journal published in Frankfort gives the following directions for proving that the earth "does move:" "Take a good-sized bowl, fill it nearly full of water, and place upon the floor of a room which is not exposed to shaking or jarring from the street. Sprinkle over the surface of the water a coating of lycopodium powder—a white substance which is sometimes used for the purposes of the toilet, and which can be obtained at almost any apothecary's. Then upon the surface of this coating of powder make, with powder charcoal, a straight black line, say an inch or two in length. Having made this little black mark with the charcoal powder on the surface of the contents of the bowl, lay down upon the floor close to the bowl, a stick or some other straight object, so that it will be exactly parallel with the mark. If the line happens to be parallel with a crack in the floor, or with any stationary object in the room, this will serve as well. Leave the bowl undisturbed for a few hours, and then observe the position of the black mark with reference to the object that it was parallel with. It will be found to have moved about, and to have moved from east to west—that is to say, in the direction opposite to that of the movement of the earth on its axis. The earth in simply revolving has carried the water and everything else in the bowl around with it, but the powder on the surface has been left behind a little. The line will always be found to have moved from east to west, which is perfectly good proof that everything else has moved the other way.

SUCH IS FAME.

Francis Wilson, the comedian, says that during his recent visit to Europe he had the most fun at Stratford-upon-Avon. The conventional thing for tourists to do, writes Eugene Field, is to spend one afternoon in Stratford, but Wilson put in four or five days there, and after he had seen the sights he devoted his time and talents to guying the natives. Assuming an expression of stupidity, he would approach a group of townspeople and say: "I'm an American and I've come to Europe to see everything that's worth seeing and to find out all that is worth finding out. Now I've notice that a good many of your buildings here in town have been erected to the memory of one Shakespeare; I'd like to know something about Shakespeare—who the —— was he?"

The answers returned by the people were invariably of such a nature as to indicate that, however famous Shakespeare might be in books, he has not left a very certain record on the townsfolk of Stratford. One man told Mr. Wilson that Shakespeare was famous because he stole a horse.

"'Twa'nt a horse," interrupted a bystander; "'twuz a deer."

"Come to think of it, guess 'twuz a deer," said the first speaker. "At any rate, he stole somethin' or other."

THOUGHTS OF GREAT THINKERS.

Sanity consists in not being subdued by your means.—Emerson.

The ups and downs of life are better than being down all the time.

The finer the nature the more flaws will it show through the clearness of it.

The latest Gospel in this world is, man, know thy work and do it.—Carlyle.

Do not look to the soul's readiness and be bold, but look to the flesh's weakness and be humble.

There is always room for a man of force, and he makes room for many. Society is a troop of thinkers, and the best heads among them take the best places.—Emerson.

No sounder advice was ever given than that addressed to a company of theological students lately by Dr. John Hall of New York: "The way to get out of a small place is to be very efficient in it."

At 30 we are all trying to cut our names in big letters upon the walls of this tenement of life; 20 years later we have carved it, or shut up our jack-knife.—O. W. Holmes.

VENTILATION IN COLD WEATHER. — As soon as the first cold wave appears, many people seal up their houses with the apparent belief that all air must be avoided. Many forego the custom of airing their rooms in the morning and do not notice the peculiar, disagreeable odor which permeates the house before spring. One excellent rule to remember is that pure air actually makes a room warmer. If the room is chilly, open the windows a few minutes and you will find the atmosphere more comfortable after they are closed. In case of convalescence, if the weather is very cold, the invalid will derive great benefit by walking about well wrapped up in a room in which all the windows are opened. Sun and fresh air are distinct curative agents.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 14, 1888.

JACKSONVILLE is free from yellow fever at last.

WEST VIRGINIA goes into the Democratic column after all, the official returns show an average majority of 536 for the Cleveland electors.

THE Massachusetts tariff reform league is hoping for the presence of President Cleveland and Secretary Fairchild at its approaching banquet.

THERE is sound wisdom in these words of Congressman McKinley: "If we are to win in 1892 it will be upon what we do between now and then. We cannot win on the past." Let the politicians remember this.

GEN. HARRISON'S father-in-law is a $1200 pension clerk in Washington. He is an octogenarian, but is one of the most active and punctual officers in the department. He probably has nothing to fear from the incoming administration.

ALTHOUGH a bill appropriating over $22,000,000 for rivers and harbors was passed at the last session of Congress, another one is soon to be reported which will add some $12,000,000 to this sum. This sort of thing will soon do away with any surplus.

THE women of Boston had their first real experience in voting Tuesday, when some 16,000 of them went to the polls and worked and voted for school committee. If the women of the state could be depended on to manifest as much interest in political matters, the day of woman suffrage would not be so very far off.

THE Springfield Republican celebrated its occupancy of its fine new building by issuing a double sheet last Saturday, giving a history of the paper, with sketches of the men who have helped make it what it is,—the model daily newspaper, liked by everybody and cordially disliked by many, while at the same time they cannot get along without it.

FOREIGNERS get an interesting idea of the condition of this country from reading President Cleveland's recent message to Congress. Here is the way it looks to a Halifax newspaper:—

> Cleveland's last message graphically describes the deplorable condition of the people of the United States. They are crushed by monopolies, land sharks, combines and pension swindles, and are defied by the blacks of Hayti.

THE postmaster-general has issued an order placing the railway mail service under the operation of the civil service rules. If this had been done three years ago it would have been something like, but to do it now, after the service has become sadly demoralized by the appointment of incompetent partisans in place of old and efficient clerks, is the least bit thin, as a piece of reform work.

BOSTON may well rejoice over the result of her city election, Tuesday, when Mayor O'Brien and the Democratic ring were completely routed, Thomas N. Hart, the Republican candidate, being elected Mayor by a majority of over 2700, while the Republicans also elected their candidates for school committee, and will control both branches of the city council. Mr. Hart is president of the Mt. Vernon National Bank, and his business career in the city has been such as to insure a clean and able administration of the city affairs.

CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW of New York is a capital talker, and has an engaging way of unbosoming himself to interviewers. He told one the other day that he regarded the position of minister to England as much higher than a seat in the cabinet, and modestly intimated that his patriotism was of too high a quality to refuse to represent his country at the court of St. James, if President-elect Harrison should really desire it. His naive frankness is as refreshing as was Minister Sackville's freshness in answering the Murchison letter, and unless curbed might lead to equally unpleasant results if his ambition should be realized.

AN oatmeal factory in Chicago exploded with tremendous force early Monday morning, entirely wrecking the factory, which was instantly enveloped in flames, while adjoining buildings were badly shattered. Three or four employes perished in the wreck. The explosion is attributed to the fine dust generated in the process of manufacture, as in the similar explosion in one of the large flour mills in Minneapolis in 1878. Scientists have something to do to discover the preventable causes of these occasional disasters. It will destroy all the enjoyment of the daily indulgence in oatmeal mush if one must feel that he is liable to explode at any moment.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., has written a dark page in its history the past week. One Hawes, a railroad engineer with a wife and three children, was married last week to a young woman in Mississippi, but was arrested the same evening and jailed at Birmingham, the body of one of his daughters having been taken from a lake near his home, while later the mangled body of his wife was found in another lake. The community was so aroused against Hawes, the supposed murderer, that early on Saturday a large mob proceeded to the jail for the purpose of lynching him. Sheriff Smith had sworn in 50 men, but the mob paid no head to repeated warnings. The rioters fired upon the jail, and received a volly in return, the result being that 10 men were killed or fatally injured, and 30 wounded. Some prominent citizens had been trying to persuade the mob not to attack the jail, among them the postmaster of the city, a very popular man, who was shot dead. This greatly incensed the rioters, who called for revenge, and so high ran the feelings in the city that the sheriff was arrested on the charge of murder, the coroner taking charge of the jail and several companies of militia being summoned to protect it from the mob. Fortunately the governor of the state upholds the sheriff in his courageous course, and has been released on bail and resumed his official duties. But it is a burning shame to the city that mob violence should be permitted and upheld in this way, and it will do much to injure the city's prosperity.

LOCAL NOTICES.

Holiday goods in great variety, as usual, at O. P. Allen's drug store.

Special bargains in ladies' and gent's gold and silver watches at Jeweler Barton's.

Machine needles, oils, belts and sewing machine supplies for sale at F. M. Eager's.

We have done a good deal of looking around the past few days, and have made up our mind that Barton's jewelry store takes the lead on holiday goods.

W. R. Milligan's shoe store is the place to buy dolls' shoes, lamb's wool soles, Christmas slippers, and anything else you may need in the boot and boot and shoe line during the holidays.

Santa Claus, after looking at Jeweler Barton's holiday stock, has decided that it will not be necessary to stop at Palmer this season, and recommend all his friends to call and examine this elegant stock—such nice goods and low prices, he says, were never offered before.

F. D. Barton calls attention to his new and elegant stock of silverware, which, as usual, is the largest ever shown in this vicinity. All the latest novelties, such as bon bon boxes and trays, sterling card cases, rose jars, silver jars, silver-back combs, brushes, mirrors, crumb brushes, trays, etc.

PALMER AND VICINITY.

A new floor has been laid in the post-office.

A civil term will be held at the district court to-morrow.

Christmas at the state primary school will be well observed.

More snow last Sunday, and one or two sleighs were out Monday.

Thomas W. Kenefick has opened a law office in F. C. Hatch's block.

The schools in all the villages of the town will close during the holidays.

The Baptist Sunday-school will have a Christmas tree on Christmas eve.

Rev. F. W. Betts will speak to the children at the state primary school next Sunday.

Christmas trees are already being procured, and stockings are being put in readiness for Santa Claus.

The governor's council and the trustees of the institution paid their annual visit to the state primary school Wednesday.

The trustees of the Palmer Savings Bank will hold their regular quarterly meeting at the banking rooms to-morrow afternoon.

Miss Nellie B. Cutler of Stoneham has been engaged to teach the school at Blanchardville, and will commence next Monday.

Contractor F. F. Marcy will commence the construction of a new house on the corner of School and Park streets, for Joseph Kerigan, at once.

Local sportsmen think of petitioning the Massachusetts Legislature to have the game law go into effect January 1 in the future, instead of December 1, as at present.

Thomas Boyle, a brakeman in the yard of the New London Northern road at this place, had his foot caught between the cars yesterday morning, breaking his ankle.

A number of the young friends of Miss Lizzie Hitchcock helped her celebrate the eighth anniversary of her birth in a very pleasant manner Wednesday afternoon.

John Moran, a weaver in the employ of the Palmer Carpet Company, had his wrist caught in a loom Wednesday morning and badly lacerated, although no bones were broken or dislocated.

Quite a number express their intention of taking advantage of the reduced rates to Washington, D. C., March 4, for the purpose of witnessing the inauguration of President-elect Harrison.

C. H. Keith was the victim of a surprise visit at his home on Park street Wednesday evening, the occasion being the 11th anniversary of his marriage. A hanging lamp and a sum of money were presented him.

The polo game at Monson last Saturday evening, between the Palmers and the Springfields, resulted in a tie, after a very spirited and interesting contest. William Mason of this place was the successful competitor in the one-mile skating race.

Quite a good-sized delegation from Good Cheer Lodge, Daughters of Rebekah, went to Springfield Tuesday evening to witness the working of the Rebekah degree by Morning Star Lodge of that city. The latter order will visit Good Cheer Lodge the 19th.

Local dog owners, by small contributions, have made up a purse equivalent to the fine imposed by the district court upon George A. Griffin, for an alleged assault upon Homer C. Strong, at the time of the dog-fight, and tendered the amount to the former.

The 8 09 a. m. accommodation train on the Boston and Albany road was over four hours late Monday morning, caused by the wrecking of two freight trains near Ashland, which completely covered both tracks for a long distance. A special train was made up here for Springfield, and left this station at 11.15.

The annual meeting of the Palmer Carpet Company was held Wednesday and these officers elected for the coming year: President, W. C. Dewey; treasurer, J. S. Holden; clerk, C. E. Dewey; directors, J. S. Holden, C. E. Dewey, F. D. Kellogg, George Robinson and W. C. Dewey.

There continues a demand at the reading-room for more daily papers, and until that demand is supplied a good deal of talk will be heard from those who are frequent attendants. One placed in a position to know states also that there should be a greater number of illustrated papers on file, in place of so much deep literature like the Forum and North American Review, the pages of which are seldom disturbed by the class of readers that are found there nightly.

One of the servants employed at the Weeks House but a few days, whose name is unknown, solicited the friendship and got into the good graces of one of the other waiters there enough to learn where the latter kept her surplus money, and Wednesday morning she quietly took about $9 of it and had her "baggage checked for France," or some other place unknown to local authorities, who have a vacant place for her in the "cooler."

Considerable interest is being awakened in the coming walking match, which opens Christmas week in the Brunswick Billiard Parlors and continues for six days. Manager Conry states that he has been assured of several good entries by pedestrians from different sections of western Massachusetts, while Christmas night there will be a sparring match between Tom Dorsey of Worcester and Nelson Rouchette of Canada, two athletes who have attained quite a reputation. The sawdust track will be in good condition for those who wish to practice by the first of the coming week.

To those who are looking for holiday presents we have one suggestion to make—buy your gifts in your own town if you can possibly find what you want. And we think there should be no trouble on that score. The merchants of this place have made generous provision for the holiday trade this year, and an unusually large variety of goods will be found on their counters, at prices to suit all. A perusal of the columns of the JOURNAL will show you where to go for your Christmas goods, and an examination of these merchants' stocks will amply repay you. Their prices are as low as city dealers, and there is no reason why they should not be well patronized.

A dramatic correspondent says there is good authority for the statement that Barrett, the well-known actor, has purchased a new tragedy in blank verse from William Young of this place, author of the "Rajah." He says the work is a tragedy in verse, a Corsican love story of the 9th century. The principal personages are Ugo Colonna, count of Corsica; a Frank who has come to the island as a soldier of fortune, and enlisted under Colonna to redeem in honorable service his family name, which is smirched by error in France; and Bianca, the daughter of Colonna. Mr. Young, whose dramas are of so unusual and poetic character, is also the author of a very remarkable book of poems, "Wishmakers' Town," published by Holt a few years ago.

The Wigwam held a largely attended meeting Monday evening, when Fred Sibley, Luke Parkhurst, Chester Cross, Walter Allen and William Lawson were admitted to membership. The society also voted to assume the management of the proposed lecture course, and to carry out a programme similar to the one suggested in the last issue of the JOURNAL. The following were chosen a committee to make the necessary arrangements: Arthur Holden, Cyrus Stimpson, J. J. Farrell, N. W. Chandler, Willie Breckenridge, and all the members present were assigned certain portions of the town to canvass for the sale of tickets. These young men are deserving of great encouragement for their enterprise, for to assume the responsibility of a good lecture course is, indeed, quite an undertaking.

Personal.

M. W. French of Newtonville was in town this week.

Henry A. Loomis will spend Christmas in New York city.

J. T. Bishop of Natick was here over Sunday, the guest of A. G. Newton.

Mrs. C. P. Stone has gone on a two-weeks' vacation to New York state.

J. B. Ludden of North Brookfield was the guest of M. E. Howard at the Converse House Sunday.

Charles Atwater and Theodore L. Pomeroy of Pittsfield were guests of the Weeks House the first of the week.

Rev. Pleasant Hunter, Jr., of Newtonville, has been in town for a few days this week, visiting some of his old parishioners.

The marriage intention of Arthur E. Barlow of Chicopee and Miss Anna Hunt of this place is announced, and the event will probably take place Christmas.

The Leap Year Ball.

The leap year party and ball at the Weeks House Friday evening was largely attended and highly enjoyed, and the Woman's Relief Corps is deserving of corresponding credit. Most of the invitations were accepted, and the ladies paid their companions a judicious amount of attention. Some of the dancers began to assemble as early as 8 o'clock, and when the grand march, which was led by Miss Ida Snow and gentleman, began to move, it presented a very pleasing spectacle. Miss E. S. Gould of Providence, R. I., acted as prompter, while the two Fairchild sisters of Belchertown and Mrs. F. C. Hatch of this place furnished the musical programme, under the direction of Timothy Kenfield of the former place. Ice cream and refreshments were served by Landlord Weeks. The floor directors were: Mrs. A. J. Lawton, Mrs. C. K. Gamwell, Mrs. C. B. Ellis, Miss Idella Holbrook, Mrs. H. W. Smith, Miss Georgia Packard and Mrs. W. C. Hitchcock.

Death of Lyman Fiske.

Lyman Fiske, for many years a prominent hotel keeper in New York, died at his residence on East 19th street in that city Wednesday night, at the age of nearly 59 years. Mr. Fiske was born at Ludlow City Jan. 1, 1830, being the youngest of seven brothers, one of whom, Gordon M., was the founder of this paper, and father of the present editor. All the family are now dead except the oldest brother, Orrin W., who lives at Lexington. Mr. Fiske entered hotel life at Boston when about 21 years of age, soon going to New York, where he was connected with the Girard House for several years. Just before the war he became proprietor of the Stevens House, on lower Broadway, and in 1868 leased, and subsequently bought Taylor's Hotel in Jersey City, the largest public house in the state. Under his management both houses were very popular and successful, and Mr. Fiske acquired a very comfortable competence. In 1878 failing health led him to retire from business, and the remainder of his life was spent quietly at his home in New York during the winters, and at his country seat in Mamaroneck in the summer time. But rest from overwork did not bring back health, and for several years paralysis had been gaining a steadily-increasing hold upon his strength and vitality. Mr. Fiske was married Dec. 10, 1851, to Miss Jennie M Durfee of New York, who survives him, with three sons,—Willard C., a successful lawyer in Jersey City, Harrison Grey, editor of the Mirror, the leading New York dramatic paper, and Otis, who is in a shipping office in that city. Mr. Fiske's funeral took place this afternoon in New York, and the body will be brought to Agawam for burial to-morrow.

Shall We Have an Opera House?

This town has the modern improvements, provisions and facilities of the average New England city, and the ideas of its people are metropolitan in many respects, yet it is but a town of 7000 inhabitants. It has appealed for public improvements until they have been made, sometimes against the wish of certain tax-payers, but for the benefit of the public at large, and to-day it has as fine a system of water-works as can be found elsewhere, with hydrants on all the village streets, while an efficient fire department, with all the necessary equipments, stands ready at a moment's notice to fight the hottest blaze. A fire-alarm telegraph system, with boxes in central locations, is the method by which the members of the department are called to the scene of fire. The once dark and dreary streets are now lighted by the Thomson-Houston arc system of electric lights, while many of the business places and private residences are lighted by the incandescent system. It has the finest union passenger station on the Boston and Albany railroad, excepting at Boston and Worcester, and its railroad facilities are equal to many of the larger cities. All the streets are named and have street signs, but there is one thing lacking that many places of less population can boast of, and that is an opera house, or a desirable place in which entertainments can be held. The town is sure to have something of the kind ere long, and the first to erect such an edifice will not only be a public benefactor, but make a snug sum by the investment. The matter has been talked of ever since Wales Hall was converted into quarters for the Masons. In the mean time Palmer Lodge, I. O. O. F., has been maturing plans for an opera house or casino, and at a recent meeting a committee of three was appointed to find a desirable location. Sites enough can be secured, and at what is considered by competent judges as reasonable prices, the two thought of most favorably being the ones on Central and Thorndike streets, owned by John Feeney and John M. Converse. The Odd Fellows of this town are a live and wealthy organization, and if a structure is erected it will be a credit to the town and to the order, and will be so arranged that the latter can have quarters therein separate from the part used for theatrical and other entertainments. The Odd Fellows' Casino will sound well. Some further action will probably be taken upon the matter at the meeting of the lodge to-night.

BRIMFIELD.

Charles S. Tarbell has been drawn as juror for the criminal term of the superior court.

At the town meeting Monday it was voted to build an addition to the almshouse for the care of insane paupers.

BONDSVILLE.

The fair for the benefit of the new French Catholic church netted about $800. Mrs. Adolph Girouard secured the gold watch, receiving 15,350 votes to 9358 for Mrs. Maurice Moriarty. The managers return thanks to all who helped make it such a success, in spite of the bad weather.

LUDLOW.

The Ladies' Missionary Society met Tuesday afternoon with Mrs. Ida Carr.

The time of the weekly prayer meeting has been changed from Wednesday to Thursday evening for the remainder of the month.

Mr. Edson, who has been visiting the schools in town, lectured at Ludlow Center Wednesday evening, and met the teachers at the village school-house Thursday afternoon.

WARREN.

The Christian Endeavor Society will hold a sociable in the church parlors this evening.

The public schools will close next week for a vacation of two weeks. Miss Dockham and Miss Delehanty have resigned, and are succeeded by Miss Leary of Monson and Miss Johnson of Amherst.

Miss Eastman of Brimfield is bookkeeper for E. Fairbanks.

A large number of our citizens availed themselves of the opportunity to go to Boston free Wednesday.

Mrs. King and daughter, of Nashua, N. H., are stopping in town with Mr. Ramsdell.

Mrs. Washburn and daughter, from Boston, have been stopping with Mrs. Strong Hitchcock.

THORNDIKE.

Work is progressing finely on the sawmill at Forest Lake.

Roscoe Milliken moved his furniture to Three Rivers on Tuesday.

Mr. McFarlane has returned to the village and will sell a few more goods.

Mrs. Henry Senna passed away on Thursday. She had been an invalid for quite a while.

The Emmet Social Club has moved into Lawton's Hall, and is much pleased with the change.

There is nothing going on in the village. To use an old phrase of 20 years ago, "It is dead as Chelsea."

All of our storekeepers are making active preparations for the holidays, and parties can invest in Christmas presents, both useful and ornamental, limited only by the length of their purses.

The Wizard Oil Company closed their entertainment on Saturday. They did not do a very large business, but parties who bought the oil and have had occasion to use it speak very highly of it.

A. B. C. Deming and S. S. Greene have leased the billiard table formerly used by Mr. Lawton, and have set it up in the residence of the former gentleman. Some shots have been made that would open the eyes of Shaeffer, Slosson & Co.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

The Wesley praise service appointed for last Sunday evening was postponed on account of the storm, and will be held next Sunday evening at 6.45.

Rev. M. S. Dudley has procured a large and fine collection of views, and will give an illustrated lecture on Scotland in the church next Monday night. Proceeds for benefit of parish treasury.

The Y. P. S. C. E. elected the following officers at the regular business meeting last Monday evening: President, E. W. Wall; vice-president, Howard E. Gates; secretary, Miss Nettie M. Bell; treasurer, Fred Pease; organist, Miss E. E. Cunningham. The usual committees were chosen, with chairmen as follows: Lookout committee, C. E. Fletcher; prayer meeting, J. M. Perry; social, H. W. Cutler; Sunday-school, M. H. Cooley; flower, Miss E. E. Cunningham. Several important changes were made in the constitution and by-laws. The advisory board was changed to an executive board with power to fill any vacancy that may occur in the board of officers or committees, and to take action in all minor business of the society. It was voted to hold future elections annually in October, instead of semi-annually in June and December, and the above-named officers will hold office until next October.

WILBRAHAM.

Prof. Benjamin Gill attended the annual Wesleyan alumni dinner in Boston this week.

Prof. Gillett of New York has rented his farm to parties from New York the coming season.

Albert Pease has bought the Milliken place on Main street, and has taken possession this week.

The Ladies' Benevolent Society of the Congregational church met at the church parlors Wednesday afternoon and evening.

The winter term of the academy opened last Wednesday with a large attendance. Rich Hall is being filled to its utmost capacity.

The Congregational and Methodist Sunday-schools have each recently sent liberal contributions to the Baldwin Place Home for Little Wanderers, in Boston.

Rev. Franklin Fisk and Samuel J. Goodenough were the delegates from the Methodist church to the installation of Rev. John L. R. Trask in Springfield Tuesday.

The Young People's Missionary Society of the Congregational church met at the parsonage Wednesday and packed a barrel of clothing to be sent to Filer City, Neb.

The public schools opened Monday with but little change of teachers, Miss M. A. Pease taking the place of Miss Fannie Merrick, resigned, in the lower village school.

The Young Men's Social Club surprised Mr. and Mrs. Albert Pease at their home a few evenings since, and presented them with a Rochester lamp and a handsome pair of vases.

F. E. Clark entertained the Hampden Harvest Club at the Haynes House, Springfield, Tuesday. Among the invited guests were Rev. and Mrs. M. S. Howard, and Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Peck of this place.

The Wilbraham auxiliary to the Women's Foreign Missionary Society has elected the following officers for the ensuing year: President and treasurer, Mrs. Dr. G. M. Steele; vice-presidents, Mrs. Bridge, Mrs. Benjamin Gill, Mrs. Charles Raymond; corresponding secretary, Miss Emily Wright; recording secretary, Miss J. E. Bosworth.

MONSON.

Mrs. F. W. Hall of Boston is visiting her parents.

Malon Cushman goes to the South Framingham straw shop for the season.

Miss Helen Thresher is spending a few days at Lasell Seminary, Auburndale.

Monson was well represented at the B. & A. stockholders' meeting in Boston this week.

Miss Sarah Ely of Springfield has been the guest of Mrs. Horace Squier the past week.

Miss Gertrude Ball, who has been teaching school in Franklin, Ct., has returned home.

The regular meeting of the Congregational parish will be held in the chapel next Monday evening.

Green's colored minstrels gave a fair performance to a fair audience at Central Hall Wednesday evening.

Edward Moffatt of Winsted, Ct., a former graduate of Monson academy, was visiting friends in town this week.

Edward F. Morris gave a very interesting lecture at the Academy last Friday evening. Subject, "Banking."

Rev. I. A. Priest attended and took part in the ordination services of Rev. Harry Holden at Amherst this week.

Frank Parks, formerly with Fay, Peck & Co., will move to Medfield, where he has secured employment in a hat shop.

Enough snow fell on Sunday so that several sleighs were out, and the Palmer-Monson stage made its trip on runners.

The stores are beginning to don their holiday attire. The display, in all probability, will not be as large as in former years.

The regular meeting of Marcus Keep Post, G. A. R., for the election of officers, will be held at their headquarters next Monday evening.

William Charles, for many years overseer in the press-room of Fay, Peck & Co's. hat shop, has secured a position in the hat shop at Westboro.

The polo match between the Springfield reserves and the Palmers at Green's Hall Saturday evening called out a good-sized audience. The result was a draw, each team securing one goal.

At the meeting of Day-spring Lodge, F. & A. M., Tuesday evening, these officers were elected: W. M., C. M. Gage; S. W., R. F. Bradway; J. W., Harlow Chapin; treasurer, Dr. George E. Fuller; secretary, George L. Fuller.

The Christian Endeavor society of the Methodist church will give a supper and entertainment next Wednesday evening. Oyster supper will be served from 6 to 8 o'clock, after which there will be an entertainment, consisting of quartette singing, readings and solos.

F. E. Williams, of the firm of F. E. Williams & Co., the south end grocery dealers, has accepted a position with a Springfield house as drummer, and will go on the road Jan. 1st. His brother, Frank P., will continue the business as heretofore. R. Clifford Miller will take a position as clerk there soon.

The saloon-keepers have been having a hard time of late, and it really looks as if those who have the power are enforcing the law as it should be. This week the saloons at the Monson House and Cushman's hotel were complained of as a nuisance, and the keepers placed under $200 bonds. The saloon at Curley's block has suspended operations, and it is probable the others will be obliged to follow its example.

A Monson man missed a large rooster, which it was intended should form a part of his Thanksgiving feast, and accused a neighbor of appropriating the fowl. The charge was indignantly denied, but the bird, confined in a bird-cage in the bedroom, crowed so often and so loud that it "gave the thing away," and his captor was obliged to release him. It was too late for Thanksgiving, however, and the bird still lives.

G. W. Burdick is still alive, and his dam remains, as he said it would. He has sold his wood-working business to J. A. Martin, who is doing the business in connection with Mr. Burdick, who now employs five blacksmiths, and is obliged to work over-time to keep up with orders. He has lately put in his shop another power hammer, weighing 3800 pounds, built by B. A. Belding & Co. of Danbury, Ct.; also a new Leigh furnace forge, a Sturtevant blower, and many other improvements which his increasing business demands.

The meetings held in the Gage district school-house under the auspices of the Christian Endeavor society of the Methodist church, have become so interesting that a regular service will probably be held every two weeks. The society will hold one there Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

The Christian Endeavor society of the Methodist church held its regular meeting for the election of officers Monday evening, and made these selections: President, Hiram Felton; vice-president, Miss Mary Gage; secretary, C. A. Bradway; treasurer, G. L. Keeney; lookout committee, W. F. Holloway, Lilla Neal, A. L. Squier, John Parish, Della C. White, S. Ella Williams, Mábel Fay, Jennie Day and W. S. Nason. The society is in a prosperous condition, and its membership is increasing steadily. The average attendance for the past month was 76.

WARE AND VICINITY.

An average of 160,000 gallons per day has been pumped by the water works the past month.

This evening will be the last chance to attend the Trinity church sale. Special attractions to-night.

Large numbers are attracted to F. P. Clark & Co's. window to see the little old man running a sewing machine. The whole is operated by a water motor in the cellar.

George A. Woodward, mustering officer, did not make an appearance Tuesday evening to muster in the Sons of Veterans, on account of the change in the time table of the railroad. He is expected to be on hand next Tuesday evening.

The Danahy boy who was arrested for burglary is the same who received the whipping at the South street school. It seems he was not so badly injured but what he was able to be out, attending to his usual rascality.

The school committee can do nothing about starting an evening school, as there has been no appropriation by the town. It is reported that a special town meeting will be held to consider the matter. The school last season was productive of much good.

Mrs. Frederick Perry, formerly Miss Anna Robinson, adopted daughter of the late Charles S. Robinson, died in Florida week before last, having resided there for about a year. Her mother, Mrs. C. S. Robinson, was with her at the time of her death.

Timothy W. Barney died suddenly at his residence in Greenwich last Sunday morning of heart disease. Mr. Barney lived for years at Ware Center, and since his removal has continued to attend church there. He was a member of Eden Lodge of Masons in Ware.

It is understood that the Hampshire Gazette is to change its Ware correspondent. If so we hope to see more of truth and less in the interest of the liquor traffic. The late correspondent seems to have concealed his identity as completely as the Whitechapel murderer.

Green's Colored Minstrels are to be at the Town Hall to-morrow evening. The New Haven Union says: Bobby Green's Colored Minstrels opened at the New Haven Opera House last night, and gave one of the best performances ever given here by a small company of only 25 people.

The paper read by Rev. B. W. Pennock at the Wednesday Evening Club this week will appear in the STANDARD next week. The subject is "The religious substratum, or early religious history, with subsequent growth and divergence into Congregational, Methodist, Baptist, Roman Catholic, &c."

The town is being canvassed for Mrs. Mary A. Livermore's new book, "My Story of the War," a woman's narrative of four year's personal experience as field and hospital nurse in the Union army. The book is finely printed, with colored plates of battle flags and steel engravings of the author and various scenes of camp life.

The Christmas sale by the ladies of the Episcopal church opened last evening under the most favorable circumstances, and promises to be a grand success. A bountiful turkey supper is served on the stage, which has been transformed into a bower of beauty. The model of Trinity church makes a pretty appearance, lighted with candles and Chinese lanterns.

There was not a large audience at the temperance meeting at the Town Hall Sunday evening. The exercises were the reading of Scriptures and prayer by Rev. B. W. Pennock, and remarks by Revs. E. Hitchcock and A. T. Perry. Singing from Gospel Hymns under the direction of H. B. Anderson. There seems to be but little interest in temperance work just now, although there never was more need of it.

The Boston & Albany depot at Gilbertville was broken into between 1 and 2 o'clock last Saturday afternoon, during the temporary absence of the station agent, and about $25 taken from the money drawer. Alphonse Chicoine of Ware was arrested for the job. It is not long since he was released from a two year's sentence for burglary. This makes the third time in three years that this station has been broken into.

Two men were arrested last Friday evening by policeman Maurice Fitzgerald, assisted by deputy sheriff H. O. Caryl and Constable Tobin, for stealing a horse blanket from the front of C. Hitchcock & Co's. store. They resisted the officers, one of them attempting to draw a loaded revolver. They gave their names as Jerry Sullivan and Michael McKenna, and were taken to Northampton Saturday for trial. McKenna was sentenced to three months imprisonment for drunkenness and stealing the blanket, and Sullivan to thirty days for drunkenness.

Dr. W. L. Gage, whose lecture on "Berlin and the Imperial Family" is announced for the Town Hall next Tuesday night, is well known, and on various grounds. Some will recall him as a distinguished writer and lecturer in the department of sacred geography; others as a German scholar, and the translator of Ritter, Hagenbach and Tischendorf; others as the author of the Life of Ritter and editor of the Life of Mendelssohn. He resided in Berlin in 1855, in 1859, in 1865 and 1866, and gave there much study to Prussian history, the fruit of which will ere long be published.

Edwin Currier, George Abair, James Reno, Frederick Forgue, William Danahy and Henry Fitzgerald, all under 17 years of age, were arrested Monday evening for breaking into Dr. Miner's drug store Sunday night and stealing money and cigars. It is also suspected that this is the same gang that, not long since, entered John Thayer's market and C. H. Trench's store. The boys were taken to Northampton Tuesday for examination. Currier, Forgue and Abair were committed to await trial, and the others, furnishing $200 bail for appearance, were allowed to return to Ware.

DO FIGURES LIE? Two women had 30 chickens each, which they took to market. They agreed to divide equally the proceeds of the sale. One sold hers, 2 for a dollar, getting for her 30 chickens, $15. The other sold hers, 3 for a dollar, getting for her 30 chickens, $10. This made $25 for the sixty chickens.

The merchant, called on to divide the money said: "You sold your 30 two for a dollar; and you sold your 30 three for a dollar; that makes 60 chickens at the rate of 5 for 2 dollars. Well, 5 into 60 goes 12 times, and twice 12 is 24. That makes $24 your chickens have brought." But as shown above, the women actually had $25 in pocket, and yet the merchant's figures were right.

A Ware man his figured it out as follows: 60 chickens were not sold at the rate of 5 for $2, only 50 of them were sold at that rate which would amount to $20. The rest of the chickens, 10 in number, were sold 2 for $1, and brought in $5, which added to the other made $25.—The merchant lied.

At the meeting for the organization of the Woman's Relief Corps last Friday afternoon and evening the following officers were elected: President, Mrs. Elvira J. Coney; senior vice-president, Alice A. Coney; junior vice-president, Miss Eliza A. Robinson; secretary, Mrs. Luella W. Holmes; treasurer, Mrs. Lucy E. Ainsworth; chaplain, Mrs. Lilla Fairbanks; conductor, Mrs. Eliza J. Clark; assistant conductor, Mrs. Lizzie McGrath; guard, Miss Alice Richardson; assistant guard, Miss Lizzie Fairbanks. Mrs. M. F. Perry of Springfield, senior vice-president of the Woman's Relief Corps, was present and assisted in the installation. In the evening a collation was served, and the G. A. R. and Sons of Veterans were invited. The Woman's Relief Corps has enrolled 47 members.

At a special meeting of the French Congregational church, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

> Wishing to express our high approbation of the pastoral work of Rev. Thomas A. Dorion in our midst as well as his private and public life since he has taken charge of this mission, it is proposed by Rev. Dr. A. A. Auger and seconded by Leon Henrichon that if the ecclesiastical council judge it expedient to accord with us in the dissolution of the relations now existing between this church and pastor, Rev. Thomas A. Dorion, that credentials be given him expressing the sentiment of this resolution and recommend him as a minister of the Gospel worthy of full confidence.

The council for dimission will meet next Monday. At the quarterly session of the New England French Pastoral Union, held in Springfield, December 4 and 5, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

> The New England French Pastoral Union, in accepting the resignation of Rev. Thomas A. Dorion as member of this Association, regrets to lose one of the workers connected with the Congregational church in New England, and wishes him much success and prosperity in his future sphere of activity. The Pastoral Union recommends Brother Dorion to the full confidence and sympathy of the Methodist church which he is going to join soon.
> In behalf of the Pastoral Union.

> J. A. DEROME, secretary.

At the Town Hall Sunday morning there was a memorial service to Charles Wesley, who died 100 years ago, one of the most eminent of christian poets. Rev. A. T. Perry preached from Eph. v: 19, "Speak to yourselves in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, making melody in your hearts to the Lord." He spoke of the melody in the heart of Wesley that was ever bursting forth in song, and although he lived and died 100 years ago his work is not done, he still lives in the hearts of men. His expression seemed to come more freely in hymns, he having written 7000 of them. Wesley wrote of his own experiences, and among the most familiar are "A charge to keep I have," "I know that my redeemer lives," "Jesus, lover of my soul." The speaker expressed a belief that congregational singing was the most inspiring and impressive, but believed in the choir to impress us with truths we cannot otherwise get, but did not speak of the inexpressive way in which some choirs sing, so covering up the sentiment of the hymns that the hearers cannot know if it is truth or falsehood, in our own or some foreign tongue. We need more singing that shall be with the spirit, and with the understanding also.

Republicans are not hungry, nor thirsty for office. They have not spent their time and efforts for any such small pickings as postmasterships and clerkships in some custom house. You will not see them tearing each other to pieces, as was seen three or four years since, to get such places. And yet there is scarcely a town or village throughout this broad land that has not suffered from inconvenience or incompetency by bad appointments. The people of Ware have suffered more than most places by reason of removing the post office something like one-fourth of a mile from the business center of the town. Remonstrance by all classes and parties to the local postmaster and to the postmaster-general with the simple request that an agent be sent here to investigate the facts as stated, met with no responce whatever from either. With these facts, besides not having a postmaster with an accommodating disposition, who could blame us if we make haste for a change at the earliest time. The change has seemed great to us, as we had one of the best and most accommodating postmasters. A wounded soldier who has never asked for a pension turned out to make room for the present incumbent. Civil service reform would reinstate our old postmaster, with whom all were satisfied. CITIZEN.

OFFICIAL returns of the presidential vote from every state but Minnesota show that the total vote is 11,358,213, of which the Republican electors have 5,433,765, a gain of 581,784 over 1884, while the Democratic electors have 5,530,452, a gain of 655,476 over 1884. The Prohibitory vote is 250,076, a gain of 97,707, and the labor vote is 143,960, a loss of 41,410 as compared with 1884. Cleveland's plurality on the popular vote is 96,687, but it wouldn't be if there had been a free vote and honest count in the South.

You may travel in all climates without fear, if you have a supply of Laxador to guard against malaria and fever. Price only 25 cents.

The old and reliable house of the D. H. Brigham Co. is so favorably known that any offer they make is sure to meet with favor. The past weather has been so unfavorable for business that during the next two weeks they will make Christmas prices on all their goods. That means bottom prices on everything. See their two-column advertisement.

Some favor a tariff for revenue only, some a tariff with incidental protection, and some a tariff for protection, per se; but a large majority favor the free use of Salvation Oil for cuts and bruises.

An endless chain of certificates verify the excellence of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup. Price 25 cents.

Babies cry because they suffer; and the most reliable remedy for the relief of their discomfort is Dr. Bull's Baby Syrup. Only 25 cents a package.

Our Little Ones and The Nursery continues to be without a rival in all the world, as a magazine for the youngest readers. Its poems, stories, and sketches are selected with the greatest care, are amusing and instructive, and every one of them is illustrated by an artist of the best reputation. All the reading matter and every picture is original, prepared expressly for this work under the direction of Mr. George T. Andrew, whose speciality is the production of fine books and who has presented to the public some of the most elegant, artistic volumes on the counters of the booksellers. It is printed from handsome type, on fine paper. From the start it has been fully recognized as improving, in the highest degree, to the taste, as well as the mind and morals of little children. It contains no cheap borrowed illustrations, and its pictures have long been considered an educational agency of the most elevating character. Published monthly by the RUSSELL PUBLISHING CO., Boston, at $1.50 a year. A trial subscription of 3 months for 25 cents.

Card of Thanks.

I hereby desire to extend to all of my friends my thanks for the many kindnesses extended to me during my past illness of over three months from rheumatism, and I especially desire to tell them that but for Sulphur Bitters I should have been suffering still. May you never suffer what I have, is the wish of your friend, B. H. TAYLEUR.

Advice to Mothers.

Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of cutting teeth? If so, send at once and get a bottle of Mrs. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures dysentery and diarrhœa, regulates the stomach and bowels, cures wind colic, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. Mrs. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING is pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female nurses and physicians in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price 25 cents a bottle. 1y23

AN INDEPENDENT NEWSPAPER
SERVING THE PEOPLE.

THE SPRINGFIELD REPUBLICAN

THE LEADING JOURNAL OF NEW ENGLAND.

Established in 1824 by Samuel Bowles.

LATELY ENLARGED AND IMPROVED.

The year 1888 has marked notable events in the history of The Springfield Republican. A new building admirably arranged for the large and growing business of the paper has been erected and occupied. It stands on one of the most desirable corners in Springfield and is the property of The Republican Company. The paper has also been enlarged by the addition of eight columns to its quarto sheet, making the regular size 56 columns. These improvements afford The Republican better facilities than it has ever before possessed for the performance of the work of a great modern newspaper and the fulfilment of its duties to the age and intelligent constituency whom it serves.

The Republican considers it to be the first office of a newspaper to print the news fairly, fully, intelligently and without prejudice. This it undertakes to do every day in the year, giving special attention and extended space to the local news of Western Massachusetts, Northern Connecticut and Southern Vermont and New Hampshire. Its organization of reporters an correspondents for collecting the news in the territory described is wonderfully complete, and the thoroughness and promptness of its service is unrivaled. In Boston and Washington The Republican employs trained journalists as its regular correspondents to supplement the news of the Associated Press, and in New York, Albany and other important centers it commands the aid of well-equipped special correspondents whenever occasion demands.

In the treatment of political and social questions, The Republican is thoroughly independent. It stands up always for the real interest of the people as against monopoly, corruption, coercion, deception and every form of demagogism. It counts the wellfare of the country as of more consequence every time than the success of any party. It seeks to be broad-minded, generous, fair and good tempered in its discussions of public affairs, and to represent always the true and pure American spirit. The Republican devotes liberal attention to literature, to science, to education, to all social and economical questions. Besides giving its readers "All the news and the truth about it," this paper offers them daily an abundance of miscellaneous reading, instructive, entertaining and interesting.

THE SUNDAY REPUBLICAN

Is prepared with special pains to meet the needs and taste of the New England public. It presents the news, local and general, in readable and attractive form. It always contains a pleasing original story or sketch, a good sermon, a department for children, the latest news from the theaters and of outdoor sports, a literary column, interesting home and foreign correspondence, a full editorial page covering a wide range of live topics, local sketches, original poetry, etc. It is a wholesome, newsy and interesting journal well suited to the day of rest.

THE WEEKLY REPUBLICAN.

Has often been called the best review of American life anywhere published. It is carefully edited and gives all the important news and discussion of the week in compact and well-arranged order. It contains also several pages of general reading, embracing the best stories, correspondence, sketches and special articles that have appeared in the Daily and Sunday editions. The recent increase by eight columns of its size, allows the addition of much valuable and entertaining matter and makes The Weekly Republican more than ever a model family journal.

AS AN ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

The Republican is unrivaled in its field. Its circulation is by far the largest of any daily in New England out of Boston, with the exception of an evening paper in Rhode Island, and it is read by all classes.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

The Daily Republican is sold for $8 a year, $2 a quarter, 70 cents a month, 3 cents a copy.

The Sunday Republican is $2 a year, 50 cents a quarter, 5 cents a copy.

The Weekly Republican is $1 a year, 60 cents for six months; 10 cents a month for trial subscriptions; 3 cents a copy.

New subscriptions to The Weekly Republican for 1889 may begin at once and continue to January 1, 1890.

Send for free sample copies.

HOW TO PICK OUT OF THE HOLIDAY BOOKS OF THIS YEAR, 1888.

The one to suit both giver and givee.

Catalogue published by our Book Department—now ready. Contains information about new gift books, with pictures from some of them. And their prices here!

It's a check on your local bookseller. He'll serve you the better if he knows what you're doing.

Books, you know, we sell for less than publisher's prices, some of them half—in every case as low as we can.

We expect it'll be of interest to all who care about books.

Five cents to any address—send it in silver or stamps.

Saturday, December 8, the store wakes up to the fact that Christmas is coming.

For some time we have been living in holiday air, seen holiday lights, and felt the inspiration of the holiday spirit. The gift quarter puts on a new appearance December 8. It will be full of the light of silver and gold and brass and bronze and spelter and glass, made even more brilliant with leather and plush and wood.

We have men wandering all over Europe with nothing to do but gather these things and see how far our money will go toward bringing us your wants—whatever those wants may be, almost. Be a part of the crowd.

SULPHUR BITTERS.

THE BEST AND PUREST MEDICINE EVER MADE.

It will drive the Humor from your system, and make your skin clean and smooth. Those pimples and blotches which mar your beauty and caused by impure blood, can be removed in a short time, if you are wise and use the great blood purifier, SULPHUR BITTERS.

DON'T GIVE UP!

What makes you tremble so? Your nerves are all unstrung, and need a gentle, soothing tonic to assist nature to repair the damage which your excesses have caused. SULPHUR BITTERS is NOT a cheap rum or poor whisky drink, to be taken by the glass, like other preparations, which stimulate only to destroy. Why suffer with Boils? Why rave with that terrible headache? Why lay and toss on the that bed of pain with Rheumatism?

If you have failed to receive any benefit from other medicines or doctors, do not despair Use SULPHUR BITTERS. They will cure you where all others fail. No person can remain long sick who uses SULPHUR BITTERS.

The dose is small—only a teaspoonful. It is the best and cheapest medicine. Try it, and you will be satisfied. Get it of your druggist. Don't wait, get it at once. If you are suffering from Kidney Disease, and wish to live to old age, use SULPHUR BITTERS. They never fail to cure.

SULPHUR BITTERS.

THE HOUSEHOLD.

CREAM TARTS.

Make a thin puff paste, cut small, bake and fill with whipped cream, on which drop a spoonful of acid jelly.

FRIED TRIPE.

Roll the boiled tripe, cut in squares, in egg, then in cracker crumbs, and fry to a nice brown. Serve with catsup.

POTATO SALAD.

Ten cold boiled potatoes sliced, one tablespoonful of chopped parsley, and mixed with the French dressing.

CHEAP RICE PUDDING.

Two quarts of milk, two-thirds of a cup of rice, same of sugar, small piece of butter and a little salt; stir it occasionally until boiling hot, and cook in a slow oven until of the consistency of cream.

FRIED SALT PORK.

Cut as many slices as will be required for breakfast, the evening before, and soak till morning in sweet milk and water. Then rinse till the water is clean, and fry. For a change, it may be rolled in corn meal and then fried.

PATTED FINNAN HADDIES.

Cold boiled haddies, of any that is left from haddock at dinner, must be pounded fine, with a little butter, cayenne pepper, salt, and an atom of mace, or sprinkle of curry powder. Serve in a little mound, with hot, dry toast.

CORN MEAL PANCAKES.

One pint of fine corn meal, four tablespoonfuls of wheat flour, one quart of milk, three eggs, pinch of salt. Mix the meal and flour with the milk, beat the eggs very light and add them. Bake on a hot griddle, and serve hot with fresh butter.

PICKLED OYSTERS.

Rinse the systers in their liquor, strain it upon them, and let it come to a boil; take them out of the liquor to cool. Prepare cider vinegar by boiling it with pepper, a little salt, mace, cloves and nutmeg, and when cold pour it over the oysters, and keep them in a covered stone jar.

SAGO PUDDING.

Boil five tablespoonsful of sago, well picked and washed, in one quart of milk till quite soft, with a stick of cinnamon; stir in one teacup of butter and two of white sugar; when cold, add six eggs, well beaten, and nutmeg to taste. Mix all well together, and bake in a buttered dish three-quarters of an hour.

OATMEAL CRACKERS.

Take three cups of the finest oatmeal, one tablespoonful of white sugar, and a little salt. Wet it up with sweet cream and let it set in a cool place an hour or two, then knead in fine flour enough to make a dough that can be rolled and cut. Roll thin, cut out, and bake in a moderate oven about 10 minutes.

CHICKEN PIE.

Boil your chickens until they are tender, and season highly; line deep pie plates with rich pastry; take the white meat and a little of the dark off from the bones, put into pie plates, pour the gravy over the chickens, add butter and a little flour, cover loosely with a crust, and bake from half to three-quarters of an hour.

ICE CREAM CANDY.

Two cupfuls of fine granulated sugar, one-half cup of water, and as soon as it begins to boil add one-fourth of a teaspoon of cream of tarter. Boil till brittle when dropped into cold water. Just before taking off the stove, add butter half the size of an egg, and flavor to suit your taste. Pull as hot as possible, without buttering the hands.

BEEF BROTH.

Take a leg of beef, break the bone in several places, place it in a pan with a gallon of water, remove the scum as it rises. and add three blades of mace, a crust of bread and a small piece of parsley; boil till the beef is tender; toast some bread, cut in diamonds, lay it in the bottom of the tureen, put the meat on it and pour the broth over all.

OYSTER STEW.

One quart of oysters, one cupful of milk, and a piece of butter the size of an egg. Dip the oysters from the liquid, put them in a saucepan, with butter, put them on the fire until the butter melts, then add the milk, with a teaspoonful of flour mixed in with it; add a little mace and pepper and salt, let it boil up once, and serve immediately.

WHOLE CHERRIES, A LA VANILLE.

Boil two pounds of sugar with two glasses of water, and clarify it with whites of two eggs. Skim the syrup and put into it four pounds of fine cherries without their stalks or stones, but as whole as possible. Add some fine extract of vanilla, and let the whole infuse on the fire, but by no means let it boil; let it infuse for at least five minutes.

PEACH CAKE.

Bake three sheets of sponge cake as for jelly cake; cut nice ripe peaches in thin slices; prepare cream by whipping, sweetening and adding flavor of vanilla, if desired; put layers of peaches between the sheets of cake; pour cream over each layer and over the top. To be eaten soon after prepared.

BRICK OF POTTED BEEF.

Three and a half pounds of lean beef, chopped fine, four crackers, rolled, three eggs well beaten, tablespoonful salt, teaspoonful pepper. Use thyme or other herb. Mix well and mould into a brick. Cover with bits of salt pork and bread crumbs. Put a coffee cup of water in the pan and baste often.

POTATO EGGS.

Mash some potatoes (not too new) with a little warmed milk or cream, butter, salt, and the yolk of an egg well beaten up. Form the mixture into egg-shaped balls by pressing it into an iron spoon (buttered); slip the potatoes out of the spoon upon buttered paper, put them into the oven to thoroughly warm, but not to become browned.

WHITE CAKE.

Take a cup of butter, two cups sugar, one cup milk, one cup corn-starch, two cups of flour, whites of seven eggs; lemon or vanilla flavoring according to taste; three teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Bake in layers and fill with boiled icing and raisins. Cover the top of the cake with grated cocoanut, thinly sprinkled with raisins.

"Long live the turkey!" says an enthusiastic contemporary. We do not endorse the sentiment. Two years is the extreme limit of old age which should be permitted in a turkey.—Boston Globe.

TRUE ECONOMY. — It is true economy to buy Hood's Sarsaparilla, for 100 Doses for One Dollar," is original with and true only of this popular medicine. If you wish to prove this, buy a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla and measure its contents. You will find it to hold 100 teaspoonfuls. Now read the directions, and you will find that the average dose for persons of different ages is less than one teaspoonful. This is certainly conclusive and unanswerable evidence of the peculiar strength and economy of Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"I took Hood's Sarsaparilla for loss of appetite, dyspepsia, and general languor. It did me a vast amount of good, and I have no hesitancy in recommending it."—J. W. Willeford, Quincy, Ill.

"I have been troubled by scrofulous affection all my life. It is one of the marked recollections of my boyhood days, and for several years has rendered me unable to labor much. I think Hood's Sarsaparilla, which I have been using at intervals for ten years, is the best thing I have ever taken. I am now 60, and my general health seems better than ever.—H. D. ## CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER.

The Purest and Best.

Is made only of strictly pure grape cream of tartar, strictly pure bicarbonate of soda, and a small portion of flour as a preservative, nothing else whatever, and is warranted entirely free from alum, ammonia, phosphates, lime, and all other adulterations frequently found in baking powders. The character of materials used, their purity, and the nicety of their combination, render Cleveland's superior baking the most healthful and most economical in use, and it always affords wholesome, nutritious, and delicious food.

It is recommended for purity, healthfulness and efficiency by government and state chemists, chemists of boards of health, and professors in institutions of learning throughout the country.

Sold only in cans. Full weight.

A Few Facts Worthy Your Attention.

WILL YOU GIVE IT AND CONSIDER?

MEN'S OVERCOATS AND ULSTERS.

We spoke last week about them, and inaugurated one of the most attractive and largest sales ever attempted in Western Massachusetts. We promised to do two months' business in one; this we can do, and will do if you will give us the chance to show you our immense and varied assortment of Top Garments of all kinds.

We are overstocked with the highest grades of Overcoats and must sell. Read this column through, a careful perusal will amply repay you.

First we shall sell 100 of the finest all

WOOL INDIGO DYE ELYSIAN
— AND —
CHINCHILLA OVERCOATS,

Lined throughout, body and sleeves, with finest quality of satin, cost $2 per yard, made with silk velvet collars, piped edges, and double-stitched seams, at $18. A better coat we cannot produce. In every detail of manufacture they are as near perfection as we can make them. There's none better. These overcoats were made to sell for $30. Merchant tailors get $50 and $55 for them, made and trimmed in no way superior to this lot which we shall sell for $18.50. Look at them, gentlemen. If you do not pronounce them superb overcoats in every particular we shall be surprised. Sizes. 33 to 44.

We predict a quicker sale of these overcoats than any lot ever advertised. If they interest you, don't postpone the day of purchase. To-day we offer another lot of those celebrated

ALL WOOL INDIGO BLUE CHINCHILLA OVERCOATS AT $12.

No overcoat that you can buy for $16 will compare with them. They are made with colored edges, deep facings, silk velvet collars lined with a heavy double warp; serge lining. On every sleeve is a ticket which reads: "Warranted strictly all wool and indigo blue." We warrant every coat. For every one that fades with one, two, three or five years' wear we will give another overcoat. And now we offer you the

OUR STOCK OF HOLIDAY NOVELTIES IS COMPLETE.

Every department contains a marvelous assortment, all useful gifts. We have a great many specialties to show you. First and foremost comes our stock of

FURNISHINGS

Which for quantity, quality and fine variety is unexcelled in New England. We have the exclusive sale of a great many novelties for Western Massachusetts.

Seal caps, seal gloves, silk umbrellas, elegant neckwear, etc., traveling bags, shopping bags, music rolls, dressing and toilet cases, collar and cuff boxes, sole leather trunks, choicest fur and wool carriage and lap robes. We cannot in this space begin to enumerate about our stock of holiday goods. Of course our stock of is far ahead of anything ever shown by us, particularly desirable just now, and a most useful present would be one of our fine ulsters or overcoats. Fur coats are also useful. Will you, when looking for useful holiday goods, inspect our stock?

FINE CLOTHING FOR MEN AND BOYS

MEDIUM-PRICED ULSTERS.

The one we want to call your attention to first, is a heavy Ulster or Driving Coat with plush collars and cuffs, a garment always retailed for $15. A most useful coat for expressmen and car drivers. We shall close them out at $10. One of the other lots is a heavy gray imitation Irish Frieze Ulster with heavy Cassimere lining, used to sell for $10, our price during this bargain sale will be $6. A most desirable garment.

The D. H. Brigham Co.
CLOTHES, HATS, FURNISHINGS.

FOR BOYS AND CHILDREN.

We offer a variety unequaled, and at prices which are very popular. The weather this fall has been such that we have not sold as many goods for the boys and children as we desired, and having an unusually large assortment, we feel the necessity of unloading, and as in our men's department, see that we must do two months' trade in one. We must force our sales and offer extraordinary inducements. We are willing to do it. Fact, no other alternative.

We Begin To-day

A SALE OF

Boys' Overcoats!

Which for price, quality and quantity has never been equaled in this commonwealth. First, we offer about one hundred boy's overcoats at half price. Coats formerly for $2 and $2.50, now $1.

Yes, $1.00.

Coats Worth $3,

Our Price, $1.50.

Cheap garments of course, we usually say but little about. When we do, you really can depend up it they are good value. Overcoats which are now selling for $2.50, $3 and $3.50 are cheap enough at fifty per cent more.

One of the most desirable bargains are those overcoats of strictly

All Wool Fabrics,

Made by our own tailors, just received from our own workshops. We have them by the hundreds and shall offer them at $5 per garment. Every mother should see them; they are worth $7 and $8.

Boys' Ulsters

have been called for as never before, for the larger boys especially, sizes from 13 to 18 years. Reefers continue one of the most useful and popular garments for school wear.

Those $4 Suits

Have created a "furore" all about this vicinity, so much so that we shall continue to offer them at same price, and have been adding to them constantly. These are goods which are actually worth $6 and $7; included are the

Rough and Tumble Suits,

Of all shades and colors, with extra pants and caps to match, if wanted.

Suits for $1, Worth $2.

Suits for $2.50,

* * * * * * * * AS GOES TEXAS, SO GOES THE COUNTRY.

* The following convincing and enthusiastic lines, written by a resident of the "Lone Star" state, are copied from a Texas paper, and will be read with interest and pleasure by thousands whose experience enables them to vouch for the fact that there is as much truth as poetry in the composition:

THEY ARE COMING.

They are coming from the mansions of aristocratic "swells,"
Where the merry music maketh delectation for the belles,
They are coming from the houses of the merchants, and the men
Who are preachers, teachers, scientists and those who wield the pen;
They are coming from the villas where bankers love to dwell,
From the happy, smiling cottages in dingle and in dell;
From the cities, towns and hamlets, and from every home and haunt,
To buy EMERSON PIANOS, which will "fill a long felt want."

They are coming, the mechanics, each a man who toils and strives,
They are coming, the wage-earners, with their children and their wives,
They are coming, careless cowboys, dapper clerks, and drummers, too,
Each one bound to buy an EMERSON—no other make will do.
For solid happiness and peace each from its tone derives
And poetry begins to smile into prosaic lives,
And they troop to GOGGAN BROTHERS or to one of their four branches.
Those men who live in cities and those dwellers upon ranches.

And the EMERSONS are coming from the city by the sea,
The town that had a picnic when they spoiled King George's tea;
They are coming by the car-load to fill the great demand;
They are coming down to Galveston, by sea as well as land;
They are coming, too, to Waco, and to Houston, and to San Antonio, and Austin, always foremost in the van—
Five citadels of EMERSON, upheld against all others,
By the Texas "Gog and Magog," but known here as GOGGAN BROTHERS.

Galveston, October, 1888. VIOLAS TOUT.

A POWERFUL TONIC.

A specific for Malaria, Rheumatism, Nervous Prostration. The most scientific and successful Blood Purifier. Superior to quinine.

Mr. Lode Hoornbeck, of the U. S. Ship Kearsarge, writes that he meets people almost daily who have used or are using Kaskine, and who affirm from experience that it is superior to quinine in tonic and curative properties, and produces no subsequent bad effects.

Mr. John C. Scarborough, Selma, N. C., writes: "I got malaria in the Southern army, and for a dozen years suffered from its debilitating effects. I was terribly run down when I heard of Kaskine, the new quinine. It helped me at once. I gained 35 pounds."

Kaskine can be taken without any special medical advice. $1.00 per bottle, or six bottles for $5. Sold by druggists or sent by mail on receipt of price. KASKINE CO.,

168 Doane St., New York.

MASON & HAMLIN.

The cabinet organ was introduced in its present form by Mason & Hamlin in 1861. Other makers followed in the manufacture of the instruments, but the Mason & Hamlin organs have always maintained their supremacy as the best in the world.

Mason & Hamlin offer, as demonstration of the unequalled excellence of their organs, the fact that at all of the great World's Exhibitions, since that of Paris, 1867, in competition with best makers of all countries, they have invariably taken the highest honors. Illustrated catalogues free.

ORGANS $22 to $900.

Mason & Hamlin do not hesitate to make extraordinary claim for their pianos, that they are superior to all others. They recognize the high excellence achieved by other leading makers in the art of piano making, but still claim superiority. This they attribute solely to the remarkable improvement introduced by them in the year 1882, and now known as the "Mason & Hamlin Piano Stringer," by the use of which is secured the greatest possible purity and refinement of tone, together with great increased capacity for standing in tune and other important advantages.

PIANOS Grand & Upright

Waiting for the Bugle.

We wait for the bugle; the night dews are cold,
The limbs of the soldiers feel jaded and old,
The field of our bivouac is windy and bare,
There is lead in our joints, there is frost in our hair,
The future is veiled and its fortunes unknown
As we lie with hushed breath till the bugle is blown.

At the sound of that bugle each comrade shall spring
Like an arrow released from the strain of the string;
The courage, the impulse of youth shall come back
To banish the chill of the drear bivouac,
And sorrows and losses and cares fade away
When that life-giving signal proclaims the new day.

Though the bivouac of age may put ice in our veins,
And no fiber of steel in our sinew remains;
Though the comrades of yesterday's march are not here,
And the sunlight seems pale and the branches are sear,—
Though the sound of our cheering dies down to a moan,
We shall find our lost youth when the bugle is blown.

—Thomas Wentworth Higginson in Century.

UNCLE PAUL'S WIFE.

It had rained all day; and at night, with the same dull, monotonous sound, the rain still fell on the gravel walk beneath the window, while through the dark old pines at the back of the house went the continual mournful soughing of the east wind.

I was weary of all indoor occupations, and could not resort to invectives against the weather, for I had no listeners.

My uncle, Dr. Paul Eastman, had gone three miles through the wind and rain to visit a patient in the almshouse, a little boy whose life was nearly ended, and Mrs. Eastman was visiting her friends in a distant state.

In an idle, half dreaming mood, I lay on the sofa in the pleasant library to await my uncle's coming.

The cheerful firelight sending its warm bright glow over the geraniums and roses in the deep bay window, over the few pictures on the walls and the well filled book shelves, banished all thought of the wintry desolation without. Above the shaded lamp, on the little study table, was a portrait. It had hung there for many years, the old housekeeper said. I cannot describe that pictured face, so nobly, so serenely beautiful. Would you try to describe the look which the one you love wears for you? Neither will I try to paint with words that face, which was the full realization of my thought of those messengers who come from the unseen world to strengthen and bless the weak and suffering among mortals.

Was she Uncle Paul's first love—the fair young girl whose loss has darkened all the years of his early manhood? I had heard something of the great sorrow which had clouded those years, and of one whose life of beauty had kept her memory fresh in the hearts of many. I had heard, too, of the tenderness with which Uncle Paul took to his home, which should have been hers, her invalid mother and little brother, and cared for them till the mother went to join the daughter and the boys were fitted for commercial or professional life. But there was a mystery in his life. If he had loved and lost the one whose face was pictured there on the canvass how could he ever have given the place that would have been hers to the respectable, commonplace person whom I have known for five years as Mrs. Eastman?

The longer I watched the sweet face looking down upon me the greater seemed the mystery, and so thinking I fell asleep.

A voice awakened me. "Ah! Miriam, dreaming?"

"Yes, uncle; dreaming of that face above your study table."

He walked across the room and stood silently before it for a long time. Then he came to me. "It is very like her, Miriam; and she was as pure and good as the angels."

"Can you tell me of her, uncle? What was her name?"

Then, after a long silence, he told me his early sorrow and revealed the secret of the mystery that perplexed me.

"Her name was Grace Hyde. She was eighteen and I was twenty-one when she promised to be my wife. I was just finishing my professional studies, and had my own way to make in the world, but I was strong to do my work and to fight my battles, for Grace was awaiting the result. Her love would strengthen me and her hand would reward my victory.

"'I will not fetter you, Paul,' she added; 'I know how the promise of many young lives have been unfulfilled because the daily needs of life and the necessity of a practical answer to the questions: "What shall we eat, and what shall we drink, and wherewithal shall we be clothed?" have wearied the spirit not yet ready for its life-work, crippled its energies, and chained it to an ignoble service, while the nobler work it might have done, waits for another. Give all the time you need to the highest culture, the fullest development of your intellectual strength, find for yourself a fitting sphere of labor, and then, Paul, I will go with you, and together we will make life beautiful.'

"I could not combat her resolution. She was firm, and her father said; 'Grace is right; in the future you will acknowledge it.'

"So I finished my studies in the university and went to Paris. Grace, pale and tearful, with her little hands in mine, said: 'Be worthy of your best self, and may God forever guide and bless you, dear Paul.' And then we parted.

"I had not been away three months, when a letter from Grace announced her father's death. 'An attack of apoplexy,' she wrote. 'Poor mother, it is a terrible blow to her; I know not how she will bear it. I pray that I may help her, and that God will give me power to comfort her.' After that her letters were not sad, but there was a subdued cheerfulness, or it might have been an effort to be cheerful, and there was an impatient looking to my return. She had such trust in me, such a noble ambition for me, I was always stronger and better after reading her words. Her influence was around me continually, and the temptations of Paris life were all powerless. I could not disappoint her trust. I would try to be worthy of her."

"I had been in Paris nearly two years, and was preparing to return, when one day a letter, directed me in an unknown hand, was given to me. I opened it hastily, with a presentiment of coming ill, for I had heard nothing from Grace for many weeks. There were these words from Dr. Merton, the family physician of the Hydes:

DEAR PAUL: Grace does not wish to alarm her mother, and therefore wishes me to write. Her days are numbered. Come quickly, if you would see her.

"You can imagine the slow passing of the days that were bearing me to Grace. She was dying; she might be gone before I could reach her: and, as if in mockery of my impatience, the dull, monotonous ticking of the clock sounded in my ears, and the minutes passed so slowly. At last we reached New York. A few hour's ride in the cars and I was in A——. I went immediately to her house, but there was a strange name on the door plate. I rang, and inquired where Mrs. Hyde had removed. The servant gave me the street and number. I soon found the house, a small cottage, in a retired street. 'What was the cause of this removal?' I asked myself. 'Why had they left their old home? and why had Grace never mentioned it in her letters? Was it possible that poverty had been added to the sorrow of that great bereavement and Grace had concealed it to avoid giving me pain? Absorbed in these thoughts, I stood at the door of the cottage, just as Dr. Merton was passing out. He grasped my hand. 'Welcome home, Paul,' he said. 'They are all expecting you. Grace is quiet; she does not suffer now. I tell you, Paul, there is no use in trying to keep her here. She belongs to a better world. Angels like her are not given to us for a long time. They do their work quickly and then go home.'

"He had led me into the little parlor, and in a few words told me all that Grace had concealed from me. Mr. Hyde had died insolvent. His creditors had seized upon everything. Mrs. Hyde had rented a small house, and furnished it plainly with the little remnant of the estate which was left them. Few, even their most intimate friends, knew how very small the remnant was. Grace obtained a large class of pupils in music, and at night, when she returned, weary from her lessons, she taught classes in French. With a brave heart she worked, sustained by the consciousness that her mother was saved from toil and her little brothers were unconscious of the loss they had sustained.

"The constant, wearying toil was too much for one so wholly unused to it. While the spirit was very strong and the heoric young girl found peace in living for others, the warning came. She must rest. A little longer she struggled, then sank, and there was no hope for her. Her earthly work was done. * * * The old man wept like a child. I could not weep. In my heart a rebellious voice was saying: 'It must not be. Grace shall not die. Life is worthless without her.' * * *

"That evening she was my wife. I begged that it might be so; that I might not lose sight of her while she remained. How beautiful she was—my Grace—in that hour, with the dark hair brushed back from the pale forehead, the unnatural brightness that shone in her eyes and the burning crimson on her cheek.

"To love and cherish till death do us part." Are those words uttered with a full feeling of their significance when hopes are bright and life seems only to have commenced? To us they are of solemn import. Death might come to do his work in one week, one day, one hour, and I should have no Grace, no wife.

"But she was mine, mine! and together we waited the summons that should separate us. In the few days that remained she told me of the bright hopes of the future—our future—that had sustained her in the days of trial, and of the faith that had made all things easy to bear.

"If I had known it would end so, Paul, she said, 'I would have told you; but I thought I was stronger, and would work bravely without telling you anything that would pain you, and you would soon come. But it is all right. I shall be yours in the other home. Walk worthily here, Paul. Consecrate yourself to a noble life; remember all the dreams of your life, and perhaps in the home to which I am going I shall know it all.'

"Thus the days passed till the messenger came, and Grace went with him."

My uncle sat a long time, with his head on the table before him, before he spoke again. Then he continued; "It is thirty years since Grace's mother and brothers came to my home. Mrs. Hyde lived but a few years, and one by one the brothers—there were three of them—made homes for themselves, and I was left alone.

"In this room I kept the books and plants she loved, and her portrait hung always above my study table; and so I almost lived in her presence. But there were times—when my loneliness seemed insupportable and life was a weary burden—I would gladly lay down that I might go to her.

"Once I have seen her. Do not doubt it, Miriam. Five years ago I was very ill for many weeks. Grace's portrait was taken from the library and carried to my chamber, that during the long days, when I had only servants for attendants, I might have her face continually before me. The disease gained ground, and my physician insisted that I must have some more suitable attendant. I had at that time no near friend or relative within many miles' distance, and so Dr. Ives brought Jane Hope to the house. I had met her frequently in the homes of my patients, and I knew her as a faithful nurse.

"In my half-dreaming moods I had fancied that Grace was with me, and it was not always pleasant to be awakened by the touch of a hand larger and rougher than hers, and to hear a voice that had precision and hardness in its tones, when I had been dreaming of the voice so long silent. But I learned to know Jane better and to value her practical knowledge.

"One night the narcotics I had taken, instead of producing their usual effect, had brought on a state of feverish wakefulness. Strange, shadowy forms floated around me, sometimes taking to themselves the faces of friends I had known in boyhood. I could not drive them away. I rubbed my eyes, and said: 'There is the table, and there the window. There is nothing between me and them;' but the next minute the space would be filled by my ghostly visitors. Stephen Grant, who in college bore the name of Euclid Grant, from his devotion to his favorite study, and sometimes of a mathematical precision in every action, stood at the foot of my bed, in the dim light, wearing the same look of imperturbable gravity, his head covered with triangles, and his hands filled with circles and squares. In a low, monotonous voice he was reciting the causes of my disease, and prescribing for its cure: 'Let AB be the disease, and CD the time. Then to the square of—. He was interrupted by the dancing entrance of the young girl, who thirty-five years before had taught him lessons with which Euclid had nothing to do. She came with the freshness of springtime around her, bearing in her hand arbutus flowers, violets and daises, which she threw upon our Euclid. They fell upon him and wreathed themselves around the angles, circles and squares in which he had buried himself. Then a violin on a table commenced playing a lively strain, and tables, chairs and ghostly forms in wild confusion mingled in the dance, and I saw no more.

"When I awoke the light still burned dimly, and the portait of my lost Grace looked tenderly, pityingly upon me, and I knew that through all the long years of loneliness thus had she looked down upon my desolate home. When my sorrow seemed greater than I could bear one thought had strengthened me—the thought that in the home to which she had gone I should never more be lonely; she would be mine forever.

"But that night the earthly future seemed so long and the way through it so weary and desolate, in my agony I cried: 'How long! oh! how long!' Then the face changed. It became a living face as full of tenderness as before, but wearing a cheerful, hopeful look; and—you will think it a dream, Miriam, but I was not sleeping—I saw her as plainly as I see you now. She seemed to step down from the canvas and noiselessly to approach me. I tried to rise. I stretched forth my arms to clasp her; but the waving of her hand repelled me, and her upward look seemed to say, 'Not here, there.' She drew nearer, and then I saw Jane Hope, my kind, faithful nurse, by her side. Then she took Jane's hand in her own—that little pale hand—and holding it a moment she placed it in mine, and said, in those low, sweet tones, thrilling my whole being: 'Take her, Paul, my Paul; she will help you and comfort you till you come to me. I am waiting for you, Paul; in his time you will come, and then, my own—' I knew nothing more of that strange night, nor of many following days and nights.

"During the days of convalescence the portrait had such a happy look; and when Jane brought me the tempting delicacies she could so well prepare, there was a smile of sweet contentment on her face. So I learned to watch for her coming, and to be very happy when she sat by me, busy with her sewing, or when I could watch her moving around the room, giving those indescribable touches to its arrangements which do so much to please the eye.

"When I was well enough to go out, Jane came one morning to tell me she was going away. I told her all, and asked her to stay with me always. The next week we were married; and my kind, good nurse has proved the kindest and best of wives."

A strange ending to all of Paul Eastman's early hopes; a strange awakening from his early dreams. From Grace, the beautiful and gifted Grace, purified by suffering, whose saintly life was a holy memory in the hearts of all who loved her, to cold, stern practical Jane Hope, the faithful housekeeper, and, alas! nothing more, how great the change!

Did the young wife, looking down upon his earthly needs, send a messenger to give Paul Eastman a wife who should mend his stockings and keep his house clean; make his gruel and his bed; nurse his gout and prescribe for his rheumatism; or was it an overdose of morphine that did the work? Who shall say? He firmly believed that Jane was sent to him by Grace, and so he is content; while I—I only "tell the tale as 'twas told to me."

At Norwalk, Ct., a little muskrat strayed into a hencoop from a neighboring field and tried to get under a hen with a brood of half a dozen chickens. Biddy objected for some time, but finally yielded, and the waif slept under her wing that night with the chicks, and the arrangement pleased all concerned so well that it has been continued nightly ever since.

A Song About The Sioux.

A wandering tribe called the Siouxs,
Wear moccasins, having no shiouxs:
They are made of buckskin,
With their fleshy side in,
Embroidered with beads of light hiouxs.

When out on the war-path the Siouxs
March single file—never by twouxs—
And by blazing the trees
Can return at their ease,
And thus through the forest ne'er liouxs.

All new-fashioned boats he eschiouxs,
And uses the birch-bark caniouxs;
They are handy and light,
And inverted at night
Give shelter from storms and from diouxs.

The principal food of the Siouxs
Is Indian maize, which they briouxs,
Or hominy make,
Or mix in a cake,
And eat it with pork, as they chiouxs.

Now, doesn't this spelling look ciouxrious?
'Tis enough to make anyone fiouxrious!
So a word to the wise,
Pray our language revise
With orthography not so injurious!

STORY OF BIBLE SMITH.

A good representative of this better class of mountain whites was Bible Smith, the famous scout of the Cumberland army. I first encountered him at his home in the mountains of Tennessee in the autumn of 1850. Riding through that country on horseback, I was one afternoon overtaken by a storm, and sought shelter at his home for the night. It was of the better class of backwoods dwellings—what is termed a double-barreled cabin—a log house with two rooms on the ground floor, separated by an open passage-way. It was simply but comfortably furnished, and everything about it indicated that he was, in the phrase of the country, "right well fore-handed." His family consisted of his wife and three neatly clad children, the oldest about eight years of age. His wife was a comely young woman, who could read and write, and had very thoroughly studied the half-dozen books that composed the family library. Bible himself could neither read nor write. He could, he told me, "only just make out to spell. Sally, stranger," he said, "has all the larnin' of the fambly, so, ye see, she says par, instead of dad, which are the natural way." I soon discovered that he was an original character, with a talent for humorous anecdote that I never knew equaled. His stories kept me in a gale of laughter till long after midnight, but this is not the place to repeat them. This man is so good an illustration of the better class of mountain whites that I regret that time will not permit me to tell all about him and his interesting family; how everything about his house and out-buildings was the model of neatness; how his comely wife strove with grace and cheerfulness to do honor to a stranger guest; how tidily she kept her little brood, all clad in homespun of her own weaving and making; how the younger children climbed their father's knee, pulled his beard, and laughed at his stories as if they had never heard them before; how nimbly the oldest daughter sprang to do her mother's bidding; how she fetched the apples from the loft and the apple-jack from the pantry, and between whiles helped to lull the sleepy little ones to sleep, or to keep them, wakeful, out of mischief; how, when we parted for the night, Sally read a chapter from the big Bible, and then, while all knelt down, made such a prayer as the great All-Father is sure to hear. All this, and more, in full detail, I would like to tell you, and also how, when I was about to mount my horse to ride away in the morning, all the children gathered about me for a parting kiss, and how their mother—she was a young and comely woman, and I was then a younger man than I am now, and didn't know any better—how Sally looked so much as if she expected it, that I gave her the same parting salute I had given the children, and then turned and said "good-by" to Bible. Holding my hand in a warm grasp, and with a face as grave as a funeral procession, he responded; "I'm sorry to hev ye go, stranger, and ye'd better stay and settle yere. If ye will, we'll send ye to Congress, for the man as has cheek enough to kiss another man's wife before his very face, can git any office in this part of the kentry."

I saw nothing more of Bible till 13 years later, when, soon after the battle of Stone River, I made a visit to Gen. Rosecrans at Murfreesboro, Tenn. There I found him, holding the rank of captain in the Union army, and having already gained, by his great services, the title of "the scout of the Cumberland." His cool bravery, intimate knowledge of the country, and acquaintance with the loyal men of the district, had enabled him to be of more actual service to the Union than any single regiment in the army. I met him frequently during the six weeks that I was with Rosecrans, and the experiences that he related to me would fill a volume. One of them I will repeat, as it illustrates the susceptibility to religious impressions which is characteristic of all these people.

At the outset of the secession agitation Bibie declared for the Union, because, he said, he believed in "free schools, free speech and free air for all of God's critters"; and in the spring of 1861, when there were no Union troops south of the Ohio, and the disunion fever was raging furiously all over Tennessee, he organized 106 of his neighbors into a company of home guards, pledged to resist all attacks on the person or property of any of the number. Bible was elected to the command of this company, and it secured his district immunity from the conscription till about the time that Rosecrans took command of the army of the Cumberland. Shortly before this, Bible, taken unawares, when at home with his family, was captured by the confederates. The remainder I will let him relate in his own language, as I wrote it down directly afterward in my note-book.

"They tied me hand and foot," he said, "and toted me off to the military commission sittin' to Chattanooga. I know'd what that meant—a short prayer, a long rope, and a break-down danced on the top of nothin'. Better men nur me had gone that way to the kingdom—seven of 'em within a month—but I detarmined I wouldn't go if I could help it; not that I objected to the journey, only to goin' afore of Sally. Ye see, I hadn't been nigh so good a man as I'd orter be, and I reckoned that Sally, if she got there a little ahead o' me, could sort of put in a good word with the Lord, and git him to shut his eyes to a heap of my doin's; and 'sides, I know'd I'd feel mighty strange like up thar without her.

"Well, we got to Chattanooga just arter noon of the second day's tramp. The commission, they had too many on hand to luck after me to onct, so they put me inter a tent under guard of a whole Georgy regiment. Things looked 'mazing squally, and much as I detarmined to be a man, my heart went clear down inter my boots whenever I thought of Sally. I never felt so afore or since, for then I hadn't got used to lookin' at the gallus every day. I didn't know what to do, but thinking the Lord did, I kneeled down and prayed to Him right smart. I telled him I hadn't no face to meet him afore I'd done suthin' for the kentry, and that Sally's heart would be clean broke if I went afore her; but, howsomever, I said, He know'd best, and if it was His will, I had just nothin' to say agin it. That was all I said, but I said it over and over a heap of times, and it was right dark when I got off my knees. The Lord yered me, that are sartin, 'case I hadn't more'n got through prayin' 'fore a dirty gray-back—drunker'n a member of Congress—staggered inter the tent. I reckon he thort it was his own, for he dropped down onter the ground and went to sleep, axin' nuther leave nur license.

"Then, all to onct, it come inter my head what to do"—which was to cut his cords with the confederate's bowie-knife, change coat and hat with the unconscious fellow, and, thus disguised, escape from the camp. This he did, and after many adventures and hair-breadth escapes, he reached the mountain which looked down upon his home. "I got to the edge of the woods," he said, "on the hill just ahind of my barn, about an hour by sun; but I darn't go down, for, ye knows, the house stood in a clarin' and some of the varmints mought be a-watchin' for me. I lay there till it was clear dark, and then I krept to the rear door and listened. And what d' ye 'spose I yeard? Sally a-prayin', and prayin' for me so arnest and so tenderly that I sot down on the door-step and cried like a child, I did."

Here he paused for a few moments, while something in his throat choked his utterance. When he went on he said: "She telled the Lord how much I was to her; how she'd loved me ever since she first seed me; how she loved me afore her father or mother, or even the children; how she'd cried to make me love Him; and she know'd that, way down in my heart, I did love Him, though I didn't say so, 'case men don't speak out 'bout such things like women does. Then she said she couldn't bear to have me hung up like as if I was a traitor, that she could part with me if He thought best—see me die and not weep a tear, like a man, with a musket in my hand, doin' suthin' for my kentry.

"I couldn't stand no more, so I opened the door, fell on my knees, took her inter my arms, lay her head upon my shoulder, and sobbed out, 'The Lord has yered ye, Sally; I will love him. I will be worthy of the great love he's given to me.'"

Here he paused again for a few moments, and there was a peculiar softness and tenderness in his his voice when he added: "Since that minnit this earth has been another earth to me; and though I'se lost everything, though I has no home, though night arter night I sleeps out in the cold and the wet a-scoutin', though my house is burned down, and my wife and little girls is scattered, though every day I'se in danger of the gallus, though I'se been roped to a tree to die like a dog, and a thousand bullets has yelled death in my ears, though I'se seed my only boy shot down afore my very eyes, and I not able to speak to him to give him a morsel of comfort, or yere his last word, I'se had suthin' allers here (laying his hand on his heart) that has held me up, and made me look death in the face as if I loved it. And if ye haven't that, sir, no matter what else ye's got—what money, or larnin', or friends—ye's pore, porer nor I ez."

I never met him again, and in a few months he was shot down by the confederates. He entered the dark valley alone, and Sally was not there to meet him; and yet I doubt not that One was there to say a good word for him with the Lord, and that he was warmly welcomed by the grand company of great and good men, who, like him, had laid down their lives for truth and human freedom.—From an Address by J. R. Gilmore to the American Missionary Association.

THE FORGETFUL BOY.

Mrs. Verbosity wanted a package of yeast powder, the other day.

"Oh, dear," she sighed, "I shall have to send William after that yeast, and he has such a bad memory! I do declare, I never saw such a forgetful child in my life. He torments the soul out of me. Every time I send him to the store he brings back something I didn't send him for."

Then raising her voice, she called:

"Willie!"

"Yes, ma."

"You come here this minute; I'm in a great hurry. I want a yeast cake down to the store, and I don't want you to forget what I send you for. I don't want baking powder, same as I had yesterday, but a yeast cake. One of them tin foil cakes, Willie."

"Now, I want a yeast cake—how came that mud on your coat? You're been playing in the dirt again; I'll tell your father when he gets home. It's not baking powder I want. Turn your coat collar down. Now don't you come home with nutmegs like you did yesterday, nor with cinnamon, like you did the day before, when you were told to get citron. Your coat is buttoned wrong. Don't you forget, now."

"Yes, ma."

"Did you hear what I said?"

"No, ma."

"Oh, you do try my patience so. Come here this minute."

The boy appears.

The boy escaped to the street, when the anxious and painstaking matron called out from the window:

"Now don't you stop to play with those Mantrangialo boys, like you did last week and keep out of French's back yard—do you hear? It's yeast your going for, yeast; not turnips, nor carrots, nor any kind of vegetables—I got them this morning, you know. Remember, you've got a bad memory, and don't—"

But the boy was out of hearing.

He brought back a can of preserved peaches.

He had a bad memory.—Pittsburg Post.

A SCHOOL STRIKE.

These strikes by the school children are nothing new. But they don't develop and bring out and down the strong hand of the ruling power as they used to. Among the sunny memories of my own school days there glows, bright and soft as a summer sunset, the picture of the great strike at Hinman's, in Peoria, away back in 1853. Hinman's was the greatest school in the West. The dear old man was superintendent of public instruction, board of education, school trustee, county superintendent, principal, assistant and janitor. He had a pleasant smile, a firm temper and a slate frame. He also carried about his person a grip that would make a blacksmith's vise crawl into the scrap-heap and hide itself. We used to have general exercises Friday afternoons, at which we were wont to recite, in vociferous concert, the multiplication tables, the states and capitals, and such thrilling rhetorical exercises as "Will you walk? or ride?' and they tell us to be MOderate, but they, THEY—are to revelin-pro FUsion!" It was thrilling. But after we had learned all these chants "by heart," and could chant them off with our eyes shut, "Old Hinman" introduced an innovation—"speakin' pieces." Upon that we struck. We endured it three weeks and then we to determined to boycott the whole business. All the boys went into it. Bill Smith and Hub Tuttle, Bob Gregg, Ed Easton, Steve Dunn, Bill Rodecker, Hen Keener, and all the big boys, too. The first boy called on to "speak" was to announce the strike. As my name came pretty well up the alphabet, I stood a good chance of being a leader, a distinction for which I was not at all ambitious, being of tender years and of a ruddy countenance and sensitive feeling. But a boy named Allen, who was called ahead of me, flunked, and said his piece, "Hohenlinden," although we made such suggestive gestures at him that he forgot half of it and broke down and cried. When I was called I refused to speak. Being pressed for a reason, I said, in faltering accents, that "there wasn't going to be no more speaking." When the old man, with unfeigned surprise, asked me who said so, I said "all of us did." Then he said there would be "a little more speakin'" before the close of the session, and so he led me out of the rostrum. Then and there, with feelings which I now shudder to recall, I did my first song and dance act. I had often before performed my solitary cachuca to the lascivious pleasing of "Old Hinman's" slate frame, but never had I accompanied myself with words. Boy-like, I had selected for my piece a poem ezpressive of those peaceful virtues I most heartily despised, so that my performance at the inauguration of the strike ran somewhatlike this:

"Oh, not for me (whack!) is the rolling (whack!) drum,
Or the (whack, whack!) trumpet's wild (whack!) appeal. (Boo-hoo!)
Or the cry (Boo-hoo!) of (whack!) war when the (whack!) foe is come,
Or the (Ow!) brightly (whack!) flashing steel" (whack, whack!)

I cannot convey to the most vivid imagination the gestures which accompanied the seven stanzas of this beautiful poem. Suffice it to say that they kept pace with the old man's peculiar system of punctuation, until at last, overcome with conflicting emotions, I went sobbing to my seat, and wondered why an inscrutable Providence had given to the rhinoceros the hide that the eternal fitness of things had evidently prepared for the schoolboy.

But I forgot my own sorrows and dried my tears, in the enjoyment of the play, as my compatriots developed it. Mr. Hinman, who had been unusually gentle and self-restrained with me, lost his temper with the boy who followed me, and there was a sound of revelry for the next hour. He shook boys until their teeth rattled so you couldn't hear them cry; he hit Mickey McCann, the tough boy, one whack, with a skate strap, and Mickey ran out and rolled in the snow to cool off, he hit Jake Bailey across the thighs with the slate frame, and it hurt so that Jake couldn't howl—he just opened his mouth and forgot his own name. He pushed Bill Haskell into a seat and the bench broke; he shook Dan Stevens so that his feet didn't touch the floor for five minutes; he ran across the room and reached out for Lem Harkins, and Lem had a fit before the old man touched him; he whipped the two Knowltons with both hands at the same time, and the Gibbon family—five boys and a big girl—he hit all at once with the girl's skipping-rope, and they raised such a united wail the clock stopped; he kept the atmosphere of that old school-room full of dust and lint, weeping, wailing and gnashing of teeth, until his old arms ached and all hearts wearied of the inhuman strife and wicked contention, and then he stood up before us, in a sickening tangle of strap and cane and skate frame, rattan and skipping-rope, and asked, in clear, triumphant tones:

"WHO says there isn't going to be any more speakin'?"

And the boys of that school rose up as one being, and shrieked, in tones of anguish:

"NOBODY!"

And I, who led that strike and was its first martyr, I have been "speakin'" ever since.—Burdette in Brooklyn Eagle.

OPINIONS OF THINKERS.

Boice: The greatest events of an age are its best thoughts. Thought finds its way into action.

Emerson: Nothing is so indicative of deepest culture as a tender consideration of the ignorant.

Augustine: Faith is to believe what we do not see, and the reward of faith is to see what we believe.

George Eliot: It is not true that love makes all things easy; it makes us choose what is difficult.

Crowell: The light of friendship is the light of phosphorus—seen plainest when all around is dark.

Lord Breville: As charity covers a multitude of sins before God, so does politeness before men.

Guthrie: The Christian is like the ripening corn; the riper he grows the more lowly he bends his head.

L'Estrange: The desire of more and more rises by a natural gradation to most, and after that to all.

Lamartine: It is admirable to die the victim of one's faith; it is sad to die the dupe of one's ambition.

Margaret Fuller: It is not by attending to our friends in our way, but in theirs, that we can really avail them.

1889. 1889.
BOSTON WEEKLY JOURNAL.

AN IDEAL FAMILY NEWSPAPER.
ALL THE NEWS.

READING SUITED TO EVERY HOME FOR ONE DOLLAR A YEAR—THE BOSTON WEEKLY JOURNAL, WHICH HAS SO OFTEN VINDICATED ITS CLAIM OF BEING A DISTINCTIVELY NEW ENGLAND NEWSPEPER

Both as to representative position and popular estimate, gives assurance of retaining and enhancing, during the year which is at hand, those qualities for which the past has given vouchers.

Notwithstanding its increased merits, the price has been kept down to the low figure at which it was placed a few years ago—ONE DOLLAR a year, including postage—making the cost of the weekly issue, with its comprehensive resume of news, miscellany and comment, less than two cents a week.

CLUB RATES.

The inducements to those getting up clubs will continue to be of a very favorable character.

10 copies (and one extra to the originator of the club)....................................$10
20 copies (and two extra to the originator of the club).................................... 20

ONE COPY FREE FOR EVERY TEN SUBSCRIBERS.

In view of these rates and the quality and quantity of reading matter provided, the subscribers may feel warranted in claiming that they have the

CHEAPEST NEW ENGLAND NEWSPAPER.

A journal fit to enter every home is provided, free from the sensational and meretricious matter which mars a good deal of what is regarded as the popular periodicals of the day, and yet, as a contemporary has testified, "foremost in fullness of cleanly news and in the sagacious and courteous expression of its general convictions."

The publishers take pleasure in announcing that "THE KENNEBECKER"

Will contribute a series of articles, beginning with the first number in January, entitled,

"THE CRUISE OF THE WITCH OF THE SEA."
A Voyage to Oceanica and its Island Continent.

This will be one of the most interesting and instructive narratives of the experience of the well-known Kennebecker that has yet appeared.

BOTH THE GENERAL AND SPECIAL MATTERS OF INTEREST

To THE JOURNAL'S wide-spread constituency of readers will be supplied as heretofore, with industry and discrimination, including New England news and gleanings, notes and comments on the interests of the diverse industrial avocations, agricultural, manufacturing, commercial and transportation: reports on markets, trade and labor. Rambling talks and essays on home topics, correspondence from various parts of the world by our own correspondents, congressional news, political jottings, editorials on topics of living interest, poems, sketches, miscellaneous and household matters.

The always readable contributions of M. E. B., the Domesticana Articles, and the letters and sketches of others whose names have been welcome in the Weekly columns in the past, will continue to enliven them.

The year 1889 bids fair to be one of unique significance in the political life of the nation, marking, as it does, the return of the Republican party to power after a four years' interregnum of Democratic policy which has only served to highten by contrast the people's appreciation of what it has done in the past, and to emphasize the vital need of its future. The transition from the rule of the Fiftieth to that of the Fifty-first Congress, and from the Democratic Presidency to the Republican, with all that these imply, will make Washington a centre of constant and increasing interest during the year; and THE JOURNAL will therefore be fortunate in having in its Washington correspondent, "Webb," a contributor whose vigilant outlook for news and discerning the interpretation of current events are rarely rivalled.

Our special correspondents in Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont will contribute as heretofore their timely expositions of matters in New England.

The recent political campaign, like that of four years ago, has brought to the surface many doubtful and untrustworthy political guides, but the readers of THE JOURNAL can testify that they have found in it a consistent and unwavering exponent of Republicanism. THE JOURNAL will continue to be thoroughly American in its political principles and to maintain the policy of industrial as well as political independence; but while firm in the defense of the doctrines which have been accorded an added indorsement by the nation, it will be uniformly fair in its treatment of adversaries, and in the full and unbiased presentation of facts.

While giving due attention to the purport of occurrences at home, the foreign field, which promises to be of marked interest during the year 1889, will be comprehensively scanned and outlined; and, in particular, those still pending controversies which affect our relations with Canada and European powers will be the subject of close observation.

THE WEEKLY JOURNAL is issued every Thursday morning. Specimen copies will be sent to any address.

PLUSH MANICURE SET
For your "best lady," or a Doll for the baby.

AN ELEGANT LEATHER OR PLUSH ALBUM for your—well, for anybody. Yes, anybody can look at our goods. We are glad to have people in our store, and always pleased to show what we have. Well, what we do have, we will not try to mention the many things you can see here, for space would not admit, but we want rather to impress upon your mind the fact, that

Whatever You Want,

You Will Find

At Our Store,

And furthermore, that when you buy here, we want you satisfied, this is the reason that

WE will exchange goods or refund money. We do this in fairness to our customers and justice to ourselves, for if those who buy of us know we are bound to make quality and price satisfactory, then we keep them as customers and are the more careful what and how we buy for them.

NOW we know that you all want nice goods, attractive, pretty, and as cheap as possible for your Presants, and that is just what we have in our line of

The Christmas Gift.

You never could guess, though you tried a week,
What Santa Claus brought to our little boy,
With the dawn of Christmas, glad and bright,
When the soft, new snow was piled high and white.
And the bells were ringing for very joy.

It was only the night before that he
Had hung up his crimson stocking wee,
And, merrily nodding his golden head,
He snuggled deep down in his little bed,
As happy as ever a boy could be.

"Oh! there will be candy," he said, "I know,
And a good big drum, and some steam-cars, too;
But I want something that I never had,
Something real new," said my four-year-old lad.
"I hope he will bring it, mamma, don't you?"

Now, whether old Santa Claus heard him then
I really can't say; but next morning, when
Our little boy opened his happy eyes,
And the Christmas sun was high in the skies,
The gladdest was he of all little men.

For better than candy, or drum or cars
Was the gift that slumbered on mamma's bed:
The little new sister for Jamie to love,
The Christmas present from heaven above.
"Oh! I thank dear Santa Claus," Jamie said.

THE WIDOW'S SURPRISE.

A California mining town, away up amid the snow-clad, rock-bound peaks of the Sierra Nevada mountains.

The town was irregularly laid out, and was scattered along a creek which emptied into the Consumnes river several miles below. Both the dwellings and business houses—or, more properly speaking, cabins—were constructed of unhewn pine logs, the crevices between the timbers being "chinked and plastered with mud. The town contained at least a dozen saloons, or saloons and gambling houses combined, and in these hells much of the hard-earned money of the miner parted company with him, to take up its temporary abode in the saloon till or the pocket of the professional gambler. The dwellings of the town were scattered along the creek or built on the side of the mountain, the majority of them being rough "bachelor dens," for women were scarce in the newly-discovered diggings.

In a small cabin in the upper end of the town sat a woman in widows' weeds, holding upon her knee a bright-eyed, sunny-faced little girl about five years old, while a little cherub of a boy lay upon a bear-skin before the open fire-place. It was Christmas Eve, and the woman sat gazing abstractedly into the fire. She was young, and as the glowing flames lit up her sad face they invested it with weird beauty.

Mary Stewart was the widow of Aleck Stewart, and but two years before had lived comfortably and happy in a camp on the American river. Aleck was a brawny miner, but the premature explosion of a blast in an underground tunnel had blotted out his life in an instant, leaving his family without a protector and in straightened circumstances. His daily wages had been their sole support, and now that he was gone, what could they do?

With her little family Mrs. Stewart had emigrated to the camp in which we find them (all western mining towns are called camps), and there she earned a precarious livelihood by washing clothes for the miners. Hers was a hard lot, but the brave little woman toiled on, cheered by the thought that her daily labors stood between her darling little ones and the gaunt wolf of starvation. Their clothes were patched and shabby, and their food plain and sometimes scant, yet they were never reduced to absolute suffering.

Jack Dawson, a strong, honest miner, was passing the cabin this Christmas Eve, when the voice of the little girl within attracted his attention. Jack possessed an inordinate love for children, and although his manly spirit would abhor the sneaking practice of eavesdropping, he could not resist the temptation to steal up to the window just a moment to listen to the sweet, prattling voice. The first words he caught were:

Before papa died we always had Christmas, didn't we, mamma?"

"Yes, Totty darling; but papa earned money enough to afford to make his little pets happy at least once a year. You must remember, Totty, that we are very poor, and although mamma works very, very hard, she can scarcely earn enough to supply us with food and clothes."

Little bright-faced Benny raised his curly head from its soft nest in the warm bear-skin and cheerily said:

"Des' wait till I dit to be a man, mamma, an' 'oo won't have to wort. I'se doin' to be a dreat big miner 'ike papa was, an' dit 'oo ever so much money, but I won't do near 'em hateful blastin' fings an' dit tiiled 'ike papa did."

Jack Dawson still lingered upon the outside. He could not leave, although he felt ashamed of himself for listening.

"Why, bless my little man, what a brave future he has planned! I do hope and pray, darling, that you will grow up a strong and good man, and one who will be a blessing and a comfort to mamma when she gets old."

"We hung up our stockings last Christmas, didn't we, mamma?" questioned the little girl.

"Yes, Totty, but we were poor then, and Santa Claus never notices real poor people. He gave you a little candy then just because you were such good children."

"Is we any poorer now, mamma?"

"Oh, yes, much poorer! He would never notice us at all now."

Jack Dawson detected a tremor of sadness in the widow's voice as she uttered the last words, and he wiped a suspicious dampness from his eyes.

"Where's our clean stockings, mamma? I'm going to hang mine up anyhow; maybe he will come like he did before, just because we try to be good children," said Totty.

"It will be no use, darling. I am sure he will not come," and tears gathered in the mother's eyes as she thought of her empty purse.

"I don't care—I'm going to try, anyhow. Please get one of my stockings, mamma," pleaded the little girl.

"Your clean stockings are on the line outside, and I cannot go out and hunt for them this bitter cold night. You may hang up your old ones; but, oh! darling, I fear you will be so terribly disappointed in the morning. Please let it go till next Christmas, and then we may be richer."

"No, mamma; I am going to try, anyhow."

Jack Dawson's great, generous heart swelled until it seemed breaking from his bosom. He heard the patter of little bare feet on the cabin floor as Totty ran about hunting her's and Benny's stockings, and after she had hung them up, heard her sweet voice again as she wondered over and over if Santa Claus really would forget them. He heard the mother, in a choking voice, tell her treasures to get ready for bed; heard them lisp their childish prayers, the little girl concluding: "And, O Lord, please tell good Santa Claus that we are very poor, but that we love him as much as rich children do. For dear Jesus' sake. Amen!"

After they were in bed, through a small rent in the plain white curtain, he saw the widow sitting before the fire, her face buried in her hands and weeping bitterly. On a peg, just over the fire-place, hung two little patched and faded stockings, and then he could stand it no longer. He softly moved away from the window to the rear of the cabin, where some objects fluttering to the wind met his eyes. Among these he searched until he found a little blue stocking, which he removed from the line, folded tenderly, and placed in his overcoat pocket, and then set out for the main street of the camp.

He entered Harry Hawk's gambling hell, the largest in the place, where a host of miners and gamblers were at play. Jack was well-known in the camp, and when he got upon a chair and called for attention the hum of voices and the clicking of ivory checks suddenly ceased. Then, in an earnest voice, he told what he had seen and heard, repeating every word of the conversation between the mother and her children. In conclusion, he said:

"Boys, I think I know you, every one of you, and I know what kind o' metal ye'r made of. I've an idee that Santy Claus knows jist whar that cabin's sitiwated, an' I've an idee he'll find it afore mornin'. Hyar's one o' the little gal's stockin's that I hooked off'n the line whar I heard the widder say she'd hung 'em with the washin'. The daddy o' them little 'uns was a good, hard-workin' miner, an' he crossed the range in the line o' duty, just as any of us is liable to do in our dangerous business. Hyar goes a twenty-dollar piece right down in the toe, an' hyar I lay the stockin' on this card-table—now chip in, much or little, as ye kin afford."

"Hold them checks of mine on the ace-jack," said Brock Clark, a gambler, and, leaving the faro table, he picked the little stocking up carefully, looked at it tenderly, and when he laid it down another twenty had gone into the toe, to keep company with the one placed there by Dawson.

Another and another came up, until the foot of the stocking was well filled, and then came the cry from the gambling tables:

"Pass her around, Jack."

At the word he lifted it from the table and started around the hall. Before he had circulated it at half a dozen tables it showed signs of bursting beneath the weight of gold and silver coin, and a strong coin bag, such as is used for sending treasure by express, was procured, and the stocking placed inside of it. The round of the large hall was made; and in the meantime the story had spread all over the camp. From various saloons came messengers saying:

"Send the stockin' round the camp; the boys are a-waitin' for it."

With a party at his heels Jack went from saloon to saloon. Games ceased, and tipplers left the bars as they entered each place, and miners, gamblers, speculators, everybody, crowded up to tender their Christmas gift to the miner's widow and orphans. Any one who has lived in the Far-Western camps and is acquainted with the generosity of Western men, will feel no surprise or doubt my truthfulness when I say that after the round had been made the little blue stocking and the heavy canvas bag contained over eight thousand dollars in gold and silver coin.

Horses were procured and a party despatched to a large town down on the Consumnes, from which they returned near day break with toys, clothing, provisions, etc., in almost endless variety. Arranging their gifts in proper shape, and securely tying the mouth of the bag of coin, the party noiselessly repaired to the widow's humble cabin. The bag was first laid on the step, and the other articles piled up in a heap over it. One the top was laid the lid of a large pasteboard box on which was written with a piece of charcoal:

"Santy Claus doesn't always Give poor folkes The shake in this camp."

* * * * * * *

Christmas morning dawned bright and beautiful. The night had been a stinging cold one, and when the rising sun peeped over the chain of mountains to the East, and shot its beams upon the Western range, the sparkling frost flashed from the snow-clad peaks as though their towering heads were sprinkled with pure diamonds.

Mrs. Stewart arose, and a shade of pain crossed her handsome face, as the empty little stockings caught her maternal eye. She cast a hurried glance towards the bed where her darlings lay sleeping, and whispered:

"Oh, God! how dreadful is poverty."

She built a glowing fire, and set about preparing the frugal breakfast. When it was almost ready she approached the bed, kissed the little ones until they were wide awake, and lifted them to the floor. With eager haste Totty ran to the stockings, only to turn away, sobbing as though her heart would break. Tears blinded the mother, and clasping her little girl to her heart, she said in a choking voice:

"Never mind, my darling; next Christmas I am sure mamma will be richer, and then Santa Claus will bring us lots of nice things."

"Oh! Mamma!"

The exclamation came from little Benny, who had opened the door and was standing gazing in amazement upon the wealth of gifts there displayed.

Mrs. Stewart sprang to his side and looked in speechless astonishment. She read the card, and then, causing her little ones to kneel down with her in the open doorway, she poured out her soul in a torrent of praise and thanksgiving to God.

Jack Dawson's burly form moved from behind a tree a short distance away, and sneaked off up the gulch, great crystal tears chasing each other down his face.

The family arose from their knees and began to move the stores into the cabin. There was several sacks of flour, hams, canned fruit, pounds and pounds of coffee, tea, and sugar, new dress goods, and a handsome warm woolen shawl for the widow, shoes, stockings, hats, mittens and clothing for the children, a great big wax doll that could cry and move its eyes, for Totty, and a beautiful red sled for Benny. All were carried inside, amid alternate laughs and tears.

"Bring in that sack of salt, Totty, and that is all," said the mother. "Is not God good to us?"

"I can't lift it, mamma; it's froze to the step."

The mother stooped and took hold of it and lifted harder and harder, until she raised it from the step. Her cheek blanched as she noted its great weight, and she carried it in and laid it upon the breakfast table. With trembling fingers she loosed the string and emptied the contents upon the table. Gold and silver—more than she had ever thought of in her wildest dreams of comfort, and almost buried in the pile of treasure lay Totty's little blue stocking.

We will not intrude longer upon such happiness, but leave the joyous family sounding praises to Heaven—and Santa Claus.

The whole story soon reached Mrs. Stewart's ears. She knew Jack Dawson by sight, and when she next met him, although the honest fellow tried hard to push by her, she caught hold of his coat and compelled him to stand and listen to her tearful thanks. The tears shed were not all hers, for when Jack moved away there were drops of liquid crystal hanging to his ruddy cheeks.

Four months from that "Merrie Christmas" Mrs. Stewart became Mrs. Jack Dawson, and every evening, when the hardy miner returns from his daily labor to his comfortable and happy home, Totty and Benny will climb upon his strong knees, and almost smother him with kisses, while they lovingly address him as "Our Santa Claus papa."—Williamsport Breakfast-Table.

A LION STORY FROM WYOMING.

Mr. Alsop and one of his men, John Jackson, were looking around the rocks one morning after their sheep when the latter saw a crevice leading into a basin in the solid rock, which was about forty feet in diameter at the top, and was shaped exactly like the upper half of an hour-glass. He thought he would go down into this basin and see what it was like, when he observed another inlet close by, which seemed to offer easier passage. Jackson walked around the corner of the rock and brought up very suddenly when he found himself face to face with an immense mountain lion. Mr. Alsop happened to be close behind him, and coming up at this juncture shot the lion, which rolled to the bottom of the basin and disappeared. Being anxious to secure the hide of the lion, a careful investigation was made, and it was discovered that the bottom of the basin was a hole about twenty feet in diameter, opening into a cavity beneath, into which the beast had fallen. A rough ladder was constructed and Mr. Elsop descended into this curious cavern, where he met a sight that fairly paralyzed him for a moment. He found himself in the lower half of the hour-glass shaped hole in the rocks, which carried out the simile completely. The floor, which was of solid sandstone, was 40 feet across, and the sides sloped upward and inward to the neck, diving the lower half from the basin above. As this neck was but 20 feet wide, it will be seen that a person or animal who fell to the bottom would be in a rocky room shaped like an ink bottle right side up. It would be impossible for a human being or beast of any description, once in there, to escape without aid. By standing on tiptoe it was just possible for a tall man to reach the roof with the tips of his fingers, and as impossible to climb out of it as it would be to scale the wall of Holiday's opera house backward without a ladder. In this cavernous room lay the dead mountain lion, but he was not alone. Nine more mountain lions of the largest size, so recently fallen in that their hides were still whole, lay about, while the hole was filled from one side to the other with bones of every species of animal known on the plains. They had fallen into the trap formed by nature, and, being unable to get out, had starved to death.

CHEWING GUM.

"Girls, if you would have plump and rosy cheeks, don't chew gum," are the opening words of a lecture just issued by a distinguished professor, on the evils of chewing gum, a habit which just now has taken a strong hold on the girls of the land.

The fashionable young lady considers a package of daintily arranged chewing-gum as a very necessary part of her wardrobe, and when the "in-the-swim young man" wants to make his best girl a present, he gives her a little silver box, more dainty even than the gum itself, and from this the miss is pleased to hand around the gum to her afternoon callers.

A young lady and her tolu are inseparable. On the beach and in the bath it is with her, and even in the folds of her scant evening dress it may always be found. The gum habit has spread over the entire land, and the California girl uses it, as does also the New York belle, for dame fashion has decreed it.

The gum comes in attractive packages, tied in delicate ribbons, and contained in each bundle of one dozen pieces is a neat card setting forth the advantages of gum from a sanitary standpoint. It reads: "Dyspepsia, which is so prevalent in America, is caused solely by a lack of saliva assimilated with the food, due to the fact that Americans eat too much and too rapidly. The act of chewing gum stimulates the salivary glands, and, by giving to the food taken its proper quota of saliva, greatly aids digestion, and positively prevents dyspepsia."

The lecture published by the eminent scientist quoted above, refutes the statements of the chewing-gum maker, and asserts that the dainty morsel is a dangerous enemy to womankind, almost as great an evil as rum is to mankind. Fair maidens are turned into human wrecks, and irreparable damage to the system is done by the constant use of chewing-gum. Rosy cheeks are made hollow and sallow, and cute dimples are transformed into wrinkles, while deep lines are drawn around the once beautiful eyes. The lecturer says: "The constant exertion of the masseter muscle hardens it, and removes the fatty substance which conduces to roundness. Not only is the fullness of the cheek destroyed, but there is a great tendency to wrinkling of the skin, a natural result of the falling away of the parts beneath it."

The doctor uses many other arguments equally convincing, and when they are placed before the ladies properly the demand for gum will be cut off very materially.

The output of chewing-gum is said to be very large. One New York house turns out daily, in small quantities of one dozen pieces, a quantity that in bulk would make nearly three tons. This house makes the brand which meets with special favor in the eyes of society people. There are many smaller manufactories, all located in Boston, New York and Philadelphia, and the entire daily production is between five and six tons.—Philadelphia Record.

WOMEN IN THE BIBLE.

Wife—The Bible says much in favor of women, John. I thought that the Israelites kept their women in the background, but if they did, the Bible, which is their history, doesn't.

Husband—Humph! The Israelites did well by keeping their children in the background. That's where children should be.

W.—But still the Bible says that—

H.—Oh, I know there were a few women mentioned in the Bible—there was Jezebel, she was a woman.

W.—Yes, and there was Ahad; he was a man. And there was—

H.—It is no use talking, Mary. The Bible is a history of men. Women are mentioned only incidentally, as they had influence on the actions of men. The Book says very little about women, compared to what it does about men.

W.—(musingly)—You may be right after all, John, now when I come to think of it. There is one thing, at any rate, it says about men it does not say about women.

H.—(smilingly)—I thought you would come to your senses, Mary. What is it that the book says about men that it does not say about women?

W.—(placidly)—It says "All men are liars."

Then the husband arose and put on his hat, and went out to see what kind of a night it was.—Boston Courier.

FROM QUAINT NANTUCKET.

Apropos of Nantucket, one hears some rather odd sayings and some quaint happenings there.

"You see, we are somewhat out of the way," said one of the islanders, "so tramps seldom trouble us, and it is only when our summer visitors come that we think of locking our doors at night.

Last fall a man was tried for petty larceny, and sentenced by the judge to three months in jail. A few days after the trial, the judge, accompanied by the sheriff, was on his way to the Boston boat, when they passed a man sawing wood.

The sawyer stopped his work, touched his hat, and said, "Good morning, judge."

The judge looked at him a moment, passed on a short distance, then turned to glance backward, with the question, "Why, sheriff, isn't that the man I sentenced to three months in jail?"

"Yes," replied the sheriff, hesitatingly—"yes, that's the man; but you—you see, judge, we—we haven't any one in jail now, and we thought it a useless expense to hire sombody to keep the jail for three months just for this one man, so I gave him the jail key and told him that if he'd sleep there nights it would be all right."—*R. # The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 21, 1888.

For the merriest and happiest sort of a Christmas, see how many others you can make happy.

According to the official returns there were just three ballots cast in the whole country for Lockwood and Love, the Equal Rights candidates, in the late election, and there is some interest to know who cast that third ballot.

President Cleveland concludes that he cannot get away to attend the tariff reform banquet in Boston, and the reformers must content themselves with the presence of Secretaries Fairchild and Endicott, who will be on hand to represent their chief.

New York legislators, before taking their seats, must make oath that they did not secure their election by corrupt means, and the Reform Club of New York city has caused a good deal of uneasiness among some of the members-elect by notifying them that it will proceed against them for perjury if they take this oath.

Stanley, the brave explorer, is now reported to be a prisoner in the hands of the Mahdi. Better this than that he should be dead, as has been feared; but it is also reported that the Mahdi will put him to death unless the English abandon Suakim. If Stanley is really living and in captivity, England's duty to him is very clear.

John Greenleaf Whittier, the beloved poet, passed his 81st birthday Monday, receiving, as usual on such occasions, calls from many friends, and letters of warm congratulation from all parts of the country. The venerable poet is experiencing the infirmities of age, and does no more writing, but is quietly passing his declining years in the enjoyment of his home and the love of his countrymen, in whose affections he holds a warm place, and all of whom heartily wish him "many happy returns" of his natal day.

The Panama Canal Company is on its last legs. Its attempt to float another lot of bonds has dismally failed, DeLesseps and his associates have resigned, and the innocent French people who have put their millions into the scheme are beginning to realize that they are the victims of a huge swindle. When the thing was started the canal was to be built at a cost not exceeding $160,000,000, but the funded debt of the company is now over $350,000,000, and the unfunded debt some $50,000,000 more. It is said that the American people like to be gulled, but the French seem to enjoy it even better than the Yankees.

The Wool Reporter of Boston makes some serious charges relating to the speakership contest at Boston, which ought to be thoroughly investigated before the members of the House make choice of their presiding officer. The speaker, like Cæsar's wife, should be above suspicion, and it may be safely assumed that the House will not elect to that office any candidate who is suspected of having any connection with lobbyists. Says the Reporter:

> The spectacle is now presented of a contest for the speakership of the state House of Representatives between several gentlemen, each of whom derives his principal strength from the great corporate interests behind them. The Boston Gas Company has a candidate for speaker in opposition to water gas and other projects expected to be brought before the General Court; the Bay State Gas Company has a different candidate; the West End Railway has a candidate in opposition to elevated roads; and the proposed elevated roads have their own particular candidate; water gas has a candidate; and, in fact, the speakership seems likely to be contended for by representatives of all the great corporate interests, and of everybody else excepting those unimportant personages—the voters whom the legislators were chosen to represent. The spectacle now presented by state and city politics in the commonwealth once represented by Webster, Everett and Sumner is not a pleasing one.

The Boston Journal takes issue with those of its contemporaries who have accepted the large female vote in the recent city election as establishing the desirability of woman suffrage on a larger scale. On the contrary, it says:

> This episode strengthens one of the chief objections to such suffrage. Those who have objected to giving the ballot to women have always contended that the vote of women would be a capricious and spasmodic factor. They have argued that when some issue was prominent which appealed strongly to the emotions, women voters would respond; but that when the matters to be settled were only the ordinary questions of candidates and policies, involving considerations with which the average woman has no acquaintance, and in which she feels no interest, women would be indifferent, and the reinforcement of the better elements of administration, promised through their aid, would not be forthcoming. The woman's vote on school committee in Boston corroborates this view. The relations of the school to the home, the importance of educational interests, the necessity of a proper administration of the schools—these have been always what they are to-day. Yet, until this last election, only a handful of women have taken the trouble to register in order that they might be qualified to vote; and, of this handful, sometimes hardly more than half have taken the further trouble to vote. What we need in our politics, on the part of all who are endowed with the suffrage, is a steady, persistent attention to public affairs and a regular exercise of the franchise. As things now are, there is a considerable body of voters who cannot be aroused—or can be aroused only on rare occasions—to their duty as citizens. The net result of the school suffrage experiment to date, is to show that the women's vote would be vastly more capricious and irregular than that of the men, and that it would be cast only under the influence of some exciting propaganda.

Charles Francis Adams, president of the Union Pacific railroad, gave an address on the interstate commerce law, at the dinner of the Commercial Club in Boston last Saturday, which proved one of the most interesting criticisms of the law which has been heard. He said the law had not produced the results hoped for. Yet the present condition of things is due to the low moral tone of railroad officials rather than the law. Their methods he described as follows:—

> The dishonest methods of rate-cutting, the secret system of rebates, the direct and hidden payments made to influence the course of traffic, resorted to or devised during the last two years, I do not hesitate to say are unprecedented in the whole bad record of the past. Names of members or employes of firms whose business it was desirable to secure, but to whom it was unlawful openly to allow a rebate, have been put upon the pay-rolls of companies at salaries equal to the estimated amount of what the rebate would have been; when the influence of a particular person was thought necessary to secure certain shipments, he has been advised that the company wished to consult him; but, in order that it might do so more conveniently, he must live in a house in a certain quarter—and the rent of that house has been paid by the company. Where it was thought expedient to cut the rate on passenger tickets to a given point, without affecting the rates to intermediate points under the interstate commerce act, tickets to that point have been placed by the hundreds in the hands of "scalpers," and they were allowed a commission equal to half the price of the ticket.

Mr. Adams said the smaller roads were being ground out of existence by the larger ones, and so also are the smaller centers of business suffering to the advantage of the larger. The law is driving the railroads of the country toward some great system of consolidation. He would have the anti-pooling provisions of the law repealed, or at least modified so that roads may make contracts for the division of competitive traffic at reasonable rates.

About 20 couples attended the dance in the Nassowanno House hall last Friday evening, and greatly enjoyed the occasion.

Austin Davis of Glendale shows some remarkably fine and well-preserved pears, which he has succeeded in keeping since fall.

Everybody has been busy this week visiting the different stores, examining the well-selected wares and procuring Christmas gifts.

The widow of the late J. H. Smith has received $2500 insurance from the Odd Fellows' Mutual Relief Association of Springfield.

The hard rain of Monday and Tuesday caused the Quaboag to overflow its banks, covering long stretches of meadow and flooding some of the cellars on River street.

Palmer Lodge, I. O. O. F., will hold its annual meeting next Friday evening, for the election of officers, and will consider the reception of several candidates at its meeting this evening.

The rain of Monday and Tuesday gave the merchants a rather blue outlook, but the fine weather since has given them an excellent Christmas trade and they are correspondingly happy.

The delivery wagon of E. A. Buck & Company, the Central street hardware dealers, came near being smashed last Saturday afternoon, but the horse was caught after it had run but a short distance.

The district court sent four appealed liquor cases from Monson, one from Wales for breaking and entering, and another for the larceny of a team from Horace Towne, to the superior court at Springfield this week, for trial.

At the district court last Saturday these entries were made upon the civil docket: Almer Chalk vs. Palmer Carpet Company, action of contract; F. D. Beach of Monson vs. Charles W. Whitney and trustee of Monson, action of contract.

If you have not yet purchased your Christmas gifts a glance over our advertising columns will show you where to go for them. If you have already made your selections, just remember the local merchants when next you want anything.

Why not make some distant friend a Christmas present of a year's subscription to the Palmer Journal? It will make them glad fifty-two times a year and tell them more news about the town in one issue than you can write in a dozen letters.

Rev. A. W. Weeks was one of the speakers at the fellowship meeting of the Westfield Baptist Association, held with the Carew church in Springfield, Tuesday. It is expected that the association will hold a similar meeting with the Second Baptist church of this place in the near future.

A buggy containing two young fellows was overturned by a spirited horse near the Boston and Albany railroad bridge last Saturday afternoon, and the occupants thrown to the ground, though fortunately not injured. The animal became frightened by a passing train, and was stopped in time to prevent serious damage to the vehicle.

J. P. Hatch and A. C. Maxwell have formed a copartnership and started upon a new enterprise, in competition with G. W. Cobb. They propose to run two carts, and sell bread and pastry, which will be made at the bakery of H. P. Longley, in Westboro, and shipped to this place daily. At present they will not establish a salesroom here, but intend to later.

The Young Men's Library Association is making arrangements to celebrate the 10th anniversary of its organization, which occurs Feb. 8. W. C. Greene will probably deliver a historical address, while the committee in charge of the programme is trying to secure a good speaker for the occasion.

Morning Star Lodge, Daughters of Rebekah, of Springfield, made a return visit to Good Cheer Lodge at Odd Fellows' hall Wednesday evening, and conferred the degree upon six candidates. After the work the Odd Fellows and their families, and both lodges of the Daughters of Rebekah, repaired to the Masonic banquet hall, where a supper was served in excellent style.

Sheriff Healey went to Worcester yesterday and brought back Annie Curtis, the girl who recently stole a small sum of money from another waiter at the Weeks House. The girl has a hard name in Worcester and is well known to the police, so it was very easy to find her. Her case came before the district court yesterday, she being fined $10 and costs on each of two counts.

Lovers of good music are offered a treat at Springfield next Tuesday evening, when the Hampden County Musical Association will give the oratorio "The Messiah." Mme. Giulia Valda, soprano, Miss Alma Dell Martin, contralto, Thomas L. Cushman, tenor, and Myron W. Whitney, bass, are to be the soloists. A special car will be run to Palmer after the oratorio, and tickets can be secured at this office.

At the regular weekly debate of the "Wigwam" Monday evening, it was decided that the president of the United States should be elected by the present electoral system instead of by popular vote. The next subject for discussion will be: "Should capital punishment be prohibited by law?" It was also voted to hold the next meeting Wednesday evening, instead of the usual time, on account of its being Christmas eve.

The lecture course under the auspices of the Wigwam debating society is assured, enough season tickets being sold to guarantee expenses. The entertainments will be held in the Congregational church, the first being the Hayden Quartette, probably Jan. 8. Those who have agreed to take tickets are requested to meet at the district court room next Wednesday evening to select their seats, and those who are not present will have seats allotted them by the committee.

The Journal job rooms have this week turned out an edition of 10,000 eight-page papers for the Hampden County Musical Association of Springfield, containing the announcement of their oratorio for Christmas night, and the advertisements of Springfield's foremost merchants. The pages are 13 by 16 inches, printed with a tinted ink on calendered paper, and its advertising patrons compliment it by saying it is the best looking sheet ever gotten out for them.

Deputy Sheriff Healey and the prosecuting committee made an unexpected visit upon D. J. Flynn and D. J. Keefe at Three Rivers last Saturday night, and seized two bottles of whisky in the latter place, while in the place kept by the former the committee managed to get a bottle of whisky and about the same quantity of gin. These two dealers were granted licenses only to sell beer, and if they are convicted on these cases in court, as they undoubtedly will be, their licenses will be revoked.

A probate court at Springfield Wednesday granted administration on the estates of Gad O. Bliss, late of Longmeadow, John Hooker administrator, with the will annexed; Maria Goddard, late of Longmeadow, David Lathrop administrator, with the will annexed; Mary Viola Bartlett, late of Palmer, E. M. Bartlett administrator. The will of Ellen Bliss Hooker, late of Longmeadow, John Hooker executor, was approved, and an inventory returned in the estate of Phoebe F. Blodgett, late of Wilbraham, real $625, personal $2595.

The track has been put in for the six-days' walking match at the Brunswick Billiard Parlors, and is considered an excellent one. It is about five feet wide, and 25 laps to the mile, while a railing separates it from the audience. A good deal of interest is manifested in the match, and the attendance promises to be large. Some of the merchants in town have offered prizes for the local contestant making the best score. These entries have been made: McKelligott of Thorndike, Coles of Palmer, Hartnett and Flannery of Warren, Malone of Springfield, Merritt of Three Rivers, Mason of Palmer. Others are expected tomorrow.

The Odd Fellows' Latest Scheme.

At the meeting of Palmer Lodge, I. O. O. F. last Friday evening the committee made its report, relative to the proposed opera house. They stated that several desirable locations in the central part of the village could be bought at reasonable figures, but did not advise the members to buy any particular lot. It was then voted to instruct the committee to procure plans, specifications, etc., and submit the same, with the estimated cost of building such a structure as proposed, at the meeting next Friday evening. It is understood that if a building is erected it will be built by a stock company, composed of Odd Fellows, who can take as large or small a slice in the scheme as they deem expedient.

Rev. T. J. Snulliva Remembered.

The 15th anniversary, or the crystal wedding feast, was appropriately celebrated at St. Thomas' Catholic church Wednesday morning, the event being in recognition of the ordination of Rev. T. J. Sullivan as a priest. A number of his many friends reminded him of the occasion by sending him useful as well as valuable presents, and tendering their congratulations, for which he reciprocated in a genial way. His pastorate here extends over a period of ten years, and during this time he has not only labored untiringly to upbuild the church and unite its people, but has gained a wide acquaintanceship among the different sectarian classes, who hold him in high esteem. To-day the church is in a very prosperous condition, and promises to continue its good work for the community to which it belongs. The structure, which is now being enlarged, will be dedicated the latter part of February, when an elaborate programme will be carried out in the presence of Bishop O'Reilly, and other priests of the diocese.

Personal.

Miss Katie Curley, the telegraph operator at the Western Union office, starts to-morrow for a week's vacation at New London, Ct., and other places. Her duties here will be discharged by William Aiken of New York city during her absence.

W. A. Perry, a brakeman on the Boston and Albany railroad, who formerly kept a restaurant here in Commercial block, fell from his train in the freight yard at Worcester Saturday morning, and had his right leg run over and severed from his body, while he also sustained a bad fracture of the left leg, besides other external and internal injuries.

Christmas at the Churches.

Music appropriate to the occasion will be given at the Second Baptist church Sunday morning, and Rev. A. W. Weeks will take for his text; "God's Union with Man." There will be no concert in the evening, but on Christmas eve a programme has been arranged consisting of singing and declamations, a novel feature of which will be the ringing of Christmas bells. There will also be a Christmas tree with gifts for the little ones.

At the Second Congregational church Rev. H. W. Pope will have an appropriate sermon, and the choir will give this programme:

|---|---|
| "Angels bring to me great joy,".... | Gooch |
| Hymn, "Hosanna to the son of David,... | by Hatton |
| Hymn, "All the ends of the world,"... | Hatton |
| Mozarts 12th Mass, "Glorious is Thy name."...... | |

W. F. Miller, Director.

In the evening the children will give a concert and make a report as to the amount of money accumulated for missionary purposes, each having been given a five cent piece last spring to invest as was seen fit, the earnings to be given to missionary work at this time. Christmas Eve all the children will assemble in the parlors, where an entertainment will be provided and a supper served.

Christmas Sunday will be observed very appropriately at nearly all of the public houses of worship in the village this year, and some excellent programmes will be carried out by the children, while the choirs will render special music and the clergymen will prepare sermons fitting to the occasion. At St. Thomas's Catholic church, however, Sunday will not be so fittingly observed as Christmas day, when low mass will be celebrated at 7 a. m. and high mass at 11 o'clock. The interior of the church will be tastefully decorated with foliage, and the following musical programme will be rendered by the choir, with orchestral accompaniment, Miss Lizzie F. Brown director of choir, John Masterson conductor of orchestra:

|---|---|
| Kyrie,......... | Rosewig |
| Gloria,......... | Rosewig |
| Credo,......... | Stearns |

| Offeratory, "Ave Vernum."......... | Millard |
| Adesti Fidelis,......... | |

At St. Paul's Universalist church Rev. .F W. Betts will take for his topic at the Sunday morning service, "Christianity as Glad Tidings to all Men." In the evening he will speak upon "The Mission of Our Church." The church will be decorated with potted plants and other foliage, and a special musical program will be given by the choir, as follows:

|---|---|
| Organ Voluntary, "Gloria in Excelsis,".... | Mozart |
| Te Deum, E flat......... | Dudley Buck |
| "Rejoice, O Israel"......... | H. P. Danks |
| Recit., "Comfort ye my People,"Aria, "Every one shall be exalted," | .... Handel |
| "And there were Shepards abiding in the field,"......... | H. P. Danks |
| Hymn. Congregation. | |
| Organ Postlude, "Hallelujah Chorus."...... | Handel |

The following evening there will be a Christmas tree, with presents for the children of the Sunday-school, who intend to prepare a box of useful things to send away, while in conclusion a supper will be served by the ladies of the parish for the little ones exclusively.

BONDSVILLE.

The Sunday-school of the M. E. church will render a cantata and enjoy Christmas tree exercises next Monday evening.

BELCHERTOWN.

The wedding of Miss Blanche A. Bridgman and Henry M. Gould, junior member of the firm of J. R. Gould & Sons, will take place at the Congregational church next Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock, followed by a reception at the Belcher House from 8.30 to 10 o'clock.

The Baptist and Union societies will have Christmas trees Monday evening.

Rev. Mr. Christie will preach a Christmas sermon in the Union church Sunday, and the children will give a concert in the evening.

BRIMFIELD.

The fall term of 16 weeks of the Hitchcock Free High School closed with a public examination last Friday. The winter term will begin on Tuesday, January 1st, 1889.

Arrangements are being made for the usual Christmas festivals by the churches at the Center and at East Brimfield.

The long-continued rain of Monday washed the roads badly throughout the town, and the cold weather since will interfere with the proper repair of the same. It is claimed that the water in the streams was higher than at any time since the freshet of October, 1869.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

The ladies of Grace church outdid their expectations at the supper and fair last Friday evening, and added $130 to the church repair fund. There were all the usual appurtenances of a church fair—the fancy table, the five cent and mystery table, the paper and candy table, each presided over by energetic sales women and girls. Not least among the attractions was the art gallery, with E. W. Wall as manager, which contained all the ancient and some modern "gags." The supper table was well patronized, and every thing worked as smoothly as Grace church enterprises always do. Especial mention is due the paper, the "Grace Church Courier," which, under the management of D. W. Mowry and the generous patronage of Springfield advertisers, netted the society $50. A pleasing musical entertainment was given on the cornet and piano by two young gentlemen from Springfield, and their teacher. Miss Pease, a former resident of the village, and Miss Amy Wood of Wesleyan academy gave two fine recitations. The Sunday-school will have a Christmas concert Sunday night and a tree Christmas night.

WALES.

Mrs. Broughton has opened a private boarding house on Hitchcock avenue.

Dr. Sawtelle has been confined to his room for four weeks by a fall on the ice.

A. Maynard has moved his shoemaker shop into the basement of Shaw's block.

The Wales Savings Bank will hold its semi-annual meeting on Tuesday, Jan. 8th, 1889.

What shall I get for a Christmas present is the query with most people. The stores are full of them, so no one need go without.

C. Deland will soon move his barber shop from its present location to Shaw's block, where nice rooms are being fitted up for him.

The Methodists will have a Sunday-school concert Sunday evening, and a Christmas tree and chicken pie supper Monday evening.

Eli A. Deverell, superintendent of the Hegan and Dell mills, has resigned and will move his family about Jan. 1st to Medway, where he will have charge of a large mill.

The Baptist Sunday-school will have a Christmas concert Sunday evening. It is also trimming very elaborately the vestry for next Tuesday evening, when there will be a short Christmas entertainment and trees loaded with presents for the children.

Daniel Cooley drove to the village yesterday with a live porker in his wagon. Leaving his horse unhitched while he went into Hubbard's store, there was a lively run of horse and pig through the village, but the pig stuck to the wagon and the team was overtaken by an unknown young man before any damage was done.

WARREN.

The Franklins will hold a series of socials in Quaboag Hall every Saturday evening.

The marriage of Mr. Delarabe and Miss Patrick will be in the Congregational church New Year's.

The Ladies' Literary Club gave a reading by Oliver Bonner at the residence of William Lincoln Tuesday evening.

The Women Christian Temperance Union met with Mrs. Payson Thursday afternoon and chose their officers for the coming year.

Henry H. Hitchcock, an employe at the pump-shop, was stricken with paralysis while at his work Tuesday, and died yesterday.

The usual Christmas sermons and music will be given next Sabbath in the different churches, also a Sabbath-school concert at the Congregational church and Christmas festivities in the ladies' parlors Monday evening.

The invitations for the marriage of Miss Ida Sibley and Mr. Webber are out, the wedding to take place in the Congregational church next Thursday evening at six o'clock. After the ceremony a reception will be given at the residence of Mrs. Guilbert on Elm street.

Mr. Chase, who resided in the block of Messrs. Shephard, has given up his boarders and taken rooms in Harwood's block where he will remain for the present. The owners of the building which was burned will repair it, but not in time to be occupied until spring. Much credit is due to the firemen for their promptness in extinguishing the fire. Had it occurred the next day it is doubtful if any of the building could have been saved.

WEST WARREN.

The schools closed to-day for a two weeks vacation.

Misses May and Eva Armour have gone to Manville, R. I.

E. E. Spaulding of Russell is the new operator at the station.

Rev. Mr. Osgood of Holyoke preached an excellent sermon at the Methodist church Sunday morning. He took his text from John ix, 6, 7.

The musical and literary entertainment at the Methodist church Wednesday evening, under the auspices of the Christian Endeavor Society, was a success, and well attended, and will net a small sum to the treasury of the society.

The heavy rains of Monday and Tuesday did a great deal of damage, and the estimated cost of repairs is placed at $1000, but this amount will hardly make the town good. The new foundations of the bridge near Reynolds's mill were started and will have to be repaired. The culvert under the road near Day's mill was washed out, and it will cost $300 to put it in shape. The road near Burdick's blacksmith-shop was also badly damaged.

Academy News.

The Academy closed this afternoon for one week, and will begin the 31st.

Two polo teams have been organized, and a game will take place as soon as the skating permits.

Rev. J. P. Smith of Southwick visited the academy Monday and Tuesday, and made a few remarks.

The electric bell that was put in this week is a source of great convenience in dismissing the recitations.

The social to-night will be an enjoyable affair. James H. Tufts will read the essay with which he captured the $300 prize at Yale. After the lecture the regular Christmas social will be held.

The cold weather Friday evening kept the attendance down at the Linophilian meeting. Those present, however, enjoyed a good programme. The programme for the next meeting is not yet made out.

Christmas Services.

The Christmas services Sunday promise to be very interesting, and special programmes have been arranged at all the churches. The decorations will be handsome, though not as elaborate as in former years. The programmes are as follows:

At the Universalist church the pastor, Rev. I. A. Priest, will preach a sermon in accordance with the occasion. The Sunday-school Christmas concert will be held in the evening.

Prof. William Day, F. G. O., who has had 13 years experience as a teacher, has established himself in Ware, and will give lessons on the organ and piano and in harmony, etc. See advertisement.

The last lecture of the Ware course, given Tuesday evening by Rev. Dr. Gage on "Berlin and the Imperial Family," was pronounced by some who heard it to be one of the finest of the course.

The Ware river was higher on Tuesday than it has been before since 1869. In the morning the water was fifty-four inches deep, running over the Otis Company's upper dam. The basements of the mills and some of the cellars on the river banks were flooded, but no special damage was done.

The schools of Misses Buffington and Davis were given a surprise this afternoon, Henry M. Hitchcock exhibiting to the pupils his new panorama, "The Great Republic," and his comical performing marionettes. The children were greatly delighted.

J. W. Lawton Post 85, G. A. R., has elected the following officers: Commander, Daniel W. Ainsworth; S. V. C., John Connel; J. V. C., Harry A. McGrath; Q., John Osgood; S., Proctor L. Ward: chaplain, Silas A. Spooner; O. D., George S. Marsh; delegates to state encampment, D. W. Ainsworth and E. E. Richardson; alternate, John Osgood.

Miss J. M. Read, who is well known as giving lessons in art here last summer, has published a beautiful book entitled "Between the Centuries, and other poems," that

> "Those who toil may pause to read
> And find a rest in weary hours."

It is full of rich thoughts that should make men and women better for having read it.

George W. Lawton, who went to Tacoma, W. T., a few weeks ago, has received an appointment in the city engineer's office, on sewers, as time-keeper for 112 men and purchaser of supplies, at a good salary. Arthur L. Campbell, another Ware boy at the same place, is general agent for Wells, Fargo & Co's. express, and partner in a real estate and broker agency, and also holds other offices of trust in the city.

Rev. Henry J. Bruce, for 25 years a missionary at Satara, India, who will be remembered by some as spending two or three years in Ware about 14 years ago, recruiting his health, which had been completely shattered by the climate and hard work in India, has been visiting friends here this week, and preparing for the publication of a beautiful Easter card entitled "I am the Lily of the Valley," by his daughter, Miss Hattie L. Bruce.

A second answer to the chicken problem: We see there must be a fallacy somewhere. The merchant takes a drawing of any five from the sixty chickens as being worth $2, whereas every five chickens belonging to the first woman are worth $2.50, while every five belonging to the second woman are worth $1.66⅔. The average of the returns from these two fives is $2 08⅓, instead of $2, as the rate of any five chickens. 60 divided by 5 is 12, and 12 multiplied by 2 08⅓ is $25.

ANOTHER WARE MAN.

The social at the chapel Wednesday evening was a most enjoyable one. The exercises consisted of a very fine piano solo by Miss Warner, a dialogue called the "Whittier Club," in honor of its being Whittier's birthday, in which were introduced several recitations, the parts being taken by eight young ladies, and two pieces sang by Miss Lawton, which were made especially noteworthy by the fact that the enunciation was so perfect that every word could be distinctly understood, as well as the wonderful rich harmony in which they were rendered.

The officers of Nenameseck Council, American Legion of Honor, elected Monday evening as follows: Commander, George E. Preston; vice commander, Walter B. Eddy; orator, C. W. Eddy; secretary, W. C. The council of pastors convened for the purpose of considering the resignation of Rev. Thos. A. Dorion, passed the following resolution:

Resolved—That in view of the facts and motives laid before the council, we commend the dissolution of the pastoral relation now existing between Rev. T. A. Dorion and the French Congregational church of Ware, to take place the 31st instant. In coming to this conclusion we desire to commend the Rev. Mr. Dorion as a man of earnest evangelical spirit devoted to the welfare of his countrymen and worthy of the confidence of the churches. We cordially commend him to the churches with which he may be called to labor, hoping that the blessing of God may continually attend his labors.

We may also express our sympathy with the church in being deprived of a pastor, and the hope that they may soon be guided in the selection of one who shall build them up in the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Attest: A. T. PERRY, Scribe.

The trial of six boys for stealing money and cigars from Dr. D. W. Miner's store Sunday night, also for breaking into and stealing from John Thayer's meat market and C. H. Trench's store September 21 and 23, occupied the time of the district court on Friday last. Judge Strickland sent George Abner and Joseph Reno to the Lyman school for boys at Westboro during the remainder of their minority, committed Edward Currie to the Concord reformatory for two years, and sent Frederick Fogue to the house of correction at Northampton for six months, while William Danaby and William Fitzgerald were let out on probation under $100 bonds each to appear in three months.

At a meeting of the East Congregational church Thursday evening, letters were granted to Mr. and Mrs. Nelson Dwight and Robert Dwight to the Memorial church in Springfield. Edwin H. Baker was elected deacon to fill the vacancy made by the resignation of Nelson Dwight. Fifteen names were dropped from the membership of the church of those who have moved out of town and no trace of them has been had for some years. The standing committee of the church reported that inasmuch as John H. Storrs has committed acts hostile to the interests of the church in renting his building for the sale of intoxicating liquors it was recommended that some action be taken, and it was voted that he be admonished and a committee appointed to inform him of the action of the church.

Christmas Services.

Rev. C. W. Duffield of Trinity Episcopal church will conduct a childrens' service at Music Hall on Christmas Eve at 6 30.

At St. William's church, Rev. James Boyle, pastor, there will be three masses Christmas morning, at 8, 9 and 10.30, and vespers at 7 o'clock. At the 10 30 mass a choice musical programme will be rendered.

At the Methodist church, Rev. E. Hitchcock, pastor, there will be a Christmas sermon on Sunday morning, and a Sunday-school concert in the evening. The Christmas tree for the Sunday-school will be on Monday evening.

The Christmas services at the Unitarian church, Rev. B. W. Pennock, pastor, Sunday morning will be as follows:

Organ Voluntary.......................Selected
Prayer.
Anthem, "What mean those Holy Voices?" Selected
Responsive Reading.
Gloria.
Scripture Reading.
Congregational Hymn.
Sermon from text, John 14:8, "Show us the Father."
Prayer.
Congregational Hymn.

Rev. A. T. Perry will preach a sermon appropriate to the Christmas season at the Town Hall Sunday morning at 10.30, there will also be special singing for the occasion. The union service in the evening will also be a Christmas service, with an address by Mr. Perry. The Sunday-school will have a chicken pie supper in the chapel Tuesday evening with singing, recitations, etc. The primary class will have an entertainment by themselves in the afternoon. All are welcome. The children's Christmas entertainment will beon Monday evening.

The man who scolds his crying baby and is too mean to invest 25 cents in a bottle of Dr. Bull's Baby Syrup, should be divorced.

Uncertainty may attend business ventures and enterprises, but it never attends the prompt administration of Dr. Bull's Cough Sprup.

It is one of those rare, good remedies which used once will always be kept in the house. Laxador we refer to. Price only 25 cents a package.

"My sore ran in the night, and my soul refused to be comforted." Poor fellow! of course it did. Pity, he didn't get Salvation Oil. Only 25 cents.

The old and reliable house of The D. H. Brigham Co. is so well known that any offer they make is sure to meet with favor. The past weather has been so unfavorable for business that during the next two weeks they will make Christmas prices on all their goods. That means bottom prices on everything. See their two-column advertisement.

What can you get a Christmas present more useful than a pair of slippers? It pays to go forty miles to see the big assortment at Broadhurst Bros.' shoe store, Springfield,—they never had such a quantity and never so cheap. Men's velvet silk-embroidered slippers are 57 cents, originally sold for $1,—others at 75 cents, 95 cents and $1.25, besides alligator, seal plush, maroon goat, and hundreds of other kinds—all nice and cheap.

The performance of "The Messiah" at the City Hall, Springfield, Christmas night, promises to be the best ever given. The chorus is large, well trained and includes the Holyoke Choral Society. The soloists—Madame Giulia Valda, prima donna, was received with unbounded enthusiasm at the Worcester and Cincinnati Festivals this year, and has since met with immense success in her concert tour through Canada and the West. Myron W. Whitney has no equal in Oratorio in this or any other country. Miss Alma Dell Martin is one of the finest contraltos of New York city, and receives a handsome salary as alto of Dr. Kittridge's church. Much interest is manifested in the debut at this concert of Mr. Thos. L. Cushman the brilliant tenor of Hope Church, Springfield. Mr. Cushman sails for Europe immediately to complete his musical education. The Germania Orchestra will bring their best men for this occasion, and their music will give intense satisfaction. Prof. Zuchtmann has spared no pains in drilling the chorus, and the Christmas pæan of Handel's will receive a glorious rendering at his hands. A special train will be run from Springfield to Palmer after the concert.

A Scrap of Paper Saves Her Life.

It was just an ordinary scrap of wrapping paper, but it saved her life. She was in the last stages of consumption, told by physicians she could not live only a short time; she weighed less than seventy pounds. On a piece of wrapping paper she read of Dr. King's New Discovery, and got a sample bottle; it helped her, she bought a large bottle, it helped her more, bought another and grew better fast, continued its use and is now strong, healthy, rosy, plump, weighing 140 pounds. For fuller particulars send stamp to W. H. Cole, Druggist, Fort Smith. Trial bottles of this wonderful discovery free at LeGro & Lynde's drug store. 4

Eupepsy.

This is what you ought to have, in fact you must have it, to fully insure life. Thousands are searching for it daily, and mourning because they find it not. Thousands upon thousands of dollars are spent annually by our people in the hope that they may attain this boon. And yet it may be attained by all. We guarantee that Electric Bitters, if used according to directions and the use persisted in, will bring you good digestion and oust the demon dyspepsia and will install instead eupepsy. We recommend Electric Bitters for dyspepsia and all diseases of liver, stomach and kidneys. Sold at 50c and $1 per bottle at LeGro & Lynde's, Druggists.

Card of Thanks.

If the proprietor of Kemp's Balsam should publish a card of thanks containing expressions of gratitude which come to him daily, from those who have been cured of severe throat and lung troubles by the use of Kemp's Balsam, it would fill a fair sized book. How much better to invite all to call on any druggist and get a free sample bottle that you may test for yourself its powers. Large bottles 50c and $1.00.

Card of Thanks.

I hereby desire to extend to all of my friends my thanks for the many kindnesses extended to me during my past illness of over three months from rheumatism, and I especially desire to tell them that but for Sulphur Bitters I should have been suffering still. May you never suffer what I have, is the wish of your friend, B. H. TAYLEUR.

Cure Yourself,

Don't pay large doctor's bills. The best medical book published, one hundred pages, elegant colored plates, will be sent on receipt of three two-cent stamps to pay postage. Address A. P. Ordway & Co., Boston, Mass.

A Family Gathering.

Have you a father? Have you a mother? Have you a son or daughter, sister or a brother who has not yet taken Kemp's Balsam for the Throat and Lungs, the guaranteed remedy for the cure of coughs, colds, asthma, croup, and all Throat and Lung troubles? If so, why? when a sample bottle is gladly given to you free by any druggist and the large size costs only 50c. and $1.

Advice to Mothers.

Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of cutting teeth? If so, send at once and get a bottle of Mrs. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures dysentery and diarrhœa, regulates the stomach and bowels, cures wind colic, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. Mrs. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING is pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female nurses and physicians in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price 25 cents a bottle. 1y23

FIRE DISTRICT MEETING.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.
HAMPDEN, SS.

To the qualified voters of Fire District No. 1 in Palmer:

You are hereby notified to meet at the Eastern Hampden District Court room, in said Palmer, on Monday, the thirty-first day of December, current, at two o'clock in the afternoon, to act on the following articles, viz:

ART. 1.—To choose a moderator to preside at said meeting.

ART. 2.—To see if the District will vote to make a contract with the Palmer Water Co., to extend its mains easterly to near the house of Dr. Wilbur and westerly to near the Wire Mill, and raise money for the same.

ART. 3.—To see what action the District will take towards lighting its streets with electricity and raise such sums of money as may be necessary for the same.

ART. 4.—To see if the District will instruct the collector to bring suits against delinquent tax payers and raise money for the same.

ART. 5.—To see if the District will vote to pay for three extra men of the Steamer company, and raise money for the same.

ART. 6.—To see if the District will vote to purchase a supply of hose, and raise money for the same.

ART. 7.—To see if the District will vote to purchase a fire gun, canvas chute and jumping net, for use at fires, and raise money for the same.

Given under my hand this twentieth day of December, A. D., 1888. W. W. LEACH,
Clerk of the Fire District.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.—HAMPDEN, SS. Dec. 20th, A. D. 1888.

By virtue of an execution which issued on a judgment recovered in the Superior Court at Springfield, within and for the county of Hampden on the first day of October, A. D. 1888, in favor of Ellen E. Broughton, of Stafford, Tolland county, and state of Connecticut, and against William Lewis, of Monson in our county of Hampden, I have this day taken all the right, title and interest that the said William Lewis has, including the right to redeem any of the said tracts of land hereinafter mentioned which may be subject to mortgage, to wit:

A certain tract of land with the buildings thereon, situate in Wales, in our county of Hampden, on the east side of the old road leading over the hill by the Central school house from Wales to Brimfield and bounded and described as follows, to wit: on the west by the above said road, on the south by land of Elijah and Jane M. Shaw, on the east by land of said Shaw and on the north by land of C. D. Brewer, containing one acre, more or less, and beingthe same premises deed to Wm. Lewis by Elijah and Jane M. Shaw and recorded in the Hampden County registry of deeds, book 394, page 202.

Also two other tracts of land situated in the south part of Monson, in said county of Hampden, containing about twenty-nine acres. The first tract described as follows, to wit: Beginning at the northwest corner of lot laid out to F. Moulton, on the southeast end of Cedar mountain, thence running southeast six rods to a small maple tree, thence north 37° E. twenty rods to a bunch of chestnuts, thence east 10° south eighteen rods to a stake and stones, thence north 22½° W. sixty rods to a large chestnut tree and stones, thence north 41° W. forty-four rods to Squiers Corner, thence south thirty-two rods to a heap of stones, thence south 27° W. fourteen rods to a small black oak tree and stones, thence south 19° W. fifty-eight rods to the first mentioned bound, containing fourteen acres, more or less, and being the same tract of land deeded from James Richards to M. L. Peck and Emory Smith and recorded in the registry of deeds for Hampden county, book 168, page 491. The second tract of land situated on the north end of Cedar Swamp mountain and described as follows, to wit: Beginning at the corner of land now or formerly of Solomon S. Peck, thence south 38° E. six rods, thence east 15° N. forty rods to the highway leading from said Peck's house to Underwood's, now or formerly, thence south 40° east twenty rods on the west side of said highway to a stake and stones, thence west 15° south forty rods to a black oak stump, thence west 41° S. sixty-nine rods, thence west 5° north sixteen rods to another corner of said Solomon S. Peck's land, thence to the first mentioned bound, containing fifteen acres, more or less, and being the same tract of land deeded from Icabod Tupper to M. L. Peck and Emory Smith and recorded in the Hampden registry of deeds, book 172, page 158. Also another tract of land with the buildings thereon, situated in said Monson and bounded and described as follows, to wit: Beginning at a stake and stones at the corner of Pearl and State streets, thence running westerly on the north line of State street nine rods to a stake and stones, thence northerly in a line parallel with the west line of Pearl street to a corner bound of land now or formerly of one Shepardson, thence easterly on said Shepardson's south line to said Pearl street, thence southerly on said Pearl street to the first mentioned bound and being the same conveyed by A. J. Northrop and Eugene Ferrell to said William Lewis, and recorded in the registry of deeds for Hampden county, book 416, page 239, and on Saturday, the twenty-sixth day of January next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, in front of the Court House in Palmer in said county, I shall offer for sale by public auction to the highest bidder said right, title and interest including the right to redeem any of said tracts which may be subject to mortgage to satisfy said execution and all fees and charges of sale.

H. A. NORTHROP, Deputy Sheriff.

HOW TO PICK OUT OF THE HOLIDAY BOOKS OF THIS YEAR, 1888.

The one to suit both giver and givee.

Catalogue published by our Book Department—now ready. Contains information about new gift books, with pictures from some of them. And their prices here!

It's a check on your local bookseller. He'll serve you the better if he knows what you're doing.

Books, you know, we sell for less than publisher's prices, some of them half—in every case as low as we can.

We expect it'll be of interest to all who care about books.

Five cents to any address—send it in silver or stamps.

Saturday, December 8, the store wakes up to the fact that Christmas is coming.

For some time we have been living in holiday air, seen holiday lights, and felt the inspiration of the holiday spirit. The gift quarter puts on a new appearance December 8. It will be full of the light of silver and gold and brass and bronze and spelter and glass, made even more brilliant with leather and plush and wood.

We have men wandering all over Europe with nothing to do but gather these things and see how far our money will go toward bringing us your wants—whatever those wants may be, almost. Be a part of the crowd.

FORBES & WALLACE,
Main and Vernon Streets.

The Christmas Tree.

O
the Christmas tree
so bright and green, awaits Old
Santa Claus.
And the chimney
place all swept an'
clean gapes wide its ponderous jaws. The little stockings are all hung up, and baby's just makes four. Won't
Old Santa Claus be surprised when he finds there is one more! There's an elegant place up in the tree to hang Johnny's gun, and a place for May and one for Kate to leave her dolls upon. But for little baby blue eyes a lower branch he must choose, Where she may reach and find the place he's hung her first new shoes. Turn down the light a little now, so Old Santa Claus can see.
And baby and all must go to bed and be as good as can be, and tomorrow morn get up early after a long night's sleep
and come softly down to the Xmas tree and see
Who will get the first peep.

A FAIR TRIAL OF HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA for scrofula, salt rheum, or any affection caused by impure blood, is sufficient to convince any one of the superior and peculiar curative powers of this medicine. The following statement is right to the point.

"My daughter Mary was afflicted with scrofulous sore neck from the time she was 22 months old till she became 6 years of age. Lumps formed in her neck, causing great annoyance, and two of them, after growing to the size of a pigeon's egg, broke and discharged. One became a running sore for three years. We thought we would give Hood's Sarsaparilla a thorough trial. We began with it in January, and in a few months, after she had taken five bottles, all supperation had ceased. We then waited three months, when, as a new lump was beginning to form, we again gave her Hood's Sarsaparilla. After she had taken less than two bottles the lump and all indications of scrofula had entirely disappeared, and now she seems to be a healthy child."—J. S. Carlile, Nauright, N. J.

CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER.

The Purest and Best.

Is made only of strictly pure grape cream of tartar, strictly pure bicarbonate of soda, and a small portion of flour as a preservative, nothing else whatever, and is warranted entirely free from alum, ammonia, phosphates, lime, and all other adulterations frequently found in baking powders. The character of materials used, their purity, and the nicety of their combination, render Cleveland's superior baking the most healthful and most economical in use, and it always affords wholesome, nutritious, and delicious food.

It is recommended for purity, healthfulness and efficiency by government and state chemists, chemists of boards of health, and professors in institutions of learning throughout the country.

Sold only in cans. Full weight.

GRAND OPENING

— OF —

USEFUL HOLIDAY GOODS.

We have an immense variety to show you. Holiday Novelties are specialties. First and foremost comes our stock of

Fine Furnishings

Which is always the largest stock of the kind shown at retail in New England. Quantity, quality and variety unparalleled. We open to-day the entire stock, giving several extra counters for the marvelous display in the front of our store. You can very easily examine, of course, make your selection and have laid aside until wanted. We would urge upon all holiday buyers this fact, come early while the assortment is complete, for very many of our specialties cannot be duplicated at any price later on.

Holiday Umbrellas.

Our variety and unique styles exceed any previous holiday season. Lyons & Follmer, Clogg & Co's. are the standard of excellence for all fine umbrellas. We have an almost endless assortment. Gloria Umbrellas are also of the most sensible now in use, and are a special attraction in umbrella department.

SEAL, BEAVER & OTTER GLOVES STREET & FULL DRESS.

And gloves of every name and kind can be found in glove department. Our glove sales have been larger than ever before and the glove trade will be an important feature of our holiday sales. We have always made during the holiday season a specialty of

Silk and Cashmere Mufflers,

And now show an elegant variety at popular prices.

Smoking Jackets and Dressing Gowns.

The stock is not as large as it sometimes has been. Reason, we are to close out the stock and never keep them again. You can buy them now much less than you ever could before. The styles and patterns are of the choicest, but they must be sold.

Fisk, Clark & Flagg's Elegant Neckwear

Is among the attractions. In Four-in-Hand and Puff scarfs they excel. The "Protean" is the most popular scarf of this celebrated firm's make.

Initial Silk Handkerchiefs,

44 cents each, one-half dozen, $2.63. Initial linen handkerchiefs, 25 cents, one-half dozen, $1.38.

Fast color, black Shaw-knit Hosiery, 33 cents. Fine silk Suspenders. The E. & W. Collars and Cuffs, fur driving cuffs, Jewelry and Fancy Night robes. All are useful, and attractions which are well worthy your attention. Sanitary underwear also a most durable gift.

A Sensible and Useful Christmas Present

Is a good Warm Winter Cap. We have a large stock for Children, Boys and Men, in cloth, plush, Scotch wool, Corduroy and fur. We have undoubtedly the largest and finest stock of fur caps in Western New England. Our stock of Alaska seal caps is very large and fine, and includes all the new shapes. These we shall sell at last year's prices while present stock lasts.

Leather Goods Department

Contains a marvelous display of Traveling Bags, Shopping Bags, Music Rolls, Dressing and Toilet Cases, Collar and Cuff Boxes, etc.

Sole Leather Trunks and Traveling Outfits

Of all kinds and descriptions. They are in our basement.

The Very Finest Fur and Plush Carriage Robes.

A few fur overcoats, and an immense stock of the new moderate cost robes and blankets, also in our basement. Wish we had more space in which to enumerate.

Our Stock is Larger than Usual,

And finer assorted than ever before. Store open evenings till Christmas.

WARE WEDNESDAY EVENING CLUB.

"Early Religious History of Ware," by Rev. B. W. Pennock.

Much thought and study has been spent by philosophers in attempts to discover the earliest conceptions of the human mind. From the very necessities of the case these attempts must be, to a considerable degree, unsuccessful. But there is much evidence favoring the opinion that a germ of religious knowledge is among the first things implanted in the mind of man. Certainly we never find a community of men without some religious ideas of some form. No matter under how great difficulties men may be laboring, the natural religiousness of their minds shows itself sooner or later. Among the early settlers of New England this religious inclination was a prominent characteristic. When they went into the forest to contend against the wild beast and the savage, and compel the wooded plain and the rocky hillside to furnish them subsistence, they took their religion along with them. And as soon as they prepared shelter for themselves, they bethought them of a place to worship God. And, moreover, their religion was fitted to its surroundings. As the inhabitants themselves of our early New England settlements were driven, by a force of circumstances, to an uncultivated life; as their warlike instincts were developed by their savage surroundings, their religion took on the color of the life of its adherents. But in spite of all the unfavorable conditions, in spite of the warlike garb thrown around it, in spite of the gross superstitions with which it was often loaded down, it never for a moment ceased to be genuine religion. To this the early inhabitants of Ware bear witness. For as early as 1742, when there were no more than thirty families, "Ware was constituted a precinct at the desire of the inhabitants, that they might have the institutions and the preaching of the gospel." This is on the authority of an historical address of Rev. David Coburn, pastor of the First church in 1851, and to which I am indebted for the facts in regard to the beginning of public worship in Ware. In accordance with this desire for the institutions of religion, it was voted at the first legal meeting of the inhabitants, "to raise forty pound old tenor for to hire preaching with." However, the immediate results of this vote seem not to have been important, for in a warrant for a precinct meeting the following year, a part of the business mentioned is to choose a minister for the time already agreed upon. And at the meeting held in accordance with this warrant, it was voted "to hire Mr. Dickeson for to preach among us until the forty pound we granted is spent." At the next meeting held in the following autumn the question of building a meeting house and raising money to provide preaching was before the assembly. But it was "voted not to build a meeting-house at present: voted to raise fifty shillings old tenor to pay Mr. Miles for one Sabbath day's preaching last spring." At the precinct meeting the following spring it was voted to raise sixty pounds for preaching and to hire Mr. Miles to preach until the money was spent. For some reason Mr. Miles seems not to have carried out his part of the plan, and another meeting was called in the following July at which it was voted to hire Rev. Mr. Rawson to preach out half of the money voted, and to hire Rev. Mr. How to preach out the other half. At the next meeting twenty pounds were raised for preaching. Up to this time nothing seems to have been done toward having a settled pastor. The aim was to have preaching a part of the time. But from the early part of 1745 a desire seems to have been taking shape in the mind of the people for a permanent pastor. And in July of this year a meeting was held, a part of the business of which was "to see if we can make a choice of some person to settle among us as a gospel minister." The result was that it was voted to raise thirty pounds for preaching for the year, and to hire Mr. Cary to preach out the same."

In the following November a still stronger effort was made in the direction of permanent preaching. At this meeting it was voted "to give one hundred pounds old tenor per annum for encouragement: it was then voted to make choice of Mr. Henry Cary to settle with us in this place, if he will take up with the encouragement which we have voted.

But this effort was not successful, and another meeting was held in the spring of 1747, "to raise such sum or sums of money as shall be thought fit for preaching for the year ensuing; to see if you will choose a man or men to provide a minister for the year ensuing, to see where you will have your preaching for this year; to see who will keep the minister." At the meeting it was voted to raise one hundred pounds, to get Mr. Rawson to preach for the year and to meet at the house of Samuel Allen. The next year it was voted to raise one hundred and fifty pounds for preaching during the year.

At the same time considerable effort seems to have been made to agree upon a location for a meeting-house and to build one. At this point appears more strongly than elsewhere the stubborn tendencies of the people. Their religious life as well as their secular life seems to have been shaped somewhat by their surroundings. This unwillingness to yield a little for the sake of a peaceful settlement, and the progress of religious worship, actually prevented them for several years from building a meeting-house, although repeated attempts were made to come to an agreement. A certain Mr. Dwight was employed to find the center of the parish in the hope of agreeing upon that spot when it was found. But this, too, failed of its object, and the spot was not agreed upon till September, 1750. But, in spite of this difficulty, we cannot fail to admire the religious spirit which prompted such constant efforts to have the gospel preached among them, and which overcame so many hindrances. Those scattered inhabitants of Ware prosecuted with untiring zeal their religious affairs until the preaching of the gospel was firmly established among them in the regular way with an organized church and a settled pastor. But in default of any church organization the town assumed the duty of giving a call to the first pastor, and of issuing letters missive to the various churches within reach for a council of ordination. In accordance with those letters a council met in May, 1751, and ordained Mr. Rawson as first minister of the parish. It is impossible to gain from existing records any definite idea of Mr. Rawson, but his pastorate seems not to have been a successful one, and its termination was a little unpleasant.

After this there was a period of about five years in which the religious activity of the people seems to have been in a somewhat low condition, but they were not entirely discouraged, and in 1759 it was determined to have a regular church organization and a settled pastor. This was done, and Mr. Ezra Thayer was ordained and installed as pastor of the newly organized church. His ministry seems to have been successful and lasted some sixteen years. Up to this time almost the only original source of information has been the town records. But from this point the church record seems to have been kept with considerable regularity.

Among other doings of this first church council was the preparation of a church covenant which was adopted by the church after its organization. An incident occurred in connection with the covenant which is of considerable importance in that it shows how close was the connection between the church and the general affairs of the community, and shows how readily the church expressed the feelings of the people. The organization of the church and the ministry of Mr. Thayer fell upon a period not at all favorable to advancing the cause of religion as understood by the New England people of the eighteenth century. A period of excitement of any kind is almost always followed by a period of indifference. This is emphatically true in regard to religion. A revival of sensationalism and excitement is almost sure to be followed by a reaction toward indifference. In such a reaction fell the ministry of Mr. Thayer. The minds of the people, not yet released from the bondage of superstitious fear, had been wrought to a high pitch of excitement by the terrible pictures of eternal destruction given them in the preaching of Edwards and his co-laborers. And now the religious pendulum had swayed to the opposite extreme. Not that the people ceased to be religious, according to their understanding of the term, but were decidedly lax as judged by previous standards. This looseness appears in one form in the adoption of the so-called half-way covenant which tended to remove to some extent the hard and fast lines which formed a barrier between the church and the community of which it was a part. Considering the difficulties of the time, the ministry of Mr. Thayer was a remarkable success.

After the death of Mr. Thayer, which occurred in February, 1775, there was a period of 10 years during which the church was without a settled pastor. It was a period of political commotion, and the desire for political independence so absorbed the minds of the people that church affairs were somewhat neglected.

The church records tell us nothing except that nine or ten new members were admitted during the period. From the town records it appears that the pulpit was supplied by transient preachers for a considerable part of the time.

But even in those troublesome times several attempts were made to have a settled minister, showing how strong the religious sentiment was in the minds of the people. But none of these attempts were successful, further than to have a minister for a few successive weeks or months. During this period, in the autumn of 1784, Mr. Jeremiah Hallock came to Ware as a candidate. From a certain point of view his ministry of three months was a very successful one, for during his stay occurred the first religious revival in Ware. Mr. Hallock received a call to settle, but at about the same time he received two other calls, and accepted one from Canton, Conn. A few lines from Mr. Hallock's diary of this time shows the conception of religion which the people of the period held. He says: "When I came the young people were light and gay, but it has pleased God to awaken them, so that their frolics are turned into conferences, and to God's name be all the glory." Religion in its inward effect was to them a grim, solemn feeling; in its outward activity it was a matter of hard and fast dogmatic lines, to be defended at all hazards.

It was not very long, however, after Mr. Hallock's departure before a settled minister was called in the person of Rev. Benj. Judd, who was ordained in October, 1785. There appears from the first an infelicity in Mr. Judd's relations with the people. Some of the people of Ware were strong sympathizers with "Shays' rebellion," and Mr. Judd, who was as strongly opposed to it, denounced such sympathy in no unmeasured terms. He held the idea of the divine right of government, and defended it upon all occasions, in the pulpit and elsewhere. This course naturally caused trouble, and charges were brought against Mr. Judd before a council of churches. Among these charges are the following quotations from his own words: "He would as soon pray for the devil in hell as for the insurgents," and "if the devil was governor or ruler the people ought to obey him." But in spite of his coarse, and, to us, quite unchristian conduct, the council refused to dismiss him. However, the pastoral relation was dissolved by a vote in town meeting August, 1787.

In reviewing this unhappy affair, it does not seem probable that all the blame rested upon the pastor. Time and events have justified the sentiments he entertained toward the insurrection, while the same tribunal has condemned the action of the people. The fault of Mr. Judd was in his manner of expressing himself. This is an instance of a good cause injured by a fanatical defender.

During Mr. Judd's ministry a reaction from the looser conception of religious profession became prominent. This is shown by some of the votes at a meeting of the church in the early part of 1790. The most prominent of these relate to matters of church discipline. It was voted that inconstancy in family prayer, excess in drinking of strong liquors, vain and profane words, "and every other sin that the word of God forbiddeth," shall be matters of church discipline. At the same time, the need of acts of discipline against drunkenness showed a low state of moral life, coupled with the church activity.

The church soon took measures again for obtaining a settled minister, and the result was the settlement of Rev. Reuben Moss. During his ministry the tightening of the ecclesiastical reins appears active in a revision of the church covenant and repeal of the half-way rule, in place of which the following act was accepted: "Persons, prior to admission as actual members of this church, shall give proper manifestation to the church of their understanding and soundness in the faith as delivered to the saints."

From this time the church had a settled minister most of the time. Mr. Moss was succeeded by Mr. Ware, during whose ministry occurred three revivals, and large numbers were added to the church.

During the ministry of Mr. Ware, which lasted till April, 1826, this church reached its most flourishing condition.

Up to this time there had been no other church in Ware. But with the sudden increase of population in Ware village in 1825, came the need for other religious organizations. In this influx of population nearly every denomination of New England was represented, excepting, perhaps, the Roman Catholic,—this being previous to our foreign immigration. There were Methodists, Baptists, Congregationalists, both Trinitarian and Unitarian, and probably some Episcopalians. There was no church building in the village, but religious services were held for some time in a school-house standing where now stands the house of the late William Hyde.

Clergymen of various denominations officiated at these services, to meet the wishes of the various denominations represented in the congregation.

But the present East Congregational church owes its founding to Hon. S. V. S. Wilder, who had a considerable financial interest in the manufacturing industry in Ware village. So far as the records of his life show, he was a good representative of the religious zeal, as well as the bigotry and intolerance of those who made any religious professions of any denominational cast.

Though much mischief has resulted to men from the prevalence of these latter characteristics, still some good has come of it, for it often has been the power of success in places where more enlightened conduct would have failed.

In 1825 Mr. Wilder became president of the manufacturing company whose works were in Ware, and during his visits to the town he became interested in its religious as well as its industrial affairs. A few lines from his own writing, as given in the "Records" of his life, published by the American Tract Society, will show something of the town as well as of the man. Speaking of his early visits, Mr. Wilder writes:

"I soon ascertained that our head machinist and agent were uncompromising Unitarians, and that they had placed as overseers in all the departments either Unitarians or Universalists; that most of the workmen, consisting of about 200 in one machinist establishment, were of the same persuasion." And a few lines further on he says:

"At a meeting held in Boston of the directors and principal stockholders, a large majority of whom were Unitarians, the question was who among the number would assent to go to Ware to have supervision over the establishment until a suitable agent could be obtained. As I had retired from the busy concerns of mercantile life, I was at once fixed upon by those assembled to assume the responsibility of attending personally to the concerns of the establishment. But as I peremptorily declined to comply with their requests, Mr. John Tappan and Samuel Hubbard, two of the orthodox directors present, whispered in the ear of the president that, in order to induce me to undertake the overseership, he would do well to propose that $3000 toward building a church be subscribed, on condition that the good people in the neighborhood would raise $3000 in addition, and then invest me with full powers to superintend the erection of said house and of settling a pastor. When I heard the motion seconded, I saw 20 Unitarian hands elevated in behalf of carrying the motion into effect. I did not dare to disregard the obvious call of Providence, and at once gave my assent."

He further relates how he came to Ware, raised the required $3000 by giving $500 himself, built the church, and in spite of the fact, as he says, that many of the members belonged to a "variety of sects," succeeded in obtaining a Unitarian Congregational minister, "the orthodox members of the church being in the majority.' This first minister was Rev. Parsons Cooke, who was ordained in June, 1826.

But at the first there was a sort of compromise. Mr. Cooke was called on condition that he should yield his pulpit four Sundays in the year to ministers of other denominations represented in the congregation.

This agreement was not formally abolished till 1829, though it does not seem to have been very satisfactory to the people of the other denominations, for the Methodists began to hold separate meetings in the latter part of the year 1826. This was the beginning of the present Methodist church. Meetings were held at first in private houses, and sometimes in an unoccupied building belonging to the mill, and occasionally in school-houses in different parts of the village. The first preaching was by Luther Payne, a local Methodist leader, but not an ordained clergyman. The church was organized by Mr. Payne, with the help of Joshua Crowell, a local elder. The first meeting-house was erected in 1843, during the pastorate of Rev. D. Sherman. The first regularly appointed preacher from the conference was Rev. William P. White, stationed here in 1833.

As the beginning of the Methodist church seems to have been hastened by the abolition by the East Congregational of the compromise services, so those of the liberal faith appear to have immediately considered the plan of a society of their own. The first movement was made by the Universalists, and services were held in what was known as Tavern House Hall at the corner of Main and Church streets. How long services were continued is not known, but the movement did not take a permanent form. Perhaps it needed a Wilder with a large subscription from the manufacturing company.

The next attempt was made by Unitarians, and Rev. John Sibley, afterwards librarian of Harvard College, preached for some time in a school-house on Chestnut street. This movement also failed to become permanent, as did another a little later.

It was not till 1845 that the present Unitarian church was formed. Services began in the east brick mill, afterward the property of the Otis Co. In an upper room of this building Rev. George Channing preached the first sermon. In the following spring the house of worship was begun. This was completed and dedicated June, 1847. In October of the same year the first settled pastor, Rev. Mr. Ball, now of Upton, was ordained.

There are in town some records of a third Congregational society formed in 1835. It seems to have been only a temporary makeshift to conform to the letter of the law while evading its spirit. The following letter written to W. S. Hyde furnishes nearly all the information attainable:—

"W. S. Hyde, Sir: Your note of the 27th is duly received. Such information as I can give from memory and tradition is at your service. When looking over the papers of the late Seth Gould, I came across the clerk's book of that third Congregational society. There were but two or three pages of record. I do not find it now among my possessions, and cannot tell what I did with it. Doubtless you have the exact date in the records you mention. The occasion of its formation was the opposition aroused to the course of the ministers of the first and second churches in regard to the temperance movement. Rev. Parsons Cook prepared and preached a very radical sermon, according to existing ideas, on moderate drinking and the sale of spirits. Rev. A. B. Reed invited him to preach it in his pulpit. It offended many in both societies. As the state law then stood, I believe there was compulsory membership to some religious society. The offended people "signed off" as it was called and formed a 3d organization; raised $40 for preaching and hired a Unitarian minister from Boston whose name I do not remember. He preached four Sabbaths, twice in the hall of the old white school-house and twice in the hall of the Centre school-house. I remember going to the meetings. Being brought up in the tavern, I was, of course, in the thick of the fight, but too young to understand it then. I believe it was at the next session of the Legislature that the support of preaching was made voluntary, and no more was heard of the third society. The families of these men returned mainly to the old places of worship, and were sometimes accused of stealing preaching. In many cases the bitter feelings lived on till the generation was all gone. Mr. Gideon Lamberton is the only one living that I know of who belonged to that third society. Very cordially,

"CORNELIA A. GOULD."

The Baptist church was first the Hardwick Baptist church, then known as the Hardwick and Ware Baptist church. In 1846 the society removed from Hardwick to Ware and took the name of the Ware Baptist church. The first pastor was Rev. Armory Gale, a graduate of Brown University. He was ordained minister of the Baptist church in November, 1846. The society continued its existence till the autumn of 1860, when the house of worship was destroyed by fire. Few meetings were held after that and the society dissolved. It has no active existence at the present time.

The first Romish church was established in Ware about 1850, and erected a house of worship in 1855. It was at first a missionary enterprise, undertaken by the Romish church at Chicopee Falls. It became a parish in 1860, and Rev. P. Haley was the first pastor.

In 1871 the French adherents of the Romish faith, baving become quite numerous, felt the need of religious services in their own language, and undertook the establishment of a parish. The first services were held in Music Hall, and Rev. L. G. Gagnier was the first pastor.

The establishment of churches of the Romish faith was brought about by the influx of French and Irish operatives in the various manufacturing establishments.

A French Protestant church has been recently established in order that the French of the Protestant faith may have services in their own language. The first settled pastor was Rev. T. A. Dorian, and the church edifice was dedicated in June, 1888.

The beginning of Trinity Episcopal church was Dec. 1872, when citizens of the town to the number of 13 met and began the legal organization of the parish. Officers were elected and money was subscribed for the uses of the society. In June 1873, Rev. Benj. Hall was chosen rector of the parish. Services were held in private houses for some time, till the old chapel of the East Congregational church was secured as a place of worship. Services were continued till 1875. From that date services were discontinued for 12 years except occasionally.

In Oct. 1877 the movement was revived and the present rector was chosen. Regular services began in the Town Hall and have been continued to the present time. Preparation was made for a house of worship and the corner stone was laid Oct. 3, 1888.

After thus reviewing the early religious history of the town, one can hardly avoid asking the question why did these religious people thus divide themselves into various sects and organize different churches, some of which were too weak to accomplish their purpose and so make themselves a permanent place? It would be quite impossible to answer that question in detail, interesting in a local way as such an answer might be. But probably the general answer would solve the same problem for a great majority of New England towns. And that general answer is the same that must be given to the question of the existence of different religious sects throughout the world, namely, each one wanted to worship God in his own way, and perhaps we might safely add to that the statement that everyone was anxious that everybody else should think and worship just as he did.

I have spoken of the spirit of intolerance that characterized the early settlers of Ware. But it was no greater than that which characterized the whole people of New England. In fact intolerance is a characteristic of the whole race, in a greater or less degree. It almost always happens in the church as well as in the secular offices, that the party which is in the majority, or which has the largest means, or both, will have things their own way with small regard to the wishes of the weaker side. Thus in the church, a given denomination thinks it own way right and others more or less wrong. And not only that, but every sect will be more or less anxious that all others should conform to its ideas. If a given sect has the power, it will be pretty sure to compel conformity, or separation.

A Calvanistic church will not smooth over a particle the harsh points of its doctrine for the sake of those more cultivated views who may be in the congregation.

On the other hand a liberal church will seldom accommodate its utterances to the opinions of Calvanistic members of the congregation. More probably will each church strengthen its utterances on disputed points in the hope of converting nonconfirmists to its own opinions. Given a number of sects in a certain locality. The one which has, all things considered, the most advantages in its favor, will flourish at the expense of the others. In those general remarks appears the answer to the question proposed.

Perhaps it appears like breaking a much cherished image to say that the early settlers of Ware were not saints—as other New England settlers were not—even in matters of public worship. But this is an age in which careful searching into origins and causes is dispelling many a fond delusion. While in purpose our puritan ancestors were very good people, they still had their failings as men of the present day have theirs. They could quarrel over the site of a church to such an extent as to prevent the house being built for several years. When they became dissatisfied with their pastor, and got him discharged, they could institute legal proceedings for a recovery of a part of the salary paid him during his labors. If they became dissatisfied with the affairs of the church to which they belonged, they could remove their church connections to another town to avoid aiding in the support of the church at home. There are records here in Ware showing that this last has been done in several instances within the history of the religious organizations of the town.

In the early history of the town every man was obliged by law to pay a tax somewhere for the support of a church, and he could pay that tax for the support of the church to which he chose to belong. Thus it happened that when a man because dissatisfied with his church, he would withdraw and unite with the church in a neighboring town and so satisfy his vengeance by paying his tax out of town.

The characteristics shown by these actions are sufficient of themselves to show why the religious element broke up into sects.

But there is still another reason that might be added. The existence of various denominations admits of a closer adaptation to individual need and preference. In a given town where a sufficient number of persons to make a movement successful, prefer a different mode of worship from the one existing there, they are pretty likely to have a separate church sooner or later. For illustration, there are some people who cannot be anything but Methodists, certain others who cannot be anything but Episcopalians, and so on through the list. Hence denominations are not only convenient, but are helpful, each doing its appointed work and doing a work which no other could do so well.

HINTS ABOUT HORSES.

It costs more to keep a poor horse than it does to keep a good one.

Change the food for your horses often enough to make them relish it.

Improper feeding is the cause of nine out of ten cases of sickness among horses.

Sweat and dust cause the horse's shoulders to gall. So do poor, ill-fitting collars.

Every time you worry your horses you shorten their lives and days of usefulness.

Affection cannot be pounded in. Kind treatment insures the affection of an animal, while rough treatment is sure to cause its hatred.

It is alike dangerous to other horses and men to spare the life of a glandered horse. Glanders is a highly contagious, incurable disease, and, as a rule, fatal in the human subject.

The temperature of water for horses is not so much of an object as the purity of it. While it is best to have it cool, it is more important to have it free from all impurities.

Of two colts similar in disposition and sense, one may develop into a steady and valuable family horse, while the other may be vicious, treacherous and unsafe—all because of a difference in the men handling them.

When horses are suffering from the bites of flies or stings of other insects, sponge the parts which cannot be protected by nets with water in which insect powder has been mixed—a tablespoonful to two gallons of water.

Mares in foal should have exercise and moderate work, and under no circumstances should they be subjected to harsh treatment, nor should they ever be allowed to go where they would be in danger of being frightened.

The horse which can plough an acre while another horse is ploughing half an acre, or that which can carry a load of passengers ten miles while another is going five, independent of all considerations of amusement, taste, or what is called fancy, is absolutely worth twice as much to the owner as the other.

Christmas Experiences.

"Who ever saw such a wretched time? I say it's a perfect shame,"
And the girl who sang the leading part—no matter about her name—
Flung down her book in anger by the side of the tenor's chair,
And, tying on her pretty hat, sailed down the gallery stair.

Then said the chorister: "Anna, that measure, if you please,"
And she whispered to her neighbor: "If he asked me on his knees,
I wouldn't do it now, after being so misused,"
But she bowed politely saying: "I would rather be excused."

Said the leader: "Then we'll omit the part," (that was worse than all the rest,)
And the tenor struck a minor key and did his level best,
And the red-lipped, black-eyed alto chimed in the proper place,
And thrilled like another Cary with a heart o'erful with grace.

The chorister man sang basso, and was very deep in love
With the girl who showed her temper in the manner mentioned above.
And the girl named Ann was jealous; she could sing as loud and high,
But the other did all the solos. You could easily tell why.

And the tenor was sweet on Anna; but she hated a Roman nose,
And she whispered to the girls in secret, he wore such horrible clo'es;
But the red-lipped, black-eyed alto, she worshiped his poet eyes,
And the pauses in the anthem were marked by her tender sighs.

Then there was a handsome baritone and a second alto girl;
He had a raven brigand moustache and she wore a golden curl;
But they were too mad to come at all, and were sleighing out of town.
Her name was Isabel Johnson and his was Amadon Brown.

And so the "practice" was over and nothing at all was done,
While the mottoes that matched the music were promised every one.
Oh! there never was such a wretched time before since the world began;
The basso went home with the alto girl and the Roman nose with Ann.

"Mercy me! how dim the lamps are. Wonder does that sexton s'pose
We'll wind greens in such a twilight? That's just all the fellow knows.
Where's Miss Allen and Lou Baxter, and May Barnes and Mrs. Kline?
Did you think to bring some scissors? Please hand me that ball of twine.

"Well, I never! See, those arches look like broken letter O's;
Nettie Myers did the tacking, and her head's so full of beau's
She can't tell a bow of cedar from a palmleaf done in ink—
Mor. Smith, put up those brackets. Are they high enough, you think?"

"Only three more days till Christmas. Howsoever we'll get through,
I can't see to save my senses. Mrs. Anderson, can you?
There's the pulpit, and the organ, and the alter—what a loss,
That the pasteboards are not ready, and the standard for the cross."

*　　*　　*

"Hush, my children," and their teacher patiently before them stood.
"Try it once more, and I'll dismiss you if you say it good."
Dottie Dimple, she would whisper, and wee Bendie laughed aloud;
Maggie May stood on her tiptoe, Jessie Lee was sure to crowd.
Mina Gray would spoil the finish with her last and loud "Amen."

*　　*　　*

It is past the stroke of midnight, all the village lies in dreams,
From the pastor's study window still a star of lamp-light gleams;
There have been so many callers and so much advice to give,
And the mistress in the kitchen all too busy to receive,
That the sermon lies unfinished and the inspiration fled,
And the right hand drops the pencil to support the weary head.

*　　*　　*

Comes the holy Christmas even
To the shining world once more.
Bells ring out and throngs of people
Pass within the old church door.
Never were festoons so lovely;
Never shown the lamps so bright;
It was like a bower of Eden
To the grateful pastor's sight.

All the walls were green with mottoes,
All the house with odors sweet,
Like the incense of the magi
Laid before the Saviour's feet,
Then the music—oh! the solo,
It was like an inspiration—
All the parts were so harmonious,
And such perfect modulation;

And the basso and the tenor,
And the dashing moustache man,
And the player at the organ,
And the alto girls, and Ann
All were in transcendent humor,
Shown by many a kind look,
And the two of the hottest temper
Sang out from the self-same book.

Then the sermon: 'twas a poem,
With such realistic grace,
Half it seemed the pious shepherds
Were before them, face to face.
Then the children: it was glorious
Once to hear the precious dears.
Bowed her head the listening teacher,
Just to hide her happy tears.

Thus the Christmas benediction
Comes to willing hearts and hands;
How the Christmas angels help us
No one knows or understands;
Yet the light of love descendeth,
And the earth grows fair again
When the song first heard in heaven
Echoes from the lips of men.

Young lady (haughtily disengaging herself)—"By what right, sir, do you presume to put your arm around my waist?" Young man (humbly)—"None, I confess; but I thought you would not object." Young lady—"Know then, sir, that I do object, and most emphatically. But that, of course, need not deter you from persevering."—Binghamton Republican.

Patient Wife (of sick man)—"Mary, bring in a glass with two teablespoonfuls—" Sick Man—"Darn your homœopathic doses. You want to let me die for want of medicine don't you? AN INDEPENDENT NEWSPAPER
SERVING THE PEOPLE.

THE SPRINGFIELD REPUBLICAN

THE LEADING JOURNAL OF NEW ENGLAND.

Established in 1824 by Samuel Bowles.

LATELY ENLARGED AND IMPROVED.

The year 1888 has marked notable events in the history of The Springfield Republican. A new building admirably arranged for the large and growing business of the paper has been erected and occupied. It stands on one of the most desirable corners in Springfield and is the property of The Republican Company. The paper has also been enlarged by the addition of eight columns to its quarto sheet, making the regular size 56 columns. These improvements afford The Republican better facilities than it has ever before possessed for the performance of the work of a great modern newspaper and the fulfilment of its duties to the age and intelligent constituency whom it serves.

The Republican considers it to be the first office of a newspaper to print the news fairly, fully, intelligently and without prejudice. This it undertakes to do every day in the year, giving special attention and extended space to the local news of Western Massachusetts, Northern Connecticut and Southern Vermont and New Hampshire. Its organization of reporters an correspondents for collecting the news in the territory described is wonderfully complete, and the thoroughness and promptness of its service is unrivaled. In Boston and Washington The Republican employs trained journalists as its regular correspondents to supplement the news of the Associated Press, and in New York, Albany and other important centers it commands the aid of well-equipped special correspondents whenever occasion demands.

In the treatment of political and social questions, The Republican is thoroughly independent. It stands up always for the real interest of the people as against monopoly, corruption, coercion, deception and every form of demagogism. It counts the wellfare of the country as of more consequence every time than the success of any party. It seeks to be broad-minded, generous, fair and good tempered in its discussions of public affairs, and to represent always the true and pure American spirit. The Republican devotes liberal attention to literature, to science, to education, to all social and economical questions. Besides giving its readers "All the news and the truth about it," this paper offers them daily an abundance of miscellaneous reading, instructive, entertaining and interesting.

THE SUNDAY REPUBLICAN

Is prepared with special pains to meet the needs and taste of the New England public. It presents the news, local and general, in readable and attractive form. It always contains a pleasing original story or sketch, a good sermon, a department for children, the latest news from the theaters and of outdoor sports, a literary column, interesting home and foreign correspondence, a full editorial page covering a wide range of live topics, local sketches, original poetry, etc. It is a wholesome, newsy and interesting journal well suited to the day of rest.

THE WEEKLY REPUBLICAN.

Has often been called the best review of American life anywhere published. It is carefully edited and gives all the important news and discussion of the week in compact and well-arranged order. It contains also several pages of general reading, embracing the best stories, correspondence, sketches and special articles that have appeared in the Daily and Sunday editions. The recent increase by eight columns of its size, allows the addition of much valuable and entertaining matter and makes The Weekly Republican more than ever a model family journal.

AS AN ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

The Republican is unrivaled in its field. Its circulation is by far the largest of any daily in New England out of Boston, with the exception of an evening paper in Rhode Island, and it is read by all classes.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

The Daily Republican is sold for $8 a year, $2 a quarter, 70 cents a month, 3 cents a copy.

The Sunday Republican is $2 a year, 50 cents a quarter, 5 cents a copy.

The Weekly Republican is $1 a year, 60 cents for six months; 10 cents a month for trial subscriptions; 3 cents a copy.

New subscriptions to The Weekly Republican for 1889 may begin at once and continue to January 1, 1890.

Send for free sample copies.

LeGRO & LYNDE,

DRUGGISTS,

WILL display Beautiful Holiday Goods. Yes, we shall lead them all this year as we did last, and those who did not buy of us were sorry after they found out their mistake, but we want no mistakes this year, and unless you come and see for yourself what we have for the holidays, — for

PRESENTS to suit everybody, and get the price, you certainly will make the mistake of being disappointed, and of having less money in your pocketbook. Yes, we have pocketbooks in all styles, and you can have money left to put in it after buying one, and so buy something else, for instance

A LOVELY PLUSH SHAVING SET
For your "gentleman," or a beautiful
PLUSH MANICURE SET
For your "best lady," or a Doll for the baby.

AN ELEGANT LEATHER OR PLUSH ALBUM for your—well, for anybody. Yes, anybody can look at our goods. We are glad to have people in our store, and always pleased to show what we have. Well, what we do have, we will not try to mention the many things you can see here, for space would not admit, but we want rather to impress upon your mind the fact, that

Whatever You Want,
You Will Find
At Our Store,

And furthermore, that when you buy here, we want you satisfied, this is the reason that

WE will exchange goods or refund money. We do this in fairness to our customers and justice to ourselves, for if those who buy of us know we are bound to make quality and price satisfactory, then we keep them as customers and are the more careful what and how we buy for them.

NOW we know that you all want nice goods, attractive, pretty, and as cheap as possible for your Presants, and that is just what we have in our line of

PLUSHES,
In DOLLS,
In CHRISTMAS BOOKLETS AND CARDS,
In TOYS For the Children,
In PERFUMES, SACHET POWDERS,

On the Eve of the Wedding.

O love, before we part to-night,
Before the last "I will" is spoken—
Before the ring has touched my hand,
Of pure, true, endless love the token—
Before the church with holy rite
Her blessing on our love has given,
Look straight into my eyes with yours,
And answer me in sight of Heaven.

Is there within your heart of hearts
One lingering shadow of regret—
One thought that you have chosen ill?
Oh! speak—'tis not too late e'en yet.
Is there in all this world of ours
One you have ever known or seen
Whom, if you had earlier seen or known,
You would have crowned your chosen queen?

Is there?—I pray you tell me now,
And I will hold you bound no more;
I will not flinch to hear the truth,
It could not be so sad, so sore
To know it now, as it would be
If by-and-by a shadow fell
Upon the sunshine of our home;
So, if you ever loved me, tell.

I'll hold you pure from blame, dear love;
And I would leave you free as air
To woo and win that happier one,
All this for your dear sake I'd bear.
I will not say how I would pray
That God might have you in His care;
That would be easy—when I think
Of you, my heart is all one prayer.

But could I join her name with yours,
And call down blessings from above
On her, who had robbed me of my all—
My life—my light—my only love?
Yes! even that I'd try to do;
Although my lonely heart should break,
I'd try to say, "God bless her!" too,
Through blinding tears, for your sweet sake.

I'm looking up into your eyes;
But though my own with tears are dim,
I read that in their true, clear depths.
Which tells me, "You may trust in him."
I will! I will! It needs no words,
Though yours are flowing warm and fast
And eloquent with truth and love.
Forgive my doubts—they are the last!

DORA'S TRIAL.

"I do wish," said Mrs. Prudence Hall, holding her darning-needle in mid air for a moment, over the coarse blue sock she was mending, "I do wish you could see your way clear to marrying Seth Hallett. He wants you the worst kind, and he'd be such a good provider."

"But I don't like him well enough, Prudy; and I want something besides meat and drink and two calico dresses a year."

Mrs. Prudence Hall had sprained her ankle, and was forced, sorely against her will, to sit, day after day, in an upper chamber, with a terrible consciousness that everything about the farm was relapsing into chaos and old night for want of her oversight. Her pretty sister, Dora, had come to stay with her; but she was "only a child, you know." "There are two kinds of love in this world," said Mrs. Hall, after a pause, in which she had been taking counsel with herself as to whether Dora was old enough to be talked to on such matters at all, and it flashed upon her that "the child" was nearly 20 years old. "Perhaps you like Seth well enough to marry him, only you don't know it."

"Tell me about the two kinds of love," said Dora innocently. "I thought love was love the world over."

"I have never known but one kind, I think, Dora. When I married David Hall he was the most well-to-do young man in these parts, and we never had a quarrel while he lived. He was a good, practical sort of a man, and never asked me to do anything unreasonable.

"What if he had?" asked Dora.

Well, I guess I should have argued him out of it. But there is a kind of love that will draw women through fire and water. It makes them throw themselves away on poor, shiftless men, that will never provide for them nor their children, and they know it as well as anybody else does. It is the greatest wonder to me why such a useless feeling should ever have been created."

Dora had bent low over her work to hide her roguish smiles at her sister's discourse; but at this point she fixed her dark gray eyes on Prudence, not smiling, but simply earnest. "Such love brings happiness sometimes, I suppose," said Dora.

"Next to never," said Prudence, with great decision. "We ain't made to be happy, and anything that's too good always leaves a bad taste in the mouth. Comfort is a bird in the hand, and you don't gain anything by letting it fly on the chance of happiness."

"Did you ever know any one about here, Prudence, that threw herself away for love? It seems to me they won't look at a man unless he has a house and farm all ready for them."

"That's where they're right, said Prudence. "You are rather given to high-flying notions, and it's time you found out that bread don't grow ready buttered. Yes, I did know one girl who was pretty and smart, and had no end of chances to get married (I think my David courted her a spell, but he never would own it,) and she would have that shiftless critter, Joe Raymond, who would never make one hand wash the other. Even when she was a-dying she pretended that she had been happy and wouldn't have done no other way if she had it to do over again."

"Was she Joe's mother?" asked Dora, quickly.

"Yes, to be sure; and when she died we took him to bring up and work on the farm. He's more than paid his way, but he's a rolling stone, like his father, and won't never come to anything. I forgot to tell you—he's going to-morrow."

"Going to-morrow!" cried Dora, with a great start. "I thought his time wasn't out for another month."

"Well, it ain't rightly out till he's twenty-one; but he was in such a hurry to be off that I gave him the last month.

Then silence fell upon them.

These two women had the same father and mother, though a score of years lay between them. Prudence had been born in the early married life of her parents, when they were struggling with a stony New England farm, and there was work for even baby hands. The lines of duty and patience were deep-graved in her rugged face, which yet beamed with a kindly common sense. But Dora had come to her mother late in life, as an old tree sometimes blossoms into loveliness after every one has forgotten it. Her little feet had walked in easy paths, and Prudence yearned over her like a mother.

She sat now by the open fire, bending her graceful head over some delicate work that Prudence would never have found time for; her red dress and the flickering firelight made her a picture too lovely for that dull room. "Prudence," she said suddenly, "as this is Joe's last night, I think I'll go down and say good-bye to him."

"You might call him up here."

"No; I think I will go myself."

"I believe I haven't ever told you, Dora, how much you pleased me by giving up that foolish way of going on with him that you used to have. It did very well for you to be fond of each other when you were little, but, of course, it is out of the question now."

It might have been the red dress and the firelight that brought such a vivid flush to Dora's cheek as she listened and turned away. She ran lightly down stairs and opened the door of the great farm kitchen.

A young man sat by the dull fire, looking into it as one does into the eyes of an enemy before the fight—an overgrown farmer boy, in home-made clothes, with nothing about him to fall in love with, least of all for the brilliant little figure that stood waiting for him to look up. He was too intent on his own thoughts to notice her, till she went swiftly across the room, and, taking his head between her soft hands, turned his face up to hers. "Joe, bad boy, were you going away without letting me know?"

The hard lines of his face softened and brightened under her gaze till one would not have known him for the same man. "I thought I should not see you to-night," he said.

"You know better; you know I would have crept through the keyhole for one last little minute with you."

"How long will you wait for me, Dora?"

"Till you come back."

"If it were seven years, think how long it would be."

"If you loved me as you make me believe," said Dora, "you would not go away at all, but work here till you could build a little house, and then we would rough it together."

"No, little Dora, that is not my kind of love; my mother tried that, and she lived a slave's life."

"Dora, Dora!" called Prudence from up stairs; "what on earth are you doing down there!"

"I must go now; I must, truly," said Dora, as she felt herself locked in arms that would not give way. "If I live without you for seven years I shall be a homely old maid, and you will not thank me for waiting for you."

He put her away then, and looked at her curiously, as if he had never thought of her prettiness before. "Do you know what your name means?" he asked earnestly. "I saw it in the paper that Theodora means 'Gift of God,' and you have been just that to me. If I had never seen you I should never have had a notion above a day's work or a night's sleep. I will write whenever I have any luck, and come home on New Year's eve, when I do come, and if you wear this red dress I shall know you have waited for me."

"I think I shall live to wear it when you come home, if it is seven times seven years, Joe, for women are very hard to kill," said Dora, slowly disappearing from the kitchen.

"What have you been doing all this time?" said Prudence severely.

"I was only giving Joe some good advice."

"Well, I hope he'll profit by it."

"So do I," said Dora heartily.

'Tis as easy to say seven years as one; and we read of Jacob's seven years' service for Rachel, which seemed but as one day for the love that he bore her. Rachel's feelings are not thought worthy to be mentioned in Holy Writ, but if her love was like Dora's, every day seemed seven years. And here, in a nutshell, lies the difference between a man's love and a woman's.

Jacob had the sheep to mind, and he did mind them uncommonly well. Joe went to seek his fortune in new scenes, and only thought of Dora when he had nothing else to do. The poet thought he had set a hard task to men when he said:

"Learn to labor and to wait;"

but it is immeasurably harder to be idle than to wait.

Till her lover went away, Dora had never cared to ask herself whether she were a child or a woman. Sunshine had been plenty with her, and she had eagerly sugared and gilded the plain things that farm life afforded to her.

Before the first year came to an end she felt that she should soon arrive at a patriarchal age if she did not do something to kill the time which died so hard on her hands.

"Teach school!" I guess not," said her father, when she broached her plan to him. "You ain't starvin' yet; and if you want some new furbelows, just say so, and not come at it slantin'-ways like that."

"I don't want anything, father; but there is so little to do at home."

"Nonsense! In my time, gals was always full of business. Can't you make sheets and pillow-cases, and get ready to be married? Who knows but somebody'll ask ye one of these days."

"Waal, folks can't always have their 'd rathers in this world. I ain't willin', and that's the end on't."

But this was not the end on't, and Dora easily obtained a school. She developed a governing talent which charmed the committeemen, and the congenial labor in the company of little children took her out of herself and infused new life into her hope deferred.

Every week she walked to the post-office, dence was lying awake for her. "Don't three miles away, to ask for a letter, going in with a bright flush on her cheek, and coming out pale and dull-eyed after the stab of disappointment. I wonder that people in the country are so anxious to be postmasters; if they only knew it, they are actors in more tragedies than any member of a theatrical stock company. Much sealed happiness passes through their hands; but they have to refuse many a "Marianna in the Moated Grange,"—weary women who reach a hand out of their dull lives for a letter and draw it back empty.

It was far into the second year before Joe's first letters came. It was surely a fanciful and foolish thing for a schoolmistress to do, but Dora carried it to her own little room and put on the red dress before she read Joe's letter.

Joe was working in the mines in Colorado. His luck had not come yet, in nuggets at least, but hard work and sober living were slowly giving him the advantage over the other miners. He was never so well, and he loved her better than all the world.

Dora lived on this letter for many weeks, and she set "Colorado" for a copy so often to her scholars that they will write that word better than any other to their dying day.

Letters came oftener as years drew on; sometimes Joe was up in the world, sometimes down; once his carefully hoarded gold was stolen from him, and he had to begin all over again; but this was nothing to a long illness, in which a friend wrote to Dora as soon as Joe was out of danger. Then Dora envied the doves their wings.

New Year's day was the hardest of all to bear. She could not help a strong pleasure of excitement when she put on the red dress, which grew more and more old-fashioned, and watched the sun go down on the road which Joe must travel when he should come home. The next morning she fitted her shoulders sadly to the burden of another year.

One young farmer after another found his way to the old farm-house on Sunday evenings, and Dora pushed them down an inclined plane of discouragement so gently that they scarcely knew whether they had meant to court her or not. It was not the least of her trials to meet the entreaties of her mother and the rough arguments of her father, when one or two more persistent suitors would take nothing less than "no" for their answer.

As the seventh year drew to a close, Dora's heart beat light within her. Joe had mentioned seven years, as if he meant to come home then, at any rate. She wore out the first day of the "glad New Year" with busy cares till late in the afternoon, when an old man, spent with much walking, stopped to rest himself in the farm-house kitchen. Prudence bestirred herself to give him a hearty luncheon, and when he was warmed and fed he began to talk of his travels. He had been seeking his fortune all over the West, and, never finding it, had come back to die at home. He mentioned Colorado and Denver, and when Dora found herself alone with him for a moment she said, "Did you ever see Joseph Raymond in Denver?"

"Joe Raymond? Oh, yes! knew him well; lived with him nigh on to a month. His wife was a real good cook; couldn't be beat in them parts."

"You say he was married?"

"To be sure; and a right smart feller, and mighty fond of his wife. Women are scarce out there."

Prudence came in, and the old man went on his way, all unconscious of the great stone he had cast into the still waves of Dora's heart.

"What's the matter?" said Prudence, "you're as white as a sheet."

Dora's only answer was to start out of the house and run, as for her life, down the frozen orchard path, by which she could gain upon and overtake this terrible old man. She might have said, with "Holy Herbert":

My tho'ts are all a case of knives,
Wounding my heart;
With scattered smart,—

Only misery must have time to crystalize into a memory before it takes the form of poetry. She stood before the old man at the turning, bare-headed and breathless. "How did the Joe Raymond look that you lived with?" gasped Dora.

"I didn't say 'Joe Raymond,'" said the old man peevishly; I said Jim Joe, who"—but Dora was off again before he could finish the sentence.

She ran back through the orchard, giving thanks with all her heart that she had not suffered herself to be persuaded of Joe's faithlessness on one hearing. Her feeling of grateful awe, as if she had escaped from sudden death, kept her from mourning much over the passing away of the seventh anniversary of Joe's departure with no sign of his return.

His letters had wholly ceased and there was nothing left for Dora but to possess her soul with patience. When another New Year dawned upon her, she put on the old red dress more from habit than any gleam of hope in her heart, and did not care to look in the glass. In the twilight she walked slowly down the orchard path, and leaned on the gate that opened into the road.

Suddenly a man sprang out from behind the wall. "Theodora, my 'gift of God!'" he said; and Dora, though she recognized no mark of the lover who had left her eight years before, felt that no other knew that pass-word and suffered herself to rest silently in his arms in the ineffable content that comes after long waiting.

When Joe and Dora went into the house and she looked at him by candle light, her heart almost misgave her; his luxuriant beard and the manly assurance of his manners were not at all like her Joe of beloved memory, and a terrible barrier seemed to rise up between them, while Prudence remained in the room with her company manners, which set more awkwardly upon her than her Sunday gown.

When Dora tiptoed softly by her sister's door at a very late hour that night, Prutell me," she said, "that you've been waiting for that Joe Raymond all this time!"

"I won't tell you if you don't want to hear it," said Dora.

"Do you know whether he came home any better off than when he went away?"

"I really haven't thought to ask him," said Dora, carelessly. Prudence groaned and turned her face to the wall.

Joe waited only till the next day to tell Mrs. Hall the story of his success, which looked very moderate in his travelled eyes, but seemed a noble fortune to her homely ideas.

"I never thought before," said Dora's father at the wedding, "that a woman could keep a secret, and I guess it ain't much more common than snow in dog days."

"How long would yon have waited for me?" whispered Joe in Dora's ear.

"Forever," said Dora solemnly.

And Mrs. Prudence Hall, as she overheard the words, thanked her stars that Dora's foolish notions had not wrecked her at last on a poverty-stricken marriage.—Ella W. Thompson in Lippincott's Magazine.

A TRADE IN DOG SKINS.

It is well known that in many districts of Manchuria and China there is a great trade in dog and goat skins, which are employed in the manufacture of robes and mats; but it is commonly supposed that the skins are remnants of dirty and filthy animals which abound in those quarters. The idea, however, is a mistake, for the business of rearing dogs for this purpose is well established, and is as systematic an industry as sheep-farming. There are countless dog farms scattered over the unknown regions of Manchuria and Moegolia, where from 20 to 100 dogs are reared every year, and where the inhabitant is esteemed according to the number of dog skins in his possession. It is probable that the most beautiful dogs are to be found in these countries, for the exceeding low temperature of winter, where the thermometer falls to 30 degrees F. below zero, produces a magnificent coat and skin. The prices obtained are, however, very unprofitable, a full-sized robe, 80 inches square, containing the skins of eight animals, being quoted at 14s. 6d. The value of trade from Newchang last year is stated at £40,000.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 28, 1888.

Pittsfield is no longer satisfied with being the largest town in the state, and is preparing to put on city clothes.

Our Legislature will meet next Wednesday for the annual law tinkering. The interest of the occasion centers in the speakership contest, the outcome of which cannot now be foretold; but may the best man win.

The oldest inhabitant cannot recall such a bit of Christmas weather as this week has given us, with its balmy, spring-like air, a breath of May in mid-winter. Let us hope that this green Christmas may not bring the traditional fat graveyard.

Gen. Harrison has done little since his election to the presidency but entertain visitors, but he has turned over a new leaf this week, and is devoting himself to work and preparing the outline of his message, denying himself to all visitors except in matters of special importance.

Secretary Endicott has ordered the city of Boston to alter the bridges over Charles river, in the interest of navigation, to the tune of $2,500,000, but the city cannot see the beauty or necessity of such an outlay, and will wait for a new secretary to arise who will be more considerate of the Hub's finances.

About once a week it is given out that Mr. Blaine is ready to accept the position of secretary of state in Mr. Harrison's cabinet. The delicate frequency of these announcements indicate that his "willingness" is rapidly turning to anxiety. If Mr. Harrison should decide to leave Brother Blaine out of his official family entirely there would not be very deep mourning throughout the land.

According to the latest advices Stanley, the explorer, is not a prisoner in the hands of Mahdi, a dispatch from Zanzibar saying that he was all right as late as last August, when he arrived on the Aruwimi, returning from his mission to Emin Bey. He was well, and his whole force was in good condition, and they were to start in a few days to rejoin Emin, with additional stores. Stanley has shown a wonderful ability to take care of himself so far, and there is little probablity that he has now fallen into the hands of his enemies.

The American steamer Haytien Republic, which was seized by the Haytien government a few weeks ago, has been surrendered to the men of war which our government sent out to settle the matter, and everything is lovely in that quarter now, while the Democratic administration is expected to go out in a blaze of glory because of the prompt and fearless manner in which it has bearded the Haytien lion in his den. It was not the biggest sort of game, to be sure, but it doubtless looks big to this adminstration.

Mayor Hewitt of New York is as modest as he is courageous, and declines the invitation of 400 prominent citizens to a complimentry banquet, which he says "will not in any way affect the judgment of the people in regard to my motives in accepting the nomination for mayor, or the manner in which I have performed the duties of that great office." He adds in closing:—

> Moreover, it becomes a defeated candidate to be modest in his claims for public approbation. But I know that the passing judgment of the day is not the sober verdict of history, and I am well content to leave my record to an impartial test of time and truth.

An interesting and instructive portrayal of an unsatisfied life was given at Boston last Sunday in a lecture by George Chainey, from the text: "For there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved." Relating his religious experience, Mr. Chainey said he was first a Methodist minister, but becoming full of doubt he broadened his views and entered the Unitarian ministry. Soon he came to the point of infidelity, and then went through Spiritualism, Theosophy, Rosicrucianism, Hermetic philosophy and Esoteric culture, but the further he went in these lines the more unhappy he became, and his search for a new faith and peace brought him finally back to the good old way, and in his joyous relief he exclaimed: "I will go unto all the world and preach this gospel." So it ever will be with the earnest seeker after the true way. "I am the way and the truth and the life," said Christ.

BURNING STEAMERS.

The news of the week has been unusually full of shocking affairs—murders, suicides, fires, railway smashups, floods, explosions, etc.—among which the burning of three steamers and the loss of some 70 lives stand out in awful prominence. The passenger steamer Kate Adams, on the Mississippi river, was burned about 8 o'clock Sunday morning near Commerce, Miss., 40 miles south of Memphis, having on board some 200 people, many going home for the holidays. The fire caught in some cotton near the boilers while the passengers were at breakfast, and spread rapidly. The boat was only 300 yards from the shore, and was at once run aground, but the flames became so hot that many jumped overboard and were drowned, about 25 lives being lost.

Monday morning the propeller Leif Ericksen, with 33 persons on board, was burned a few miles west of Seattle, W. T., and seven lives lost. Fire broke out in the pilot-house when the boat was two miles from shore, with no other vessel near enough to be of immediate assistance, and the passengers were driven overboard by the heat of the flames.

Another Mississippi river steamer, the John H. Hanna, was burned early Tuesday morning at Plaquemines, La., with about 100 persons on board, 30 of whom were burned to death, and several more drowned. The fire was started by a careless stoker throwing a cigarette among the cotton, and the flames spread so rapidly as to surround some of the victims before they could reach the sides of the boat, which was at once run ashore, but the bank was muddy, and even after several had escaped from the flames on the boat, they became bogged in the soft mud and were slowly roasted to death by the intense heat.

THE BUILDING RECORD

IN PALMER AND VICINITY FOR THE PAST TWELVE MONTHS.

AN UNUSUALLY LARGE AMOUNT.

WITH A BRIGHT OUTLOOK FOR THE YEAR TO COME.

The building record for the past twelve months has been an unusually good one. The year has been a prosperous one in general, and as a natural consequence the influence has been felt in the building trades. Many new structures have been put up in eastern Hampden county during the past year, besides a large amount expended in repairs and additions. The foundations for a number of new buildings, to be erected next season, are already in, while indications point to an even larger number of new structures next season.

PALMER.

The contractors and builders have all been unusually busy during the past 12 months, and the excellent building record is sufficient evidence that the town continues on the road to prosperity. During 1887 the money expended in the construction and repair of buildings amounted to $80,000, while within the present year over $100,000 will have been paid contractors for labor and material. This record compares very favorably with those of preceding years, while the outlook for 1889 is very encouraging and promises to surpass it. Some elaborate structures have been erected by residents, while the greatest public outlay has been made by the town in erecting the new high school building, on the corner of Park and Thorndike streets, at a cost of about $15,000. It is a model of its kind, and adds greatly to the architectural beauty of the town. About $3000 has been expended in remodeling, constructing an addition to, and frescoing the interior of St. Thomas Catholic church, while a small edifice has been erected at Bondsville, costing $5000, which will be used as a house of worship by the French Catholics. F. F. Marcy has built three single-tenement houses at Three Rivers at an outlay of $4500; the Thorndike Company has erected two tenement blocks, costing $4000 and $2000 respectively, while the same company is building a grist, saw and cider mill near Forest Lake which will cost in the vicinity of $1500 when completed; Clark & Hastings have built a new store and market at Bondsville, with tenements in the upper story, costing about $2500; R. H. Arnold is steadily building up the wire mill village, and has put up another house there for $1200; C. N. Ellithorp has built a house on Dewey's hill for about $1200; a two-tenement house has been erected on the corner of School and Park streets by Joseph Kerigan, costing $3000; John Dimmick has put up a new two-story house at Palmer Center worth $1000; Sumner Blodgett's new house and barn, which were erected this year on Dewey's hill, cost in the vicinity of $4000; Frank Merriam has built a house and barn on Dewey's hill which cost about $1500; George Powers's new house on Dewey's hill, which he built this year, cost him $2000; the Thomson-Houston Electric Company has constructed a fine station to run its plant, costing $3850; Austin Hawkes has built a residence on Knox street, and a barn, which cost $3300; a fine residence for F. D. Barton on Squier street will cost about $4300; W. R. Milligan's new residence on Thorndike street is completed at about the same figure; George M. Atkins's Swiss cottage on Converse avenue, which will be completed shortly, will cost $2400; the Tiffany house on Pleasant street, owned by Dr. G. H. Wilkins, has been remodeled at an expense of $2200; Fred Lamson has constructed a house and barn at Thorndike at an expense of $2000; John Gay, Jr., has put up a house at Thorndike for $800; a new house for Margaret and Michael Sullivan has been erected at Thorndike, costing $1500; Cross block on Main street in this village has undergone extensive repairs, and the stores have been remodeled at an expense of $2500; an addition has been built to the Weeks House, and other repairs made, costing in all $2000; Mrs. Ella J. Wheeler's residence, near the agricultural park, has been remodeled and improved at a cost of $2000; repairs have been made upon the North Main street residence of Charles B. Fiske for $500; L. E. Moore has had his residence on North Main street remodeled and repaired at an expense of $650; Charles E. Dewey has had repairs made to his property which will cost $150; an addition has been built to the house of Mrs. Brainerd for $300; John Loftus has erected a new barn at Thorndike worth $850; an addition, costing $175, has been made upon the house of Mrs. Johnson; Thomas Blanchard has erected a small barn for $150; Mrs. Joseph Thompson has made repairs on her North Main street property at an expense of $65; Mrs. G. W. Cobb has expended $70 in repairing her Church street property; repairs and alterations have been made upon the Second Baptist church, and also an addition constructed in the rear, for about $700; Mrs. John Dunn and John Watson have repaired their property at Three Rivers for $150 and $35 respectively; F. F. Marcy has expended $800 in repairing his property; John M. Converse has made repairs upon his buildings costing $300; H. C. Strong has repaired and improved his property for about $150. At the Four Corners Mr. Dimo has erected a house, barn and blacksmith-shop costing $3000, and Mr. Furkey a barn costing $150. At Three Rivers Mrs. A. M. Orcutt has made an addition to her millinery store, Dr. H. M. Davis an addition to his house, and F. Barker has erected a barn. At Bondsville David Lamb has made repairs on his house at an expense of $600; O. A. Parent has turned the old store of Murdock Bros. into a hall, with two tenements above, at a cost of $800; the Boston Duck Company has put up a four-tenement block costing $2500, also a boiler-house 74x47 feet, with chimney 124 feet high, at a cost of $10,000.

MONSON.

In reviewing the building record of Monson for the past year, the showing is a very good one. The houses built are generally of the better class. There has been an unusual amount of repairing done, of which no mention is made. It would be hard, indeed, to picture the prospect for the coming year, or the general feeling among the residents of the town, but at the best it looks very discouraging. The straw-shop failure and the shutting down of the North Monson mill has thrown 400 hands out of employment, and a large majority have been obliged to leave town and secure employment elsewhere. Should the straw-shop alone stand idle, it would decrease the value of real estate 20 per cent at the lowest estimation, and there would be no demand at that price. Unless some manufacturing business is located here, in all probability Monson has seen her best days. The proposed water company, after surveying and finding the most favorable facilities for supplying the town with a water system, does not, under the present state of affairs, seem disposed to go ahead with its plans, and, in the minds of many, there will be no water system established in the town for some time. The most expensive building begun in the town the past year is the new Universalist church, now in process of construction, the estimated cost of which is $25,000. The structure is of Monson granite, and will be a handsome building when completed. The next building of importance is the new parochial residence of Father Lee, which was erected at a cost of between $12,000 and $15,000. The structure is noticeable for its fine location, and was erected by Contractor Danforth. The office and laboratory of Dr. F. W. Ellis is another building of note, and is one of the most convenient and handsome offices in this part of the state. The estimated cost is $4000. The other houses erected, with the estimated cost, are as follows: John Dower, $2500; R. F. Bradway, 1500; Timothy Foley, 1000; Calvin Pease, 2000; J. M. Wright, 1500; Luther Peck, 1200; William Lewis, 2000; C. H. Chick, 1800; Samuel Closson, 1800; A. D. Ellis, addition, 800; town farm, addition, 800. Barns: William Underwood, $800; Peter Hayes, addition, 600; H. D. Moulton, 1200. This makes the total amount of new building $63,200.

WARREN.

There has been a good deal of building in Warren the past year. Contractor H. C. More has erected a house and barn for Mr. More on the corner of Southbridge and Pleasant streets, four cottages for Harlow Jones on Jones street, house for Mrs. Franklin Drury on Maple street, house for Mr. Brusoe on Southbridge street, house for John Avery on Southbridge street, house for Mr. Dunlap on Washington street, house for Mr. Mullin on Maple street, house for Mr. Batchelor on Washington street. E. L. Fosket has built two houses on East Main street for A. L. Converse, two houses on Elm street for Wilson Fairbanks, houses on More avenue for John Leach and C. W. Burt, carpet factory for Mr. Burt and blacksmith shop 40 by 30 feet for Wilson Fairbanks. Mr. Conway of West Brookfield has built five six-tenement houses for James Hill, and houses for Mr. Heritage and Mr. Butterworth. A double tenement house on School street has been built for Mr. Buxton by Mr. Eaton, and a house for Jerome Gould by Mr. Williams. The value of new buildings erected the past year is about $47,000. The outlook for next season is good. A carpet factory is to be started, and the foundations for several new houses are now being put in.

WEST WARREN.

West Warren is slowly but surely growing, and has fond hopes of soon becoming a town by itself. Although the building has not been very lively the past year, it shows the village is not dead. The town has erected a two-story school house on South street at a cost of about $4500, and it has also built a substantial iron bridge across the Quaboag river near A. W. Crossman & Son's tool shop. George Bliss, the marketman, has put up a dwelling house on the new street leading off High, and intends building another near it before another year has passed. Charles Deyette has built himself a comfortable house on North street. The Roman Catholic society has commenced a building near their church for the use of Father Moyes, but it has not yet been completed. E. P. Clark has built an addition to his house on School street. Edward Bigoness has put up a barn at his place on Sumner street. The contractors' figures on these structures are not far from $13,000.

BRIMFIELD.

But few buildings have been erected in this town during the past year. John L. Bacon has erected a building about 70 by 24 feet to furnish him room for a grist mill, saw and shingle mill, planer and matcher, and other machinery, all placed therein, and said to be the best equipped mill in this vicinity. John W. Lawrence has built an addition to his grist mill in the north-west part of the town. D. W. Fosket has built a blacksmith shop 40x20 feet at that part of the town known as Fosket's Mills. E. E. Tarbell has built a barn 24x26 feet at the village of Little Rest. Porter A. Parker has built a tool and poultry house about 24x16 feet. This amount of building has been offset by several bad fires within the past year.

WALES.

One thousand dollars will cover all the new building done in this town during the past year, but the outlook for another season is good. E. Shaw has built a new store and wagon house, H. E. Steele a new barn, and H. A. McFarland an addition to the Hobbs house.

HAMPDEN.

Hampden shows but a slight record during the last season. Erwin Temple has made an addition to his barn, the same size of the original structure, at a cost of $500; John R. West has transformed his "red" house into a cozy little cottage at a cost of $300, and Frank Crocker has erected a small building, for light joiner work, at a cost of $100.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

There has been little building at this place besides the rebuilding of the paper mill which was burned February 15. The old mill was three stories and an attic. The new one is three stories only, but the loss of the attic is more than made up by the extension of the main building 50 feet, and the addition of a stock and rag house 100 by 40 feet. With nearly all new machinery and electric lights it is now one of the best equipped mills in the country. W. L. Collins has made extensive repairs on his buildings during the year, and is now building a new wagon and blacksmith shop.

LUDLOW.

Building in Ludlow has been quite brisk for the past year. Of a public nature there have been built a mill and a hall. The latter, which is donated by the heirs of the late Mr. Hubbard, is nearly finished. It is a memorial building, and as such is accepted by the town in trust. The new mill is situated near the site of the old cotton mill, and is two stories high, to be used in manufacturing gunny cloth. The company has begun work on about 12 new cottages, to be occupied by its employes, and also have made quite extensive repairs on some of its tenements, to say nothing of the change in its stone building to accommodate the new postmaster. In private enterprise little has been done. Mr. Browning has built a new residence for himself, A. H. Halford has remodeled his house—bought recently of the company—and J. W. Hubbard has built an addition to his house a short distance from the center. Two or three new houses have been built in and near "Little Canada" by Canadians.

LUDLOW CENTER.

Three new houses have been built the past year, besides repairs on many others. Mr. A. F. Nash, a member of the board of assessors, began to build last year, but did not complete so as to occupy the main portion till this season. His is a story and a half cottage, 22 by 27 feet, with ell 27 by 19, and is one of the handsomest houses in town; the cost is $1800. G. D. Atchinson expects to move into his new and substantial farm house about January 1st. It is 31 by 23 feet, with ell 17 by 24, all two stories, with broad piazza and 12 good-sized rooms; cost, $2500 to $3000. Charles White has erected a new story and a half house 22 by 30 feet, and two sheds 18 by 18 each, doing all the work himself. The value of the building is about $1000. A new $2500 house, mostly built last year, was finished and taken possession of by Alfred Jones early in this year. Besides these, John Hubbard, Keefe Brothers and Selectman James White have made extensive additions to their buildings. Otis Tilley contemplates the erection of a new house the coming year, and there is a strong probability that his will not be the only one.

PALMER AND VICINITY.

Get ready to "swear off."

Slightly more like winter to-day.

The schools will resume duties Monday.

The sportsmen bagged a large amount of game Christmas.

Hampden Chapter, Royal Arch Masons, will hold its annual meeting this evening.

The days have increased three minutes in length, but you probably haven't noticed it yet.

The Crescent club will be entertained by Dr. W. H. Stowe next Wednesday evening.

The annual meeting of the Congregational church will be held next Thursday evening.

Although perhaps a little early, the Journal wishes all its readers a happy and prosperous new year.

Miss Nellie Finnerty of Fox avenue received a Christmas present of a handsome piano from her parents.

Horsemen would be very thankful if the watering tank opposite the Nassowanno House was put in running order again.

Contractor Marcy has finished work on the bridge at Blanchardville, and it is now awaiting the inspection of the selectmen.

The Palmer claims for damages to sheep from dogs have been returned by the county commissioners, as they were improperly made.

Rev. Joseph Provost of Springfield will address the Crescent club some time next month on the "French Huguenots and their influence in America."

The employes at the Weeks House were all given a ride on the tally-ho coach by J. W. Weeks Tuesday afternoon, and the trip was much enjoyed.

The annual meeting of the Baptist church will be held next Monday evening at 7.30. At 4 in the afternoon there will be a "family reunion," with a supper at 6.

Rev. Mr. Betts was made the recipient of a handsome overcoat, from his parishioners, Christmas, and Mrs. Betts received a purse of $35 from the Crescent club.

We present an interesting number to our readers this week. It will be especially pleasing to former residents in this vicinity. Send some absent friend a copy.

Rev. F. W. Betts will preach a sermon to young men at St. Paul's church next Sunday evening, his subject being "How can we improve the social life in our village?"

The annual meeting of Palmer Lodge, I. O. O. F., will be held this evening, when a new board of officers will be elected and other important business brought up for consideration.

An old subscriber, in wishing the Journal many happy returns of the season, writes: "For more than 30 years now the paper has been in our family, and I have no desire to lose what has been to me a friend and instructor since childhood."

The Patterson club met with Mrs. L. M. Goddard Wednesday evening. They voted to give the New York Daily Graphic to the reading room for the coming year, and also to assess lady members five cents and gentlemen members ten cents at each meeting.

Burglars made an unsuccessful attempt Monday night to enter the fancy goods and millinery store of Reed & Hearn by breaking a light of glass in one of the rear windows, but as no articles are missed from the stock it is supposed that the intruders were frightened away before accomplishing their purpose.

Good Cheer Lodge, Daughters of Rebekah, has made choice of the following officers: N. G., Mrs. Ellen M. Holden; V. G., Mrs. Josephine M. Hager; S., Miss May E. Robinson; T., Mrs. Nellie Henry; trustees, Mrs. Eliza J. Kenerson, Mrs. S. J. McQuade, Mrs. Elsie A. Caryl. Other officers are to be appointed.

Over 200 tickets have been sold for the Wigwam's course of entertainments, and there are many good seats left. The course is as follows: Jan. 8, the Hayden Male Quartette of Boston; Jan. 25, Col. Russell H. Conwell, "A Quarter of a Century"; Feb. 1, Robert Nourse, "John and Jonathan"; Feb. 15, Prof. Hibbard, reader.

A choral society is to be formed in the village, and all who are interested in such a society are requested to meet at St. Paul's church next Friday evening. M. E. Howard has consented to act as leader. The plan is to give a cantata or something of that description later in the season for the benefit of some public institution or fund.

In laying in a large stock of goods for the holidays the local merchants evidently expected a large trade, and they certainly were not disappointed. The holiday trade has been good this year, much larger than for some years past, the tendency having been to purchase less costly articles than heretofore, but more of them, especially of a useful character.

At the annual meeting of L. L. Merrick Post, G. A. R., Wednesday evening, these officers were elected: E. A. Kirk, C.; G. O. Henry, S. V. C.; C. P. Stone, J. V. C.; C. W. Cross, Adj.; H. H. Paine, Q.; Dr. William Holbrook, surgeon; H. E. W. Clark, chaplain; A. J. Bixby, O. D.; S. S. Nichols, O. G.; J. V. Clark, S. M.; Wm. Kurtz, Q. S.

The highway near Hasting's bridge on the road to Springfield was overflowed during the high water of last week and rendered impassible for a few days. Possibly in time the town will conclude that it is cheaper to raise the grade of the road once for all than to fill it part way up several times a year, only to have it washed out with the next high water.

Several of the saloons in this place were open Christmas day. Although the law does not say they shall be closed on that day, it does say that no liquors shall be dealt out, sold or given away. While it is possible that the proprietors lived up to the law, still the appearance of numerous persons on the street was such as to make it most unjust to suspect them of having done so.

The dancing school at the Weeks House hall closed a most successful term this afternoon, and the pupils who have attended regularly have benefited much thereby. Miss E. S. Gould, the dancing mistress, will probably form another class here next winter, as there are many who wish to complete their knowledge of the art. The reception will probably be held next Friday evening.

The sparring match which took place in the Brunswick Billiard Parlors Tuesday night was a fine exhibition of the "manly art," and as it was a novelty for this section it proved quite interesting to all. The match was between Dorsey of Worcester and Rouchette of Canada, two middleweights, who sparred five rounds under Queensberry rules. Dorsey was considered by many as the superior man.

The programme for the celebration of the 10th anniversary of the organization of the Young Men's Library Association is nearly perfected, and the event promises to be of considerable importance. Lawyer S. S. Taft has been engaged to deliver the principal address, while W. C. Greene will give a historical sketch of the organization and tell of the good it has done during its existence. The celebration will take place February 8, and the exercises will probably be held in St. Paul's Universalist church.

It is an extremely old saying that

"A green Christmas maketh a fat graveyard,"

And there is probably as much truth in this as in the thousand and one others of a similiar nature. But the "oldest inhabitant" is obliged to ransack his memory pretty sharply before he can recall a time when the weather at Christmas was similar to that we have had this week. Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday were warm and balmy as the first days of spring, furnace fires were almost superfluous, and winter clothing was a burden. It certainly is a novelty to have May weather at Christmas, that season of the year with which is always associated snow, icicles and sleigh-rides. One man remarks that we have had more continuous pleasant weather this week than at any other time since the March blizzard, and he is not so very far out of the way.

Honor for a Palmer Boy.

Judge L. W. Collins, a former resident of Palmer, and whose mother, Mrs. A. C. Collins, is still a resident of this place, was elected associate chief justice of the supreme court of Minnesota at the recent election, the official count, just completed, giving him the largest plurality of any candidate for any office in the state, 46,848, with a majority of 46,203.

Personal.

F. T. Leach of Springfield was in town Tuesday.

Mrs. L. M. Shaw has returned from a stay at the Hub.

Miss Katie E. Hearn spent Christmas at Woonsocket, R. I.

George Holden has been home from Amherst this week.

J. W. Weeks, Jr., returned Monday from a stay at New York.

Dr. Morris Sullivan of Southington, Ct., was in town this week.

D. W. Northrop of Boston spent Christmas with his parents in this place.

Mrs. E. W. Plumley of Spencer was the guest of Miss Hattie Plumley Wednesday.

L. B. Fish and wife of South Hadley Falls spent Christmas with Charles E. Fish.

Miss Eva Kenerson of Boston has been spending her holiday vacation with her parents here.

The marriage of Miss Anna Hunt of Pine street and A. E. Barlow of Chicopee will take place next Tuesday.

W. H. Hellyar of Boston, E. G. Drake and Charles Hitchcock of Warren were guests of James F. Fenton at the Converse House Tuesday.

Miss Stanwood, assistant teacher in the high school, who has been spending the holiday vacation at Brunswick, Me., will return to-morrow night.

The Observance of Christmas.

It would be useless to attempt to count the stockings hung up in this place on Christmas eve, but there were doubtless several hundred of them, and as usual Santa Claus most generously remembered the owners. There were many private gatherings, made bright by the happy faces of children and the flame of Christmas-tree candles, and a feeling of peace and joy seemed to be everywhere present. The churches all had their entertainment for the Sunday-school Monday evening. At the Baptist church there was an entertainment and tree, at the Universalist church there was a Christmas tree and a supper, and at the Congregational church a supper and entertainment. The evening was devoted exclusively to the children, and they enjoyed themselves as only children can.

Christmas was a very pleasant day for the children at the state primary school, and through the kindness of friends in Palmer they were furnished with oysters for breakfast, and had the usual dinner of roast turkey and vegetables. The Christmas tree had its place during the day, and in the morning was filled with presents for the small children. The larger children received their presents from the tree during the afternoon, and every child had at least two presents, and parents and relatives of the children sent many Christmas boxes. The boys were very busy on the play grounds during the day, in playing foot ball and other games.

Fire District Meeting.

A special meeting of the fire district is called at the court house for next Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock, and will probably be a somewhat stormy one. In regard to extending the pipes of the Palmer Water Company to Tenneyville and the wire mill, by the terms of the contract with the district it is obliged, after 40 hydrants are put in, to lay pipes to any point demanded within the district, provided a hydrant is put in at each 550 feet. The proposed extensions would necessitate some ten or a dozen new hydrants at $20 each per year. In the matter of electric lights the company will probably offer to run the lights as at present, every dark hour between noon and midnight, for $80 per light per year, or $2000 for the 25 lights now in position. If they were to run all night the cost would probably be $125 per light, or $3125, which is probably more than the district will feel like paying. Some of the property-owners at Tenneyville and other remote parts of the district refuse to pay the district tax, as they claim they are so far away they get none of its benefits, and an effort is to be made to compel them to pay. The steamer company is short handed and asks for three more men, though the appropriation will probably not have to be overdrawn to pay them. The chief engineer will ask for about $60, with which to purchase 250 feet of inch-and-a-half hose, which he proposes to place on a small reel on the wall in the recessed front of C. D. Holbrook's meal store. The hose will be accompanied by a hydrant wrench, nozzle, etc., the idea being that in case of a fire in any of the business places one man could easily unreel the hose and make connections with the hydrant, and do a great deal toward checking the fire until help and the larger apparatus arrived. It will not be locked up, and will be easy of access at all times. According to the laws of the state the district must provide itself with life-saving apparatus, and money will be asked for this purpose.

Progress of the Walking Match.

There has been a good nightly attendance at the six days' walking match at the Brunswick Billiard Parlors, and considerable interest has been manifested. Good order has been maintained, and the success of the affair is largely due to this fact. The pedestrians have walked three hours each evening, and the one who covers the greatest number of miles by 11 o'clock to-morrow night will be declared winner of the $60 purse and the championship of western Massachusetts. There were eight starters Monday night, but Flannery of Warren retired from the track after scoring 11 miles and 21 laps because he was not allowed another lap which he claimed, while Fiske of Springfield unfortunately met with an accident to his hip while turning a corner and was obliged to leave the track, his score standing one mile and 24 laps. The contest between Cole and Malone was a hot one, and the close of the first evening Cole managed to lead his nearest competitor by about six laps, but on Wednesday evening was obliged to retire from the track to receive treatment for a lame knee, and in the meantime Malone gained one mile and 12 laps on him. Cole resumed walking after ten minutes rest and gained 12 laps, making them just one mile apart. Cole only lead by four laps Tuesday evening, Malone having gained two by dilligent work and occasional spurting. Mason, who was behind Cunningham the first night, gained four miles and 15 laps on him the following night, and is now leading him 8 miles and 8 laps. St. John and Sweet became exhausted the second night and retired from the track after securing 30 miles and 18 laps and 31 miles and 11 laps respectively. Last night's walking left the situation unchanged, for Malone and Cole keep one mile apart, but the later is confident of second place, and thinks there is a possible chance of gaining several laps on Malone to-night. Mason, who stood 5 miles and 5 laps behind Cole Wednesday evening, fell back 1 mile and 7 laps last night, and Cunningham also lost 2 miles and 3 laps on Mason, but declares he will make him hustle for third place. Malone and Cole, who have now walked 97 and 96 miles respectively, within 12 hours, have already beaten the record made at Worcester, which was 89 miles in the same length of time. The score now stands:

| | M | L |
|---|---|---|
| Malone | 97 | 14 |
| Cole | 96 | 14 |
| Mason | 90 | 02 |
| Cunningham | 82 | 10 |

The referees have been M. W. Manning and T. F. Hopkins of Springfield, John E. Miller and James Lynch of Palmer.

THREE RIVERS.

The theme for next Sabbath at the Baptist church will be "Christmas and its lessons," and in the evening a review of the year.

The annual Christmas tree at the Baptist church Christmas eve was the occasion of drawing a crowded house. The trees were loaded with presents, besides several tables being well filled. Mr. E. Tenney, superintendent of the Sunday-school, presided. Prayer was offered by the pastor, followed by recitations and singing, all of which were well rendered. It was apparent that the sun of cheerfulness had risen on every countenance and remained undimmed throughout the evening. The pastor's family was kindly remembered and received a substantial Christmas present, which was fully appreciated..

LUDLOW CENTER.

The Congregational church holds its annual meeting next Thursday. A dinner will be served at noon, and all absent members are invited.

Rev. Mr. Cushing of Wilbraham gave an interesting lecture with the aid of a stereopticon last week Wednesday evening in the Methodist church. His subject was "A trip to the New West."

The Congregational society had an entertainment Friday evening, consisting of readings by Miss Susie Smith of the Hub Bureau, Boston. This is the second time Miss Smith has read in Ludlow, and her excellent reputation in the eastern part of the state promises to extend through New England if she continues to improve in her chosen art as she thus far seems to have done. Some fine singing was rendered by a male quartette led by Wilbur F. Miller, and a chicken pie supper finished out one of the best entertainments had for a long time.

BRIMFIELD.

Dogs have made a raid on the sheep of Josiah Stebbins, killing some valuable ones.

Henry F. Brown and family are spending the holidays with Mr. Brown's son, Frank H. Brown, of Port Chester, N. Y.

A pleasant social gathering at Josiah Stebbins brought together about 70 people last Tuesday evening, in honor of Mr. Stebbins daughter Nellie, who is home for the holidays.

The Christmas festivals of the First and Second churches were well attended. The First church presented a very pleasing entertainment consisting of music, tableaux, recitations, etc., following which a bountiful supper was given. The tree was well laden with presents for the little folks. The hall of the Second church was beautifully decorated with green. The booth and platform decorations were unusually artistic in design. The long tables were well spread, and furnished supper for about 250 people.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

Willis Cutler and Howard Gates spent Christmas with E. H. Cutler in Brooklyn.

The Sunday-school had its usual pleasant time with its Christmas tree Tuesday evening.

The Christian Endeavor society has engaged Rev. Dr. Burnham of Springfield to deliver his lecture on "Habit" for them next Friday evening.

School district No. 5, on the mountains, is to have its annual New Year's tree next Tuesday evening, and they say it will "lay out" any former attempts of the kind.

Christmas was very generally and quietly observed. The Catholics had mass at nine o'clock. The grist mill and the paper mill, all but the manufacturing department, shut down all day, and the market and stores closed at noon.

Mr. Dudley's lecture last Friday night was an interesting description of some of the most noteworthy parts of Scotland, and was illustrated by nearly one hundred fine views. The lecture will be repeated at Ludlow Mills next Wednesday evening.

WILBRAHAM.

Mrs. Nelson Mowry is spending the holidays in New York city.

Prof. L. Hodgkins of Wellesley College is the guest of Dr. G. M. Steele.

Miss N. Seaver of Boston University is the guest of Miss Fannie Merrick.

The students of the Academy held an interview in Fisk Hall Christmas eve.

O. F. Benedict fell from a staging Christmas day and severely injured his spine.

Robert and Eugene Bliss of Providence, R. I., are spending a few days at their mother's residence.

The funeral of Samuel D. Cooley, an old and respected citizen of the town, took place at his late residence yesterday afternoon.

Dr. William Warren, president of Boston University, and his family, are spending the holidays with Mrs. Warren's father, J. M. Merrick.

Miss Mary E. Howard, a pupil at the New England Conservatory of Music, Boston, and Edwin C. Howard, a student in Madison University, are home for the holidays.

WALES.

A. C. Freeman has built a new driveway at his house.

Mrs. Kline's boarding-house is very popular, being filled to its utmost capacity.

H. A. McFarland found his fine 2-years-old Holstein heifer choked to death in the barn Wednesday morning.

Mrs. Laura Rogers, who has been confined to her room for six weeks, is getting better and will be out again soon.

Miss Carrie Eager has gone to Stafford for a few weeks, leaving her boarding-house in charge of Miss Annie Tobin.

The operatives of the Hegan and Dell mills called on Mr. and Mrs. Deverell Wednesday morning and presented them with an $85 silver tea service, as a token of their kindly feeling for Mr. Deverell, while working under him as superintendent.

The Christmas gathering at the Baptist church Tuesday evening was attended by about 500 people. Two large trees were loaded with presents, numbering nearly 700, many of which were very nice. Rev. H. H. Manser was presented with a gold watch, as was also Anna Buckley, while Eugene Cook and Willie Lucy received silver Swiss watches. There was jewelry of all kinds, and several nice chairs. There were recitations and singing, and all enjoyed a good time.

BONDSVILLE.

Each overseer in the employ of the Boston Duck Co. was presented with a pair of 8-pound blankets, made in the mill, by Agent Smith for Christmas.

The Y. P. S. C. E. will have an avoirdupois sociable next Wednesday evening. An admission fee of one pound will be charged, and the supper will be served at the rate of one cent for each ten pounds of the partaker's weight.

Luther Collis has resided in this village over 50 years, and on Christmas day the children surprised him and his wife with the present of two easy chairs, some silverware and other articles. Neighbors and old residents were invited, and about fifty sat down to dinner. After dinner a poem was read by a daughter, Martha Collis of Monson, remarks were made by Jesse Morse, T. D. Potter and Rev. Mr. Virgin, some pieces were spoken by the children, prayer was offered by Rev. Mr. Emerson of Monson, and after singing "The Sweet Bye and Bye," the company adjourned, having spent a very enjoyable day.

A very pleasant entertainment was given Christmas eve in the Methodist church vestry. The "Message of Christmas," a cantata, was given, the characters of which were as follows:

|---|---|
| Santa Claus | Dr. Smith |
| Storm Herald | F. A. Packard |
| Jack Frost | Oren Smith |
| Winter | Mrs. Wm. Watson |
| Bob Bluster | Alin Parent |
| Sally Slovin | Ora Parent |
| Alice Gray | Maggie Bruce |
| Blanche and Louise | Vina Packard and Jessie Whitney |
| Kate and Willie | Eddie Virgin and Lena Canterbury. Chorus of boys and girls |

Presents from two well-filled Christmas trees were then distributed to the interested audience. Some of the best products of the Boston Duck Company were presented where they will be appreciated in the homes of the village. A well-filled envelope was given to the pastor, Rev. Mr. Virgin, and his wife, who had also been remembered with a Christmas turkey.

HAMPDEN.

Mr. Edson, of the state board of education, visited the schools of the town last week, and spoke one evening in the vestry of the Congregational church to a small audience. He did not name his lecture, but gave sound advice to parents and teachers, and which, if followed, would make our public schools a success. He invited all interested in education to meet him the following afternoon at the Center school-house. The junior committee and teachers, with three others, were all that accepted the invitation, but they were well repaid by his practical hints and suggestions in regard to modern methods of teaching. He criticised our schools and their surroundings, and suggested remedies, doing it all so pleasantly that none could take offence. It is hoped that his next visit may be made known in advance, so all can have a chance to hear him, also that our committee will take interest enough to be present.

Monday night Calista Stanton, deaf and living alone at the east end of the village, discovered a man prowling around her house. Her first thought was some one was bringing her a Christmas present, but soon discovered he was trying to effect an entrance, which he succeeded in doing by bursting in the door, when Miss S. escaped by another, and, in her fright, without bonnet or shawl, went to her sister's a half a mile away. Her brother-in-law, with Constable Whitaker, visited her house, and found a man, under the influence of rum, on a lounge in a back room, from which he was speedily transferred to the care of N. V. Chaffee, to be taken to Springfield to answer to the charge of breaking and entering, and as there have been two or three such cases it is hoped that this one will be punished. The next night, at the house next Miss Stanton's, occupied only by women, the inmates were disturbed by noises outside and long-continued rapping on the door, and if our town officers will do nothing to suppress the sale of rum it is time that women perfected themselves in revolver practice. Men are staggering about the streets in the daytime, a sad comment on the morals of the town.

WARREN.

Otis Sanford, an old resident of Warren, died last Saturday.

The invitations for the marriage of Miss Mabel Patrick and Mr. de Laval are out, the wedding to take place at the Congregational church New Year's day at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

The funeral of Henry Hitchcock took place from the Methodist church last Sunday, Rev. Mr. Mears and Rev. D. O. Clark officiating. His fellow-workmen showed their respect for him by contributing a beautiful floral offering.

The most brilliant social event of the season was the wedding and reception, Thursday evening, of Mr. Frank Webber of Holyoke and Miss Ida Sibley, one of Warren's most popular young ladies. The wedding was in the Congregational church at 6 p. m. The room was handsomely trimmed with Christmas greens and potted plants, and Prof. Hammond of Holyoke presided at the organ. The ceremony was performed by Rev. D. O. Clark, assisted by Rev. Jesse Forbes of New York. After the wedding a reception was held at the home of the bride's sister, Mrs. Gilbert, on Elm street, which was attended by the younger portion of the guests.

THORNDIKE.

Eugene Gariphy, whose hand was caught in the machinery at the No. 2 mill last week, will not lose his fingers as was first stated.

Patrick Shea, who died Saturday after an illness of several months, was buried Monday afternoon. The funeral was largely attended.

The rink was open Monday night and Tuesday afternoon and evening, with an exhibition by a contortionist. The Ware band furnished music.

The Emmet Club extend an invitation to clubs in the surrounding towns to call at their club rooms in Lawton's building whenever they are in town.

The Young People's Dramatic Club will be seen in the "Country Girl," a comedy drama in 5 acts, at Union Hall next Monday night. A social dance will follow.

John Cummings, while skating at the rink on Christmas night, fell and sprained his wrist. Dr. Flynn attended the patient and he is doing as well as can be expected.

James Staples, overseer of the No. 1 dressing-room, was presented with a handsome easy chair one evening last week, which goes to show how well the help think of him.

Peter Furkey, a young man employed in the machine shop of the Thorndike Co.; died Sunday morning, having been sick but a few days. He was engaged to be married on New Year's, and the lady he was to marry died about a week ago.

The Emmet club, at a recent meeting elected these officers: President, J. McNally; vice president, James Sullivan; secretary, Wm. Lyons; treasurer, John Dallihan; sergeant-at-arms, E. Sheridan. The club will hold the first of a series of dances at Lawton's Hall in a few weeks.

Christmas day being a very pleasant one, a large number attended the services at the Catholic church, where a special musical programme was rendered by the choir. The altar was tastefully decorated with evergreens, potted plants, etc. The young ladies of the altar society deserve much credit for their work.

MONSON.

A very quiet Christmas.

The Academy begins again Monday.

James Murphy was in town Christmas.

Fred King of Boston was at home this week.

R. Clifford Miller is clerking at Williams's grocery store.

Rodney Bradway has been granted an increase of pension.

Harry A. Merchant of Troy, N. Y., is at home for a few days.

Charles Webber has gone to Medfield to work in a straw shop.

F. M. King has accepted a position in a straw shop in Westboro.

Mrs. L. A. Abbey of Westboro was visiting friends here Monday.

Edward Morris of Amherst college is at home during the holidays.

F. D. Beach and wife have left town, going to West Springfield.

Robert Cushman of Amherst college is at home during the holidays.

H. A. Felton spent a few days visiting friends in Enfield this week.

The abutments of the bridge near Reynolds's mill are being repaired.

F. E. Williams has begun his duties as drummer for a Springfield firm.

The place begins to look deserted, now all the straw shop help has left town.

All the stores closed at 11 o'clock on Tuesday, and the factories the entire day.

Leonard Rathburn, of Broadhurst's shoe store at Springfield, was at home on Christmas.

John Hern of the Boston and Norwich Clothing Company, is at home during the holidays.

The walking match at Palmer has drawn the attention of several from this place this week.

Miss May Messenger of Middlefield is the guest of her sister, Mrs. D. B. Needham, this week.

The merchants report the trade for the holidays as being but a little over one-half as good as last season.

Rev. J. H. Holden of Amherst will occupy the pulpit of the Universalist church Sunday, in exchange with Rev. I. A. Priest.

There will be a religious service in the Pease district school house Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock, conducted by Rev. Mr. Emerson.

B. A. Day, for many years overseer in the blocking room at Fay, Peck & Co's. straw shop, has accepted a position in Westboro.

The Christian Endeavor society of the Methodist church will conduct a service in the Gage district school-house Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

The highways are being put in condition this week, though some of the out districts are in very bad shape, and cannot well be repaired before spring.

The rumor that D. W. Ellis & Son had bought the North Monson mill property is wholly without foundation, and the firm state they have no use for it.

Rev. J. H. Emerson, pastor of the Methodist church, was the recipient of a handsome set of commentaries on the Bible on Christmas, from the members of his parish.

H. A. Felton, overseer in the weave room at Cushman's mill, was handsomely remembered by the employes in his room on Christmas, who presented him with a handsome gold watch.

The report that H. J. Lariviere is to sell out his store is without foundation. He went to Boston last night to purchase goods, and will soon have some unusually good bargains to offer.

The sociable at the Academy last Friday evening was a very pleasant one. The essay of James H. Tufts, with which he captured the $300 prize at Yale, was a rare treat, and called forth the loudest praise.

A woman attempted to board the train at the New London Northern depot Tuesday evening, while it was moving at a good rate of speed, and but for the presence of mind of the assistant station agent, who held her back, she would undoubtedly have been seriously injured or perhaps killed.

Daniel Holt died very suddenly of heart disease at his home on Sunday morning. He arose apparently as well as usual, but shortly afterwards complained of a slight pain around the heart and died instantly. The funeral was held at the house Wednesday afternoon, and was conducted by Rev. I. A. Priest.

The regular meeting of Marcus Keep Post, G. A. R., was held last Friday evening, and these officers elected: Commander, A. A. Gage; senior vice commander, H. H. Wood; junior vice commander, Martin Hawley; chaplain, W. J. Ricketts; officer of the day, Amos Hobbs; officer of the guard, August Buscher; surgeon, Dr. G. E. Fuller; quartermaster, Harlow Chapin.

Christmas Services.

Christmas services were held in all the churches on Sunday, and unusually fine Christmas music was rendered by the choirs, especially at the Congregational and St. Patrick's church.

At the Congregational church the decorations were very neat. The pastor, Rev. F. S. Hatch, preached a sermon appropriate to the day. The Christmas concert by the Sunday-school in the evening was a special feature, and was carried out in a creditable manner.

At St. Patrick's church the decorations were the handsomest of any of the churches, and the services were all very largely attended. There was a mass at 5.30 a. m., and Leonard's new high mass at 9 a. m. by the choir, which was a special feature, the singing being very fine. The Sunday-school had a Christmas tree at the church Monday evening.

At the Methodist church there were no decorations. The pastor, Rev. J. H. Emerson preached from John 19:5—"Behold the Man." The Christmas concert by the Sunday-school in the evening was one of the best ever given and was largely attended. The Christmas tree was held in the church Monday evening, and the vestry was well filled.

At the Universalist church on Sunday the audience room was very prettily decorated for the occasion, and the words "In His Name" was the motto of the Sunday-school and a feature of the decorations. The pastor, Rev. Mr. Priest, preached from Acts 3:6, "Silver and gold have I none, but such as I have give I thee." The Sunday school concert in the evening was much enjoyed, and both services were well attended. The Christmas tree for the Sunday-school was held at the residence of Harlow Chapin Tuesday evening, and every one of the younger ones received a present from W. L. Rood, who personated St. Nicholas. Refreshments in abundance were served, and all seemed to enjoy the evening.

WARE AND VICINITY.

Mumps are prevalent in town.

Eddie W. Sturtevant fell while skating last Friday evening and broke his wrist.

Rev. B. V. Stevenson was 73 years old Christmas, and appeared as boyish as ever.

Tuesday was the finest Christmas day that is remembered for more than 25 years.

It is not much of an improvement to sprinkle the sidewalk for sweeping and let it freeze on.

The annual Christmas donation at St. Williams's church for Rev. James Boyle amounted to about $900.

C. W. Eddy was at Fitchburg Christmas, and gave a stereopticon entertainment to the Sunday-school of the C. C. church.

Rev. Thomas A. Dorion left here for Canada Saturday night, having received news of the death of his father. Thomas Kennedy preached for him at the church on Sunday.

The closing exercises at the high school Friday were largely attended by relatives and friends of the pupils. The prize for the best speaking was given to Miss Bertha Lovell, who recited "The Angel of Buena Vista."

Rev. B. W. Pennock will preach a New Year's sermon at the Unitarian church next Sunday morning. Subject, "The Completeness in Life." Text, Eph. 4:13, "The measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ."

Mr. and Mrs. Lowe enjoyed their Christmas over a new-born son, which came to them Christmas day. Mrs. Lowe was well known here formerly as Miss Ida M. Bond, a graduate of the Ware high school, class of '81, and later as one of the teachers in town.

The Ware Center people are in great need of money to make repairs on their church. The pastor, Rev. E. S. Huntress, has offered to give his lecture on "Working and Shirking," provided a good number of tickets are sold. It is a topic in which all are interested. Let the village people take hold and help.

There will be a town meeting to-morrow afternoon to see if the town will appropriate $700 for school incidentals; to see if the town will appropriate money for police, evening schools and street lights; $175 for land damage; money for highways and $100 to pay Thomas O'Sullivan; and see if the town will accept the highway as laid out on the north side of Pleasant street.

The local branch of the Iron Hall is in a flourishing condition, having thirty-five members, while several more are expected. These are the names of the new officers for the year: C. J., Jerry Linson; P. C. J., E. N. Lyman; V. J., Henry Mongrain; P., W. A. DeMerritt; A., E. H. Guild; C., M. L. Lane; H., H. Halstead; A., L. D. Hinckley; W., Louis Chabineau; V., Albert Laungilier; trustees, William Harris, E. P. Lyman, F. L. Bassett; medical examiner, Dr. E. H. Guild.

Burglars entered the house of Thomas Kennedy Sunday evening, when all the family were at church, and took a sum of money and a silver watch and gold chain, altogether worth about $75. The person or persons seemed to be well acquainted with the premises. It was first attempted to force the door open with a chisel, then a window was opened and an entry made, and the person going directly to where the keys were kept, unlocked the drawer and took the money. Wednesday Albert Largesse and Fred Abbott were arrested on a charge of being connected with the affair, and were bailed out on Thursday morning on $300 bonds each, to appear at the district court to-day. Another, who is supected of being associated with them, has left town.

At the regular meeting of the Ware Center Grange last Friday evening these officers were elected: M., Frank W. Harwood; O., N. J. Trench; secretary, Minnie Perkins; L., C. O. Buffington; steward, J. H. Fletcher; A. S., Wheeler Barney; C., J. W. Cummings; T., F. Fisherdick; G., George Lamberton; Pomona, Mrs. N. J. Trench; Flora, Mrs. Jaqueth; Ceres, Mrs. George Lamberton; auditing committee, Daniel Sandford, A. S. Jaqueth, William H. Perkins.

The Daily Paper You Want.

The largest circulation in New England has been accorded to the Boston Daily Globe because of its merits as a newspaper. It meets the wants and tastes of every member of the family, particularly the ladies and young folks.

In addition to all the news the Daily Globe prints a dozen or more of continued stories during the year, which practically gives the ladies and young folks that number of books, which are worth more than the price of the paper.

By general request some of the great stories of eminent writers will be added to the new ones by the present leading novelists. On Saturday of this week Charles Reade's "Foul Play" will be begun in the Daily Globe. This paper is only $6 per annum, or 50 cents per month by mail or newsdealer.

When Bridget Went.

When Bridget went
The windows gazed at me with unwashed panes,
The shutters laughed to show their dirty stains,
The beds stood all unmade, the rooms unswept,
The work to do appalled me, and I wept
When Bridget went.

When Bridget went
I thought how sweet to hear again that brogue
That in green Erin is so much in vogue,
I longed to cast my gaze upon her face,
I struggled hard to find one for her place
When Bridget went.

When Bridget went
Each night I sought my rest with tired heart,
For I was not the mistress of her art
Of cleaning house. Ah, me! I did not know
How awful sick and tired of life I'd grow
When Bridget went.

I've got to have a necktie, a new hat, a pair of suspenders, a pair of buck-skin gloves, some socks, a plug of tobacco, and a jack knife, and that'll take all the money we can spare." "Can't I get one pair?" "Well, mebbe, but you had better look for cotton, and sumthin' at about twenty cents. We'll never git rich in the world if we don't keep expenses down."—Detroit Free Press.

A CRITICAL MOMENT.

I was talking a few weeks ago with a clergyman at the West who said he returned to his father's house in Boston, and his brother, a son in the family, came in intoxicated; and he said when the intoxicated son retired: "Mother, how do you stand this?"

"Oh," she said, "I have stood this a long while, but it does not worry me now. I found it was worrying me to death, and I put the whole case in God's hands, and said: 'O, God, I cannot endure this any longer; take care of my son, reform him, bless him, save him,' and there I left the whole thing with God, and I shall never worry again."

"The next day," said the clergyman, who was talking to me in regard to it, "I met my brother, and said: 'John, you are in an awful position.' 'How so,' said he. 'Why, mother told me she has left you with God; she doesn't pray for you any more.' 'Is that so? Well I can never contend with the Lord; I shall never drink again.'"

He never did drink again. He went to the far West: and at a banquet in St. Louis given to him, a lawyer just come to the city, there were many guests and there was much wine poured and they insisted that this reformed lawyer should take his glass of wine; and they insisted until it became a great embarrassment, as they said to him: 'Ah, you don't seem to have any regard for us, and you have no sympathy with our hilarities."

Then the man lifted the glass and said, 'Gentlemen, there was in Boston some years ago a man who, though he had a beautiful wife and two children, fell away from his integrity and went down into the ditch of drunkenness. He was reformed by the Grace of God and the prayers of his mother, and he stands before you to-night. I am that man. If I drink this glass I shall go back to my old habits and perish. I am not strong enough to endure it. Shall I drink it? If you say so, I will.'"

A man sitting next lifted a knife, and with one stroke broke off the bottom of the glass; and all the men at the table shouted, "Don't drink! don't drink!"

Oh! that man was a hero. He had been going through a battle year after year; that was a great crisis. What a struggle! There are a great many men in peril; and when you are hard in your criticism about man's inconsistency you do not know what a battle they have to fight—a battle compared with which Austerlitz and Gettysburg and Waterloo were child's play.—Friends' Review.

NO LEAP YEAR IN 1900.

Although the year 1900 will be divisible by four without a remainder, it will not be leap year. Twelve years must elapse before the interesting event takes place, but it was just the same in 1880 and 1700, but not in 1600, for that was a leap year also. Why this should be is a problem. To explain in detail would be a tiresome task, but it rests on a principle that a difference of 11 minutes per day exists between actual time and calender time. Thus a year is computed at 365¼ days, three years 365 days long and the fourth year 366 days. In fact the year is 365 days, five hours and 45 minutes long, or 11 minutes short of 365¼ days. The leap year every four years is said to have been an invention of Julius Cæsar's. To allow for this difference of 11 minutes per year, one leap year was dropped every hundred years. But this was found not to be exact, and Pope Gregory XIII in 1582 made an improvement and decreed that every centurial year divisible by four should be a leap year. Thus, by ommitting the leap year for three centurial years and letting it remain as usual on the fourth centurial year, a system is obtained so close that it would take thousands of years to make up another day's difference in time. The calendar time is still not exact mathematically, but as no change will be necessary for 4000 years, it will not fall to the share of the present generation to correct the discrepancy.—Raleigh News Observer.

ON BREATHING.

A boy 14 years old, recently imported from Kentucky, handed the following in as a composition on "breathing." The instruction was—"Tell all you can about the breathing." He said: "Breath is made of air. We breathe with our lungs, our lights, our liver and kidneys. If it wasn't for our breath we would die when we sleep. Our breath keeps the life agoing through the nose when we are asleep. Boys that stay in a room all day should not breathe. They should wait till they go out doors. Boys in a room make bad, unwholesome air. They make carbonicide. Carbonicide is poisoner than mad dogs. A heap of soldiers was in a black hole in India and a carbonicide got in that hole and killed nearly every one afore morning. Girls kills the breath with corosits that squeezes the diagram. Girls can't holler or run like boys because their diagram is squeezed too much. If I was a girl I'd ruther be a boy so I can holler and run and have a great big diagram."—The Golden Chain.

THE SECRET OF SUCCESS.

"What is the secret of your success?" asked the poet. "That's just it," replied the busy merchant; "there is no secret about it; I'm the biggest advertiser in the state. There's nothing secret about my business." And the poet made a note of it. But the very next man to whom he spoke about it happened to be his friend, the burglar, who scoffed at the idea. "Why," he said, "secrecy is the very soul of success in my business. Never advertise, whatever you do." And the poor poet went out and bought a three-months' commutation ticket for the lunatic asylum.—Burdette, in Brooklyn Eagle.

"Mrs. Hashem," said Billy Bliven at the dinner table, "I hope you will wear that handsome silk dress of yours down to dinner some evening soon. It's very becoming." "Oh, I'm afraid you won't see that dress again." "Why not?" "It's in the soup," said Mrs. Hashem, who rather prides herself on being posted as to novel forms of expression. "Ah!" said Billy innocently, "and do you find that silk dresses are more nutritious than shoe strings and pencil stubs? I should think it would make the cuisine more expensive."

Cauliflower seed are eight times as valuable by weight as silver. They sell at $8 an ounce.

TRUE ECONOMY.—It is true economy to buy Hood's Sarsaparilla, for 100 Doses for One Dollar," is original with and true only of this popular medicine. If you wish to prove this, buy a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla and measure its contents. You will find it to hold 100 teaspoonfuls. Now read the directions, and you will find that the average dose for persons of different ages is less than one teaspoonful. This is certainly conclusive and unanswerable evidence of the peculiar strength and economy of Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"I took Hood's Sarsaparilla for loss of appetite, dyspepsia, and general languor. It did me a vast amount of good, and I have no hesitancy in recommending it."—J. W. Willeford, Quincy, Ill.

"I have been troubled by scrofulous affection all my life. It is one of the marked recollections of my boyhood days, and for several years has rendered me unable to labor much. I think Hood's Sarsaparilla, which I have been using at intervals for ten years, is the best thing I have ever taken. I am now 60, and my general health seems better than ever.—H. D. CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER.

The Purest and Best.

Is made only of strictly pure grape cream of tartar, strictly pure bicarbonate of soda, and a small portion of flour as a preservative, nothing else whatever, and is warranted entirely free from alum, ammonia, phosphates, lime, and all other adulterations frequently found in baking powders. The character of materials used, their purity, and the nicety of their combination, render Cleveland's superior baking the most healthful and most economical in use, and it always affords wholesome, nutritious, and delicious food.

It is recommended for purity, healthfulness and efficiency by government and state chemists, chemists of boards of health, and professors in institutions of learning throughout the country.

Sold only in cans. Full weight.

CLEVELAND BROTHERS, Albany, N. Y.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.—HAMPDEN, SS. Dec. 20th, A. D. 1888.

By virtue of an execution which issued on a judgment recovered in the Superior Court at Springfield, within and for the county of Hampden on the first day of October, A. D. 1888, in favor of Ellen E. Broughton, of Stafford, Tolland county, and state of Connecticut, and against William Lewis, of Monson in our county of Hampden, I have this day taken all the right, title and interest that the said William Lewis has, including the right to redeem any of the said tracts of land hereinafter mentioned which may be subject to mortgage, to wit:

A certain tract of land with the buildings thereon, situate in Wales, in our county of Hampden, on the east side of the old road leading over the hill by the Central school house from Wales to Brimfield and bounded and described as follows, to wit: on the west by the above said road, on the south by land of Elijah and Jane M. Shaw, on the east by land of said Shaw and on the north by land of C. D. Brewer, containing one acre, more or less, and beingthe same premises deed to Wm. Lewis by Elijah and Jane M. Shaw and recorded in the Hampden County registry of deeds, book 394, page 202.

Also two other tracts of land situated in the south part of Monson, in said county of Hampden, containing about twenty-nine acres. The first tract described as follows, to wit: Beginning at the northwest corner of lot laid out to F. Moulton, on the southeast end of Cedar mountain, thence running southeast six rods to a small maple tree, thence north 37° E. twenty rods to a bunch of chestnuts, thence east 10° south eighteen rods to a stake and stones, thence north 22½° W. sixty rods to a large chestnut tree and stones, thence north 41° W. forty-four rods to Squiers Corner, thence south thirty-two rods to a heap of stones, thence south 27° W. fourteen rods to a small black oak tree and stones, thence south 19° W. fifty-eight rods to the first mentioned bound, containing fourteen acres, more or less, and being the same tract of land deeded from James Richards to M. L. Peck and Emory Smith and recorded in the registry of deeds for Hampden county, book 168, page 491. The second tract of land situated on the north end of Cedar Swamp mountain and described as follows, to wit: Beginning at the corner of land now or formerly of Solomon S. Peck, thence south 38° E. six rods, thence east 15° N. forty rods to the highway leading from said Peck's house to Underwood's, now or formerly, thence south 40° east twenty rods on the west side of said highway to a stake and stones, thence west 15° south forty rods to a black oak stump, thence west 41° S. sixty-nine rods, thence west 5° north sixteen rods to another corner of said Solomon S. Peck's land, thence to the first mentioned bound, containing fifteen acres, more or less, and being the same tract of land deeded from Icabod Tupper to M. L. Peck and Emory Smith and recorded in the Hampden registry of deeds, book 172, page 158. Also another tract of land with the buildings thereon, situated in said Monson and bounded and described as follows, to wit: Beginning at a stake and stones at the corner of Pearl and State streets, thence running westerly on the north line of State street nine rods to a stake and stones, thence northerly in a line parallel with the west line of Pearl street to a corner bound of land now or formerly of one Shepardson, thence easterly on said Shepardson's south line to said Pearl street, thence southerly on said Pearl street to the first mentioned bound and being the same conveyed by A. J. Northrop and Eugene Ferrell to said William Lewis, and recorded in the registry of deeds for Hampden county, book 416, page 239, and on Saturday, the twenty-sixth day of January next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, in front of the Court House in Palmer in said county, I shall offer for sale by public auction to the highest bidder said right, title and interest including the right to redeem any of said tracts which may be subject to mortgage to satisfy said execution and all fees and charges of sale.

H. A. NORTHROP, Deputy Sheriff.

FIRE DISTRICT MEETING.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.
HAMPDEN, SS.

To the qualified voters of Fire District No. 1 in Palmer:

You are hereby notified to meet at the Eastern Hampden District Court room, in said Palmer, on Monday, the thirty-first day of December, current, at two o'clock in the afternoon, to act on the following articles, viz:

ART. 1.—To choose a moderator to preside at said meeting.

IS MARRIAGE A FAILURE?

No; not if the home is what it should be; not if the requirements of the household are duly considered, not if the money is spent on fireside comforts where it is a permanent blessing. No one can enter a comfortably furnished house without thinking

Marriage is a Good Investment.

In this matter Calderwood & Burns are ready to do their part. Their Furniture stock was never so artistic, so suggestive of comfort, so economical in prices as this year.

The Dear Old Songs of Home.

Oh, wheel sublime of tireless time,
Turn backward in your flight,
Ring out the chime in fairy rhyme
Of boyhood's music bright!
Like bells of joy outringing,
Those memories old are clinging,
Now faint, now near, again I hear,
In accents clear where'er I roam,
My mother sweetly singing,
Singing, sweetly singing,
The dear old songs of home.

Make me a boy, with boyhood's joy,
As in the days of old,
When ruddy blaze before our gaze
Went up in sparks of gold,
I see the kettle swinging,
The shadows round it clinging,
Till once again in sweet refrain,
On land or main, where'er I roam,
I hear my mother singing,
Singing, sweetly singing,
The dear old songs of home.

At set of sun, when day was done,
Like silver-chiming bells,
Rose on the air, with evening prayer,
The song we loved so well,
Still in my ear they're ringing,
And memories old are bringing,
Like gentle shower of boyhood's hour,
With subtle power, where'er I roam,
Of mother sweetly singing,
Singing, sweetly singing,
The dear old songs of home.

No time can blot this fragrant spot,
This chime of silver bells;
But oft my heart, with sudden start,
The secret surely tells.
Then 'mid the glad bells ringing,
With holy thoughts upspringing,
Now faint, then clear again I hear,
In accents dear, where'er I roam,
My mother sweetly singing,
Singing, sweetly singing,
The dear old songs of home.

A FORTUNATE FAN.

The side door of the Academy of Design was accessible during the recent Pedestal Fund Loan exhibition on Monday morning preparatory to the opening. The policeman at the door narrowly scanned every one who entered or departed, and demanded name and card.

This official afterwards remembered that an exceedingly marked man entered, apparently with no bundle about him. He was very handsome, with black eyes and prematurely gray hair, which he wore long.

"Your name, sir," said the policeman, stopping him and eyeing him keenly.

"My name, eh!" said the stranger rather angrily, "eh! Col. Beauclerc."

At this moment a lady came down-stairs. She was well known to the policeman as one of the managers, and as she met the gentleman, she said cordially:

"O Col. Beauclerc, I am so happy to meet you! I am tired to death! Such a scene of confusion upstairs, and we open to-night! Would you carry back this fan for me, and give it to Miss Lomax? It is quite invaluable, belongs to Mrs. McElroy, and I hope it will be put in a choice place; but I have absolutely brought it down with me; how careless! It arrived too late to be judged and catalogued, but I am determined to get it in. Would you take it up for me?"

"Certainly, Miss Mirabeau; delighted! To whom shall I give it?" said the colonel, restored to the policeman's confidence.

"To Miss Lomax; and for worlds do not fail, for Mrs. McElroy is already dreadfully offended because some of her exhibits were refused a place. Indeed, I believe she and Mr. Smith have had some words, and she has loaned such beautiful things that I would not have her feelings hurt for the world."

"But I do not know Miss Lomax," said the handsome colonel, admiring the fine face before him, and thinking that a work-a-day rig was rather becoming to Miss Mirabeau.

"Oh, you will easily find Miss Lomax," said Miss Mirabeau; "any one will tell you." So she passed on, leaving Col. Beauclerc with fan in charge.

He ascended the stairs, and was met by a big dog at the door of an inner room. Ladies were standing at the glass cases arranging missals, others were busy hanging fans, others putting away priceless boxes, chatelaines, watches, jewelry of every age, from the mummy necklace down to the earrings of Eugenie. The artists were hanging pictures. Mrs. Wheeler was superintending the embroideries, and the miniatures from their places looked at him with their sentimental, last-century smiles. It was a confusing melange.

As soon as he found a lady who seemed to be responsible for the fans, he asked for Miss Lomax.

"Miss Lomax!" said she, "I think she has just gone in to see those famous swords of Mr. Brayton Ives. Would you go in? Perhaps we can find her."

"I think I would like to look at the fans," said he.

So he stopped and chatted over the "Vernis Martins," the Spanish fans, the carved bone, and admired Mrs. Astor's collection. Then he wandered off to examine the Jade, and finally rendered up to the lady in charge his own exhibit—a small but very beautiful piece of antique jewelry.

Then he felt in his pocket and discovered the fan, the little, long, black package, which he had been instructed to leave with Miss Lomax.

"But where was Miss Lomax?" She had become invisible. "Oh! there she is now!" said the lady with whom he had spoken; "that young lady with the 'ight hair."

And here the colonel's memory becomes hazy. He thinks now that he laid the fan down on the glass case while he went for Miss Lomax. He pursued that ignis fatuus through all the rooms. He found her in the picture gallery and told her the story of the fan.

"Oh, yes!" said she, "we have saved a place for that fan of Mrs. McElroy's. Do give it to me, for she is furious."

The colonel, suddenly frightened, felt for the fan, but could not find it in his pocket; then he remembered, or thought he remembered, that he left it on the glass case. He and Miss Lomax wandered back to the case, but the fan was gone. Just at that moment Mrs. Majoribanks came flitting by, pale and nervous.

"We have lost a lace fichu," said she, "worth ever so many thousand dollars! Oh, what shall I do!"

Miss Lomax looked at the colonel, and the colonel looked at Miss Lomax.

"Stolen! stolen!" said Miss Lomax hysterically.

An hour was passed in inquiries and in agitated search, complicated by the feverish whisper of Miss Lomax that the irate Mrs. McElroy was walking through the rooms and looking daggers at everybody."

"What if she should hear that we have lost her fan!" said two or three ladies surrounding the colonel, and amiably dividing the guilt with him. They were all ready to excuse him and blame Emily Mirabeau. She should not have asked him to take charge of the fan! and so on.

But the colonel assumed the responsibility at once.

"I alone am to blame," said he, "and if money can pay for that ac—I mean that Spanish fan—I will pay for it."

"But she said that $10,000 would not pay for that fan," said a member of the insurance committee who passed. "It is an heirloom."

The colonel groaned.

At this moment one of the exective committee passed and whispered caution. If there were a pickpocket in the building great care must be observed, and undoubtedly both the lace fichu and fan would be found.

So the colonel, in no enviable frame of mind, departed to meet Miss Mirabeau and to communicate to her the dreadful intelligence. To his surprise she was remarkably sweet, and bore her full share of the guilt.

"I had no right, colonel, to ask you to take charge of that valuable fan. It was not stolen from you, it was stolen from me," and she looked at him very kindly.

An electric telegraph shot through the colonel from head to heel.

"By Jove!" said he to himself, "a woman with a sense of justice, and a very pretty woman, too!"

But although they had a very agreeable half-hour bewailing their woes, Miss Mirabeau turned pale when she said:

"Who is to tell Mrs. McElroy?"

"We must wait a few days to see the result of Mr. Smith's search," said the colonel. "Then, if it is really irrevocably lost, I will pay for it, if I can."

"Oh, you can't!" said Miss Mirabeau. "It is an heirloom."

The colenel thought there were some looms on which nothing but despair was woven, but he looked at Miss Mirabeau.

"Let us take it calmly, and go to the opening to-night."

"Oh, no!" said the careless Emily, shivering; "I can never face Mrs. McElroy until I learn the very worst."

The lace fichu was found, but the fan was not, and the colonel and Emily walked about like two suspected murderers. Their visits to the exhibition were made furtively, and like undetected criminals they shunned Mrs. McElroy. Strangely enough that irate lady did not make any inquiries for her fan; and it was observed she did not come to the exhibition, all of which was ominous.

Nothing is more sweet than a mutual joy. Col. Beauclerc would never have found out how charming Emily Mirabeau could be had it not been for the anxious and mysterious secret which now bound them together. They grew intimate with policemen, employed detectives, and were to be seen together in pawn-shops. Wherever a stolen fan could go, there, together, did this handsome and unusual couple go. That fan must be found.

However, this was not the worst of it. The colonel came one day with a paper in his hand. His martial brow was clouded.

"Read that," said he to Miss Mirabeau, almost assuming an after-breakfast martial air. "Read that—Emily!"

She started—he had never called her "Emily" until this minute.

It was a low paper, one she had never seen before, still it was print, that was the terrible fact. The iron machinery of the patent printing press had caught up their trouble, and was to blazon it to an unsympathizing world. The paragraph read thus:

> Those conversant with a certain gay set in this city cannot have failed to hear that losses have occurred, quite unaccountably, in the most aristocratic circles, and, indeed, we fear that some of the deposits at the noted exposition have not all found their way to the glass cases. A striking-looking individual, with prematurely gray hair and certain so-called beauty, a great favorite with the ladies, and the possesser of a foreign name and title, is more than suspected of being little better than a thief."

"Oh, dear," said poor Emily, quite crushed, "so we have got to that!"

"'Dear,' did you say?" asked the colonel, "and 'we?'" and he looked volumes.

"At any rate," said she, "I can prove your innocence. Let me write to this paper and tell the whole story," and she moved toward her desk.

"No," said he, "that would delight them too much; that would be putting on the cap."

The great exposition came to an end, and everything was sent safely home to its owner. Not a loss of any kind occurred, excepting that of Mrs. McElroy's fan. The colonel had spent no end of money to find it, but the thief remained concealed. Both he and Emily had lost flesh and color, but their faces looked as if they had found something else of greater value.

They sat, hand in hand, and eye to eye, in Mrs. Majoribanks's parlor. Mrs. Majoribanks was their mutual friend, and the repository of their two secrets.

"I have found a wife, if I have lost a fan," said the colonel, tenderly looking down at Emily. Just then Miss Lomax was announced.

"Ah, well," said she, "we are through with the great work—aren't you glad, Mrs. Majoribanks? How do you do, Emily? Good morning, colonel. Why, how happy you all look!"

Mrs. Majoribanks told her of the engagement, and congratulations followed freely.

"But," said Emily, "we shall not announce it until that dreadful fan is found."

"Fan found!" said Miss Lomax, "why it is found. I saw Mrs. McElroy at the party last evening, and she had it in her hand."

"What? Where? How?" said the colonel and Emily and Mrs. Majoribanks, all in a breath.

"I don't know," said Miss Lomax, who had evidently not been in the least excited or moved by the loss of Mrs. McElroy's fan, which had so agitated these two people; "I only know she had it, and was telling the usual story about its being an heirloom, and the disquisition which followed about Watteau, and the Spanish sschool, don't you remember? and she said, showing it to Count de Fois, 'Just to think—this fan was not considered good enough to be exhibited!'"

Now Emily and the colonel were in a new dilemma. Had Mrs. McElroy advertised for her fan, and had she recovered it through the police? If so, they were still guilty, and ought to find out what reward she had paid, and what expenses she had incurred, for which they, the careless and now happy couple, were undoubtedly responsible. The colonel breathed freer and deeper as he reflected that he had not to pay the $10,000. Mrs. Majoribanks promised to make a diplomatic visit, to ascertain, if possible, how Mrs. McElroy recovered the fan.

It was fortunate for all parties that this lady liked to talk, and that she told her story without much cross-questioning.

"Yes," said she, "yes, you were very successful. I did not think you took very good care of your things, though, on that first Monday. Why, I came along and saw my fan lying on top of a glass case, just as I had given it to Emily Mirabeau, the careless thing, and I put it in my pocket and carried it home—as I have heard that a man, and I suppose a woman, has a right to her own property wherever she finds it. Although I had loaned it to the exposition, if they did not take better care of it than that, why—well, I have nothing to say. Nobody ever inquired for the fan afterwards, so nobody missed it, I suppose."

"So long as the fan got back to you all right, my dear Mrs. McElroy," said the diplomat, "only the exposition is a loser. I consider it a very fortunate fan."

NICKNAMES OF STATESMEN.

"St. Jerome" is Senator Edmunds's nickname.

John Sherman is known as "Honest John Sherman."

Massachusetts boasts of "Grandfather" Hoar and "Grandmother" Dawes.

Senator Voorhees of Indiana is known as the "Tall Sycamore of the Wabash."

"Uncle Dick" will be recognized by every Illinoisan as meaning Governor Oglesby.

"Our Own Evarts" is the affectionate way in which New Yorkers refer to their senior senator.

"Coal Oil Payne" will be recognized as beirg quite an appropriate name for the Ohio senator.

When Belford of Colorado was in the Senate he was known as the "Red-headed Rooster of the Rockies."

Utica had a congressman who was known as "Go and Finish Your Ticket" Spriggs, or Spriggs of Utica.

Weller of Iowa got the name of "Calamity" Weller in Congress because he was to every measure of which he disapproved ruin and disaster.

"Whispering Jimmie" is the name given to General Ketcham of New York, because of his habit of whispering into everybody's ear what he has to say.

UNCONSCIOUS IRREVERANCE.

The other evening a steady, faithful old Swede who occupies a place in the packing room of Marshall Field & Co's. wholesale establishment, where he has been for years past, dropped in during a North Side stroll at a barracks of the Salvation Army. He did not quite understand the proceedings, but he enjoyed singing and he paid strict attention to what was going on. During an interval in the regular services he was approached by a uniform officer of the army, who tapped him on the shoulder and said familiarly: "My friend, would you not like to go to work for Jesus?" "Naw, I gaze nod," answered the old Swede, as he rubbed his chin; "I haf goot chob an Marshall Fielt, an' I gaze I verk fer him yet aviie."—Chicago Herald.

It is related that for generations a certain Japanese family had a box into which they put percentages. Said one of them: "If I want to buy a garment that cost $1, I buy it for 80 cents; or give a feast that would cost $5, I give it for $4, or to build a house for $100, I build it for $80; and put the balance in the box. At the end of the year we meet, open the boxes, and give the contents to the poor. It costs us some self-denial, but we are always prosperous and happy." They call this worshiping "The great bright God of self-restraint."

"So you have just returned from Europe?" said Mrs. De Porque to a gentleman at a reception. "Yes; I have not been home for more than two weeks." "Tell me, do you think that Prince Bismarck will come to the United States this winter?" "It is not at all likely that he will." "Oh, I'm very sorry! He would have been so useful here this season." "So useful!" "Yes; I understand that he is a great leader of the Germans over there."

Once, during the war, a day was set apart for Campmeeting John Allen to baptise a lot of soldiers. One of the officers had some doubts as to the genuineness of their conversation, and said to him, "Mr. Allen, aren't you afraid these men will not hold out?" "Hold out," said the old man, "they don't need to hold out long—they'll probably be shot in three weeks'time."—Lewiston Me. Journal.

The Thing He Smoked.

I've had
A fad
Of late in puffing at a hubble-bubble,
Chibouque, narghileh, hookah—what you will—
Inhaling smoke through perfumed water; still
I am not quite assured. I only know
That as I lie, white smoke wreaths upward curl,
I make a striking Oriental show
And deeply have impressed the hired girl.
I heard her talking with the girl next door,
Who thus a vaunting testimony bore:
"My master smokes a meerschaum pipe as brown
As coffee; 'tis the finest pipe in town!"
Then Norah, tossing back her hair unkempt,
"Meershom! Phwat's that? It's not worth while to talk
The day wid ye!

JOHN DALE'S FAILURE.

John Dale was one of the richest men in Bondburg. He was still on the sunny side of 40, but gray-haired business men and financiers consulted him upon the most important matters, and whenever it was known that John Dale was connected with any interprise the success of the project was assured.

Dale was lavish in his expenditures, and his beautiful wife did not try to restrain him. Mrs. Dale outshone the younger beauties and belles of the place, and her husband was proud of her.

In Bondburg the main staple of the talk was the Dales, their movements, their extravagance, and their good fortune. Sometimes old men shook their heads, but everything that Dale touched seemed to turn into gold. The young speculator established a bank, and built a railroad, and took hold of a dozen other enterprises. The entertainments at the Dale mansion were on a scale of magnificence never seen before in that part of the country. Among the invited guests were millionaires who travelled in special cars. It was a common thing for people to rush across the continent to see the Dales.

The final crash of 18—was a terrible disaster. It was not felt only in the great cities but in the smaller towns as well. In Bondburg the oldest business houses went to the wall.

When a man is in trouble he finds out his real friends and enemies. The panic struck John Dale at a bad time. At first he was confident that he would come out all right. He borrowed right and left and made a brave effort to push his way through. He even called on Steele, but the old usurer told him that a loan was out of the question.

One day it was whispered that Dale would have to go under, and that he would be left several hundred thousand dollars in debt. That night there was a reception at his house, and many of the guests went simply out of curiosity. They wanted to see how the great speculator would look on the eve of his failure. If these people expected to see a crushed man they were disappointed. The entertainment was the most delightful of the season. Dale's bright and handsome face showed not the slightest trace of care, and his wife was in her most charming mood.

"They are frivolous people," said one of the guests to old Steele early the next morning. "I gave Dale credit for being a thougtful man, but he and his wife seem to be light-minded to appreciate the gravity of the situation."

"They will appreciate it to-day," said Steele grimly. "I have got hold of a lot of Dale's paper, and I am going to close down. You will see my lord and my lady come to grief."

The news of Dale's failure created quite a sensation, but scores of business men remarked that they were not at all surprised and that they had been looking for it all along.

"And they will have nothing left," said a merchant to Mr. Steele, "not a cent, will he?"

"No," replied Steele, "he will be worse off than a beggar, because he will be head over heels in debt. There will be a meeting of the principal creditors to-morrow, and the result may land Dale in the penitentiary."

"It will be a terrible blow to Mrs. Dale," said a leading society lady, "and it may kill ker."

This was the general run of the talk about the failure. Very little sympathy was expressed. In hard times sympathy is a very scarce commodity.

On the same morning John Dale took his wife into the library after breakfast, and told her all. Mrs. Dale was silent for a moment. Then she put her arms around her husband's neck and kissed him.

"At least we love each other," she said.

"But," exclaimed Dale, in some amazement, "you do not understand. We must give up our house. There will be nothing left. My creditors may pursue me all my life, and there is nothing but poverty before me."

Mrs. Dale gave him another kiss. "Do you think I care?" she said.

"My dear," said Dale, and his voice trembled, "I must tell you the worst. My success made me reckless, and if some of my creditors push me to the last extreme they will be able to send me to prison, although I had no criminal intention in my transactions with them."

"No matter what befalls you," said the beautiful woman by his side, "I will stand by you, and suffer with you, and will wait for better days."

Then, for the first time, John Dale shed a few tears. Later in the day he went to his office and devoted his attention to his business affairs.

"You will see him beg for mercy," said old Steele to the meeting of the creditors. "I know these extravagant spendthrifts. Dale will come here and cry and plead. You must be firm with him."

Just then the object of his talk entered the room.

"Hello, Steele," he said, with his customary carelessness. "Well, gentlemen, here we are. Now let us see what can be done about this matter."

Old Steele glared at Dale, and the others looked at him in astonishment. Dale did not look like a man who had been crushed by some great misfortune. He looked younger, brighter and handsomer than ever and there was a ring of triumph in his tones.

"Curse that fellow!" said old Steele, "I wonder what is up now."

"Gentlemen," said Dale, "before proceeding to business I desire to say a few words."

Instantly there was a dead silence in the room. Dale then made a calm, straightfoward statement concerning his various enterprises, and wound up with the admission that his liabilities greatly exceeded his assets. Then he told them of his interview with his wife.

"You will now understand," he concluded, "that this is no great misfortune, after all. If my wife is satisfied to share my poverty, I am the happiest man on earth."

Dale looked around upon the group in such a frank and manly way that all were favorably impressed.

When the creditors consulted together in private, Steele was the only man who held out against a compromise. Then the others withdrew, and in a short time returned.

"It is all right," said the leader to Steele. "We will settle your claims and give Dale another chance. He is a good fellow, and he shan't be sacrificed."

"Well, if you will be fools," snarled Steele, "I have no objections."

John Dale did not have to give up his house, and there was no talk of a criminal prosecution. His manly way of meeting his difficulties, and the devotion of his wife, rallied a band of strong friends around him, and in the course of a few days he was on his feet again.

Perhaps the Dales profited by their experience during the panic. At all events they did not rush headlong into a career of extravagance. They modified their style of living, and in the course of a few years they had the satisfaction of knowing that they were out of debt and again on the high road to fortune.

And yet it might have been very different. John Dale said one day to his wife:—

"When I told you of my failure if you had broken down under the news it was my intention to go to my room and blow my brains out."

"Why, John!" exclaimed the little woman, "how could I have given you any other answer?"

And then Dale hugged and kissed her.—Atlanta Constitution.

HOW TO ESCAPE NERVOUSNESS.

The whole hygiene of the subject is embraced in the sentence: Strengthen the nervous system. How is this to be done?

1st. The first prescription is an ample supply of pure, fresh and cool air. The nerves will always be weak if the greater part of the day and night be passed in close, ill-ventilated, overheated apartments. The nerves, more than the rest of the body, to be properly nourished, require a full supply of oxygen. They will not endure a vitiated air, whether the impurities come from sewers, gas-lights, subterranean furnaces, or the individual's own person, without making an energetic protest.

2d. Eat plenty of well-cooked and nourishing food. The nerves cannot be kept healthy on slops. Gruels, panadas and teas are well enough in their way, but the nerves require for their proper nourishment undiluted animal and vegetable food; as a rule, the former should predominate. Meat-eaters are rarely troubled with nervousness. Americans eat more vegetables than any other well-to-do people, and they are probably the most nervous nation on the face of the earth.

3d. Take sufficient physical exercise in the open air. When you feel irritable, tremulous, fretful, fidgety, and unable to concentrate your thoughts on the veriest trifle, take a long walk, or split half a cord of wood. Even the extreme nervousness of lunatics is best quieted by bodily labor. The homicidal maniac who cannot, if kept in his cell, be trusted with a bodkin, may safely be given a spade, pickaxe or hoe, and set to work in the garden. His irritability is quietly led off into another and a safer channel, and his nerves are strengthened.

These are the principal rules. If they were faithfully followed, there would be less work for us doctors to do.—Dr. William A. Hammond in Our Continent.

AMERICAN HUSBANDS.

Some time ago a well-known man of letters wrote in these pages to vindicate the superiority of American manners. He said that Americans are more polite than Englishmen, which we believe to be true, especially where the women are concerned. See the testimony of "A Yankee Matron" in the Daily Telegraph:—

"My husband, like many other Americans, does not outgrow the little thoughtful attentions which he paid me before our marriage. There are so many little things which go a long way toward making a woman's life happy; they cost nothing, and yet they make such a difference. For example, the morning and evening kiss; the word of praise, of sympathy, or of appreciation; the tap at the chamber door before entering; the helping hand in getting in or out of a carriage, omnibus or train—these things are accepted as a matter of course by thousands of American wives; and it is only when they go abroad that they are struck with the contrast, especially on the continent, where they hear on all sides, 'How the Americans do spoil their wives!' Englishmen have a habit of treating their wives much as they might treat their younger brothers or college chums. But there is something to be said for the American theory that equality of the sexes ought not to go quite so far as that."—St. James Gazette.

The people of Great Britain are growing more temperate. In the last ten years the annual revenue from the consumption of spirits has declined from £21,102,611 to less than £18,000,000. The consumption of tea, on the other hand, grows steadily. In this later article the imports from India and Ceylon are increasing, while the trade with China is falling off. From the last named country the receipts last year were 117,000,000 pounds against 145,000,00 in the previous year; and from India 84,000,000, against 73,000,000; the superior strength of the Indian teas accounting for their popularity. The consumption of coffee is decreasing.

WELL, WHY IS IT?

Why is a cat's tail like the earth? It is fur to the end.

What kin is the door-mat to the door? A step father.

What is a waist of time? The middle of an hour-glass.

Why is a doctor never seasick? He is used to see sickness.

Why does an old maid wear mittens? To keep off the chaps.

Why is a door in a potential mood? It's wood, or should be.

What is the board of education? The schoolmaster's shingle.

What sticketh closer than a brother? A postage stamp, by gum.

Why is a tin can tied to a dog's tail like death? Its bound to occur.

Why does a sailor know there's a man in the moon? He has been to sea.

Why is the north pole like an illicit whisky manufactory? It is a secret still.

What is it that will give a cold, cure a cold, and pay the doctor's bill. A draught.

What does a man take when he has a mean wife? He takes an elixir (he licks her).

Why is it easy to get in an old man's house? Because his gait is broken and his locks are few.

Why is a man who makes pens very wicked? He makes people steel pens and says the do write.

What is the difference between a city official and a church bell? One steals from the people and the other peals from the steeple.

Why is it dangerous to go out in spring? Because the trees shoot, the flowers have pistils, and the bullrush is out.

What is the difference between a dog's tail and a rich man? One keeps a-wagging and the other keeps a carriage.

What is the difference between an engineer and a school-teacher? One trains the mind and the other minds the train.

What is the difference between a soldier and a pretty woman? One faces the powder and the other powders the face.

Why is a sheet of writing paper like a lazy dog? A sheet of writing paper is an ink-lined plain, and an incline plane is a slope up.

What is the difference between an apple and a pretty girl? One you squeeze to get cider and the other you get 'side her to squeeze.

What is the difference between a fog and a fallen star? One's mist on earth and the other is missed in heaven.

Why is a man called honorable who is upstairs beating his wife? He is above, doing a mean act.

What are the great astronomers? The stars, because they have studded the heavens for ages.

If thirty-two is the freezing point, what is the squeezing point? Two in the shade.

What is better than God, worse than the devil, the dead eat it and if the living ate it, they would die? Nothing.

What is thieving in the outskirts? Picking ladies' pockets.

In what place did the cock crow when all the world heard him? In Noah's Ark.

When does the rain become to familiar to a lady? When it begins to pat her (patter) on the back.

Why may carpenters reasonably believe there is no such thing as stone? Because they never saw it.

Who are the best men to send to war? Lawyers, because their charges are so great no one can stand them.

Why is Satan always a gentleman? Because, being the imp of darkness, he can never be imp-o'-light.

If a church be on fire, why has the organ the smallest chance of escape? Because the engine cannot play on it.

Why are the makers of the Armstrong guns the greatest thieves in Her Majesty's service? Because they rifle all the guns, forge the materials and steel all the gun breeches.

Why was Goliah surprised when he was struck by a stone? Because such a thing never entered his head before.

What color is a field of grass when covered with snow? Invisible green.

What length should a lady's dress be? A little above two feet.

If you had to swallow a man, what kind would you prefer? A little London porter.

Why is a solar eclipse like a mother beating her boy? Because it is a-hiding of the son.

What relation is a loaf of bread to a steam engine? Mother,—because a loaf of bread is a necessity; a steam engine an invention, and necessity the mother of invention.

WHAT THE GOOSE BONE SAYS.

The foreshadowing of the approaching winter, as it is read from the dots and the line on the goose bone, is not a cheerful story. There will be more cold and wet weather than the people of this latitude have experienced for many a year, and the cold spells will be longer and more severe than usual. The bone is dark at both ends, which indicates a long winter. Winter weather we shall have in abundence, and the ice and snow will be familiar sights far along in March. The goose from whose bone this study was taken was hatched in April and killed after the ides of September. The bone is wonderfully marked; the dots, and breves, and lines mingle all along the keel, thus indicating very changeable weather; but the breves mostly turn down and are heavy, showing that the general character of the winter will be falling, cold weather.

The inquisitive traveler had sat alongside his one-legged victim till everybody had turned in, and still plied him with questions, till he wished he had died at amputation.

"How did you lose your leg?" he asked, as a clincher.

"Well, I'll tell you if you promise not to ask any more questions."

"All right; I won't.

"It was bit off."

"Good-night; am going to bed; but I'd like mighty well to know what bit it off."—Chicago Times.

THE SPRINGFIELD REPUBLICAN

THE LEADING JOURNAL OF NEW ENGLAND.

Established in 1824 by Samuel Bowles.

LATELY ENLARGED AND IMPROVED.

The year 1888 has marked notable events in the history of The Springfield Republican. A new building admirably arranged for the large and growing business of the paper has been erected and occupied. It stands on one of the most desirable corners in Springfield and is the property of The Republican Company. The paper has also been enlarged by the addition of eight columns to its quarto sheet, making the regular size 56 columns. These improvements afford The Republican better facilities than it has ever before possessed for the performance of the work of a great modern newspaper and the fulfilment of its duties to the age and intelligent constituency whom it serves.

The Republican considers it to be the first office of a newspaper to print the news fairly, fully, intelligently and without prejudice. This it undertakes to do every day in the year, giving special attention and extended space to the local news of Western Massachusetts, Northern Connecticut and Southern Vermont and New Hampshire. Its organization of reporters an correspondents for collecting the news in the territory described is wonderfully complete, and the thoroughness and promptness of its service is unrivaled. In Boston and Washington The Republican employs trained journalists as its regular correspondents to supplement the news of the Associated Press, and in New York, Albany and other important centers it commands the aid of well-equipped special correspondents whenever occasion demands.

In the treatment of political and social questions, The Republican is thoroughly independent. It stands up always for the real interest of the people as against monopoly, corruption, coercion, deception and every form of demagogism. It counts the wellfare of the country as of more consequence every time than the success of any party. It seeks to be broad-minded, generous, fair and good tempered in its discussions of public affairs, and to represent always the true and pure American spirit. The Republican devotes liberal attention to literature, to science, to education, to all social and economical questions. Besides giving its readers "All the news and the truth about it," this paper offers them daily an abundance of miscellaneous reading, instructive, entertaining and interesting.

THE SUNDAY REPUBLICAN

Is prepared with special pains to meet the needs and taste of the New England public. It presents the news, local and general, in readable and attractive form. It always contains a pleasing original story or sketch, a good sermon, a department for children, the latest news from the theaters and of outdoor sports, a literary column, interesting home and foreign correspondence, a full editorial page covering a wide range of live topics, local sketches, original poetry, etc. It is a wholesome, newsy and interesting journal well suited to the day of rest.

THE WEEKLY REPUBLICAN.

Has often been called the best review of American life anywhere published. It is carefully edited and gives all the important news and discussion of the week in compact and well-arranged order. It contains also several pages of general reading, embracing the best stories, correspondence, sketches and special articles that have appeared in the Daily and Sunday editions. The recent increase by eight columns of its size, allows the addition of much valuable and entertaining matter and makes The Weekly Republican more than ever a model family journal.

AS AN ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

The Republican is unrivaled in its field. Its circulation is by far the largest of any daily in New England out of Boston, with the exception of an evening paper in Rhode Island, and it is read by all classes.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

The Daily Republican is sold for $8 a year, $2 a quarter, 70 cents a month, 3 cents a copy.

The Sunday Republican is $2 a year, 50 cents a quarter. 5 cents a copy.

The Weekly Republican is $1 a year, 60 cents for six months; 10 cents a month for trial subscriptions; 3 cents a copy.

New subscriptions to The Weekly Republican for 1889 may begin at once and continue to January 1, 1890.
